What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

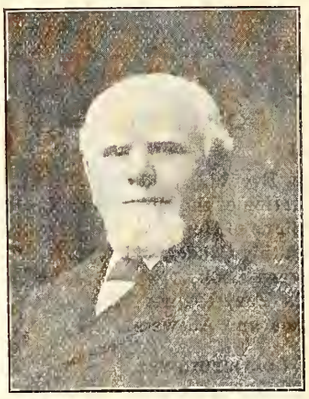
REFORMATION OF THE 19TH CENTURY

OR

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

A SERIES OF

HISTORICAL ARTICLES



TO RUN THROUGH

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

DURING THE YEAR 1899

PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

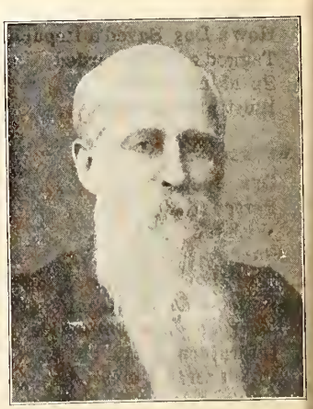
DR. B. B. TYLER.

I. INTRODUCTORY PERIOD—1809 TO 1849.
This will include those stirring events which occurred in the formative period of our reformatory movement with which the present generation should be thoroughly familiar.
BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

II. FROM THE ORGANIZATION OF THE CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY TO THE OUTBREAK OF THE CIVIL WAR—1849 TO 1861.
This period of our history, embracing the first decade of operations under the American Christian Missionary Society, with Jerusalem and Jamaica missions, will be full of interest to readers of to-day.
BY DR. B. B. TYLER,
Contributing Editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

III. THE WAR PERIOD, FROM THE FIRING ON SUMPTER UP TO THE DEATH OF MR. CAMPBELL—1861 TO 1866.
This is a turbulent period in our country's history, and one that tried most severely the principle we had adopted, of unity in Christ, in spite of differences of opinion. It ends with the death of Mr. Campbell, an event which opponents of the Reformation thought would practically end the movement.
BY DR. W. T. MOORE,
Dean of the Missouri Bible College, Columbia.

IV. THE PERIOD BETWEEN THE DEATH OF MR. CAMPBELL AND THE ORGANIZATION OF THE FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY—1866 TO 1875.
This period covers one of those turning-points in our history in which our whole future was involved. The conflict between Christian liberty and strict constructionism, and the conception and trial of the "Louisville Plan" of mission work, enter into this part of our history.
BY T. W. GRAFTON,
Pastor Christian Church, Rock Island, Ill.



V. THE PERIOD FROM 1875 TO THE CLOSE OF 1899.
1. AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY. B. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec. A. C. M. S.
2. FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY. A. MCLEAN, Cor. Sec. F. C. M. S.
3. CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS, Miss Lois White, Cor Sec. C. W. B. M.

A. MCLEAN.

B. L. SMITH.

DR. W. T. MOORE.

The closing period in our analysis is the period of expansion. Liberty has triumphed in its contest with legalism, and it manifests its power in the formation of new organizations through which to carry on a more aggressive work. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society came to birth, and the old Mother Society through their aid, soon comes to the consciousness of its own mission. The history of these societies will be given by their respective corresponding secretaries.

The whole series will be under the editorial supervision of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Series begins in the issue of Jan. 12th. Subscribe at once and secure the entire series.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A few days ago there was every prospect that the transfer of sovereignty in Cuba would not be accomplished without serious friction between the Cubans and the American authorities. The Cuban soldiers were dissatisfied because Gen. Brooke refused to allow them to participate in the exercises of the day as official representatives of the Cuban Republic, a thing which he obviously could not permit, since, in the eyes of the United States Government, there is as yet no Cuban Republic. But a far more serious and widespread discontent was aroused by the prohibition of the six days' carnival with which the Cuban populace proposed to celebrate their emancipation. In consideration of the imperfect organization of the police force, it seemed almost certain that the tremendous enthusiasm of the Cubans over their long-sought liberty would lead to serious collisions with the Spanish soldiers who remain in the island. On the one hand, the Cubans are determined to celebrate, and, what is more, have a perfect right to celebrate; on the other, it is of the first importance that at this critical time they shall give evidence to the world that they are a people capable of maintaining order and exercising self-restraint.

The solution of the difficulty was found in the suggestion that the six days' festival be postponed until the evacuation of the island by the Spanish troops has been completed. This is sensible. In a few weeks the last of the Spanish soldiers will have sailed, and the American administration will have had time to get the situation well in hand. Then the Cubans can pour forth their patriotic souls in any kind of carnival which they can invent, with no great danger to the public peace. Besides, that time will be at least equally appropriate for the jubilee, for it is not the advent of the Americans, but the departure of the Spaniards, which the Cubans want to celebrate. The Cuban Patriotic Committee at Havana has had the good sense to see the force of the objection to an immediate demonstration, and the necessity for orderly behavior on the part of the Cubans, and has promised to do its best to make the populace see it in the same light. A partial arrangement has been made that Feb. 24 shall be the day for the beginning of the Cuban celebration, and upon this day the insurgent army is to be formally disbanded.

The news of the week from the Philippines is the fall of Iloilo, capital of the island of Panay and next to Havana the most important seaport of the group. For months the insurgents have besieged the Spanish garrison in this city. Recently Gen. Otis sent an expedition from Manila, under Gen. Miller to take the city. Before the American expedition arrived, the Spanish troops withdrew and the city was occupied by the insurgents. Gen. Miller's orders are to take the city; the insurgents are not likely to submit meekly to the surrender of their prey. There are all the elements here for a first-class disturbance between Filipinos and Americans unless great precaution is exercised. The armed insurgents in the field far outnumber the American forces and a collision would be a serious matter. The worst effect of it would be that it would render the natives suspicious of every movement of the Americans. The outcome at Iloilo is awaited with anxiety.

With a view to conciliating the Filipinos and assuring them of our regard for their welfare, the President has cabled to Gen. Otis for promulgation a proclamation stating the methods to be pursued in governing the Philippines. Home rule is promised in the fullest possible form. As in Cuba, so here, natives will be eligible to official positions and every effort will be made to prevent our colonial government from degenerating into a carpet-bagging system. Gen. Lawton, who made an enviable record for himself in Cuba, has been appointed to succeed Gen. Otis in command of the U. S. troops in the Philippines, and is to start at once for his new field. General Otis is to be promoted to the position of Military Governor of the islands as soon as the ratification of the treaty makes such a position possible.

The discussion of the quality of the canned beef furnished to the troops in Cuba and Porto Rico, which began as a mere incident in the course of Gen. Miles' testimony before the Board of Inquiry, has now developed into a dispute of such magnitude as to demand an independent investigation by a separate board. Meanwhile, other testimony has been coming in from officers who had occasion to use the canned fresh beef and refrigerated beef in their commands. Gen. Miles has submitted a synopsis of the reports of officers to him on this point and their general tenor is that much of the beef furnished was "of inferior quality," "anything but palatable," "utterly unfit as an article of diet for either sick or well," "not nutritious," "repulsive in appearance, taste and odor," "disgusting," "putrid," "slimy-looking mass." If the meat was all right, there are an extraordinary number of colonels and majors who are the victims of a singular delusion. Gen. Eagan turned the case over to the special board of inquiry with great confidence, apparently, that the commissary department would be vindicated. The board will probably arrive at the facts in the case.

If one were to make a list of five of the most important events of the year that has just closed, perhaps no improvement could be made on that given in the Missionary Review. (1) The Spanish-American war, which has freed millions of people from an oppressive government, contributed to the complete reunion of our own country and brought the United States into a place of prominence among the world-powers. (2) The Anglo-American friendship, an outgrowth of America's entrance into the field of world-politics and the harbinger of a new movement for the spread of Anglo-Saxon civilization over the earth. (3) The Czar's Peace Proposal, a proposition for the disarmament of Europe, made in good faith by the ruler of the nation upon which the burden of militarism weighs most heavily. (4) The opening of the Sudan to the influences of civilization by the victory of Gen. Kitchener over the Dervishes. (5) The beginning of the dismemberment of China on a large scale—a conservative reaction of the native government, accompanied by such an influx of the occidental powers as will compel the native government either to advance or cease to be.

Senator Morrill, of Vermont, died Wednesday, December 28, of grip, at the age of nearly 89 years. He was the senior member of the United States Senate in both age and length of service. As representative and senator he served his state in Congress for forty-four years, and was, at the time of his death, the only member of Congress who had served continuously since before the Civil War. After having served six terms in the House of Representatives he was chosen Senator, and his present term, his sixth in the Senate, would not have expired until 1903. Senator Morrill was never considered a brilliant statesman, nor ranked among the conspicuously able members of Congress, but he was a practical, quiet man, who did his work in a business-like way, and by level-headed and convincing arguments in the committee rooms, rather than by eloquence on the floor of the Senate, carried to a successful issue most of the measures to which he put his hand. It was he who fathered the scheme of building the new Congressional Library, and, having accomplished that after patient and unwearied effort, he was busying himself with a plan for the erection of a building for the Supreme Court. He had secured the passage of a bill to this effect through the Senate, and it is now awaiting the action of the House.

The relations of mutual hostility between the Boers and Uitlanders in the Transvaall give promise of an outbreak unless there is a speedy redress of grievances. The same injustice and oppression which formed the motive for the Jameson Raid may become the impulse to another movement, which Great Britain will approve and aid, and which will not be marked by the farcical end which characterized that ill-omened expedition. The Uitlanders, or British inhabitants of the Transvaal, who pay most of the taxes of that so-called republic, and furnish most of the capital for the development of its resources, but do not enjoy even such a primary political right as immunity from arbitrary arrest, have sent to the Queen a petition setting forth their grievances and asking for assistance. If the British Colonial Secretary is looking for a chance to define publicly the scope of the suzerainty which Great Britain claims to exercise in South Africa, he will never find a better opportunity than the present. The Uitlanders are far from being in a position to right their own wrongs, but they have friends, while the Boers, by a persistent policy of foolish insolence and arrogance, have estranged the few allies which they had.

During the past week negotiations have been carried on between Lord Salisbury and the French ambassador at London, M. Cambon, looking to the appointment of a joint commission to settle the questions now at issue between Great Britain and France. Those so far taken into consideration are the relations of French and British sovereignty in Newfoundland and the limits of their respective spheres of influence in Central Africa. The difficulty, from the French point of view is that Lord Salisbury demands too much and concedes to little. In his proposal for a joint commission to arrange the compromise he virtually dictates the conclusions which the commission must reach. It will be far better if these disputed matters of boundary and privilege can be settled now, calmly and deliberately, without waiting for a concrete case to arise again, such as the Fashoda incident, to arouse passion and stubbornness on both sides. The present indications, however, are that the negotiations will fail in the preliminary stage on account of the unwillingness of France to agree to the points which Lord Salisbury lays down as beyond controversy.

Another French revolution is at hand, if we can trust the judgment of Henry Norman, an American newspaper correspondent in Paris. Mr. Norman certainly does not belong to the class of "irresponsible journalists," and he stakes his reputation upon the assertion that revolution is probable and imminent. He announces it as a fact of which he is absolutely certain, that the French military leaders have determined that Dreyfus shall never return to France and that they stand ready to uphold the honor of the army by a military coup d'etat, the central feature of which shall be the placing of Prince Victor Napoleon on the throne of France. From this there are but two possible ways of escape: first, for the civil power to give a public alarm and make a possibly successful appeal to the rank and file of the army before the military leaders can do so; or, second, for the Court of Cassation to reaffirm the judgment of court-martial against Dreyfus in spite of the evidence of his innocence, thus clearing the army of the suspicion which now attaches to it and perverting justice for the sake of the immediate safety of the government. It need scarcely be said that such iniquitous course as the latter would be an evidence of national decay and could not long postpone the collapse.

The year 1898 was a good one for the rich. There has been a remarkable increase in the value of stocks and bonds, which has meant the addition of millions to the fortunes of some of the largest holders. Estimates of the resources of multimillionaires are generally inaccurate and frequently highly exaggerated, but the figures are interesting, nevertheless. According to one set of statistics, there are forty-nine American capitalists whose individual wealth was increased by a million or more during the year; a dozen who gained ten millions or more; and one, John D. Rockefeller, who is credited with being richer by the tidy sum of thirty millions this New Year's day than he was last. If Thomas A. Edison has gained the even million which is put to his credit—and we hope he has—it is a safe guess that he has come nearer to rendering to the community a full equivalent for his gains than has any other member of the opulent forty-nine.

REFORMATION OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

In the next issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we begin the series of historical articles relating to our Reformatory Movement from its inception to the present time. The first period, so full of interest to the present generation, will be treated by Prof. Charles Louis Loos, of Kentucky University. The first article, already received, and which will be published next week, treats of the subject of Mr. Campbell's connection with the Baptists in a very able and interesting manner. The article is of great historical value, and no doubt all the others will be, for these men have been gathering their material and making preparation to do work of permanent value. We again call upon all our readers to do us and their friends and the cause the favor of calling attention to this historical series, which is to run, probably, through the entire volume of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of 1899. The time is opportune for a fresh treatment of these historical questions, and for a fresh study on the part of the present generation of the great events and the great men connected with the earlier days of our movement. The men who have been selected to treat the various periods into which the Nine Decades have been divided are thoroughly competent and will not fail to give us valuable historical material, and to present it in a way that will be both interesting and profitable. See our illustrated advertisement elsewhere. As it is desirable that readers should begin with the beginning of this series of articles, we hope our friends will be prompt in mentioning the matter to those whom they feel will be interested in it.

SOME SIGNS OF HOPE.

As we face the new year with its unknown contents it might be well to look about us for signs of hope to cheer the hearts of the world's weary toilers, who are striving to bring in the golden age to be. Any one can see obstacles, wrongs, moral delinquences and causes for discouragement, but blessed is the man who, by the power of faith, is able to discern some patches of blue in the overcast sky, and streaks of sunlight resting upon distant mountain tops.

Recent events among the governments of the earth have a deep significance in their bearing on the world's progress. The opening up of Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippine and Caroline Islands, to religious liberty and to the gospel, through the agency of the United States, and the opening up of the Soudan, containing about the same number of people, to the blessings of civil and religious liberty, through the agency of Great Britain, are facts which no man of faith can contemplate without being thrilled with the mighty possibilities which they contain. He must be blind, indeed, who cannot see the hand of God in these great national movements. This spread of Anglo-Saxon civilization—its laws, its language, its institutions, its religious freedom, its spirit of progress—means much for the future of the race.

There be those, however, who see only the disturbance, the expense, the additional responsibility involved in these events, and are displeased with them. They would prefer developing our national wealth, attending to our own affairs and allowing these subject races to do the best they can. They see specters of "imperialism" which loom up in their imaginations to the dimensions of giants, if we reach out a helping hand to these struggling nationalities and peoples to help them into a larger measure of light and of self-government. These same timid souls see danger in cultivating friendly relations with Great Britain to the end that the two countries may bring their united influence to bear in promoting the world's peace and progress. Nothing more hopeful, from the point of view of the well-being of the human race and the advancement of the kingdom of God, has occurred within the last half century than the bringing about of a better understanding and a closer unity between these two nations.

Second only to this is the obliteration of sectional lines in our own country. This is one of the most blessed results of the war with Spain. We once more have a united country. This fact can hardly fail to hasten the union of those churches which have been geographically divided by Mason and Dixon's line. A "North" and "South" church now is so glaring an anachronism that the church that keeps up this sectional division is likely to suffer the consequences.

The Congress of Reform movements recently held in Washington, D. C., indicates a tendency toward concerted action in pushing forward the moral, social and political reforms of the time. There are more people who recognize the need of these reforms than in any previous age of the world. They are coming, too, to recognize the necessity of co-operative effort in order to success. The powers of evil are allied; so must the forces of righteousness be. Then the issue will not be doubtful.

This growing sentiment in favor of unity is one of the marked features of the closing years of the 19th century. It is manifesting itself everywhere. Religious bodies are laying less emphasis upon the things that divide, and more upon the things that unite. Christian federation, as the first practical step toward Christian union, cannot be far off. Indeed, to a limited extent, it is already being realized. But it is capable of much greater development. In some way the church must arrange to bring its united influence to bear in accomplishing certain great reforms that demand our assistance, and in overthrowing those evils which obstruct the progress of the kingdom.

Limiting our vision to our own religious movement, there are signs of real progress that may well encourage our hearts. Not in numbers only, nor yet in wealth and greater completeness of organization, but in missionary zeal, in a wider outlook on the needs of the world, in educational progress, in the hunger after a deeper spiritual life, and in a holy enthusiasm that all who love Christ may be united for the overthrow of Satan's kingdom, do we see the signs of hope and the harbingers of victory.

Encouraged by these signs, we face the New Year hopefully, and shall do what in us lies to make it a year of advance and of victory.

THE MONTHLY CONCERT OF PRAYER.

The Chattanooga Convention recommended that one prayer-meeting in each month should be devoted to the cause of missions. This recommendation is in harmony with the teaching and practice of Jesus. Before he sent out missionaries the first time "he went out into the mountain to pray; and he continued all night in prayer to God." He would have his disciples unite with him in this exercise. He taught them to "pray the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest." This was apparently because the harvest was plenteous and the laborers were few. After the victorious Christ had commanded his elect ambassadors to go into all the world and "make disciples of all the nations," he placed a temporary embargo on them. He said: "But tarry ye in the city until ye be clothed with power from on high." They tarried in Jerusalem on their knees. It was thus that the ever-memorable Pentecost was ushered in. The Pentecostal experience was born in a prayer-meeting—a protracted, union prayer-meeting! But this was the beginning of the world's evangelization in obedience to our Lord's command. Prayer and preaching went hand in hand in that beginning time. When a difficulty arose in the Jerusalem church, because the Grecian Jews thought that their widows were neglected in the daily ministration, the apostles suggested to their brethren to look out "seven men of good report, full of the Holy Spirit and of wisdom," who should be appointed over "this business;" "but," said they, "we will continue steadfastly in prayer and in the ministry of the Word." In Samaria there was prayer as well as preaching. When Ananias the devout came to Saul the sinner he prayed as well as imparted instruction to the weeping inquirer. It was when Peter was praying on the housetop in Joppa that the divine call came to him requiring him to go to Cæsarea and open "the door of faith" to the Gentiles. Antioch was the first center of foreign missionary effort. As the brethren were engaged in prayer the Holy Spfrit said: "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." "Then when they had fasted and prayed and laid their hands on them, they sent them away." This was the formal inauguration of the Foreign Mission work. Paul and his companions constantly looked to God for guidance in their great work. Thus it ought to be now. If there is any place in which the injunction to "pray without ceasing" is especially applicable it is in connection with the work of world-wide evangelization. This is God's work. His Son was the first foreign missionary. The Holy Spirit formally inaugurated the work after the organization of the church—formally inaugurated the work in the city of Antioch.

The missionaries desired the prayers of their brethren. When Paul wished to go to Rome he prayed. He requested the saints in Rome to unite with him in prayer in regard to this matter. "Now I beseech you, brethren," he said, "by our Lord Jesus Christ, and by the love of the Spirit, that ye strive together with me, that I may be delivered from them that are disobedient in Judea, and that my ministration which I have for Jerusalem may be acceptable to the saints; THAT I MAY COME UNTO YOU in joy through the will of God and together with you find rest." To the disciples of Tessalonica he said: "Pray for us, that the Word of the Lord may run and be glorified, even as also it is with you; and that we may be delivered from unreasonable and evil men." He was in Corinth when he made this request. The history written by Luke and Paul's epistles to the Corinthians contain intimations concerning the nature of his experiences in the capital of Achaia Out of these experiences came this earnest appeal for the prayers of his brethren in Thessalonica. Think you that our missionaries in heathen lands have not similar experiences and do not need the prayers of their brethren in the home land? "The Week of Prayer" came as the result of an appeal sent out by missionaries in heathen countries. To know that spiritual kinspeople are praying for them gives encouragement to the toilers in the regions beyond. Let us pray.

The Chattanooga Convention did well, then, to make this recommendation concerning a concert of prayer in behalf of our missionaries. Have you inaugurated the custom? It is not too late. Begin at once.

This does not mean that prayers will be offered only once in each month in behalf of our missions and missionaries. In every meeting for worship prayer ought to be offered for the coming of the kingdom. The meaning of this recommendation is that the burden of our prayers once a month shall be in behalf of this holy cause. Let special prayers be offered in this meeting for the extension of the kingdom, at home and in foreign lands.

This is the way in wnich to secure open doors, laborers and money.

A while ago the church fell upon its knees and prayed for doors of opportunity. Doors long closed against the light of the gospel turned on their hinges. There are open doors everywhere. The opportunities are abundant. In every land beneath the sun the message of divine love can be proclaimed. God has heard and wonderfully answered this prayer.

The church, according to the teaching of the Lord, petitioned the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into the field. This prayer has also been answered. Laborers by the thousand are waiting to be sent. Noble men and self-sacrificing women say: "Here am I; send me!" They are not sent because there is not money with which to furnish transportation and give to them material support in the field.

Especial prayer ought now to be offered for a spirit of liberality—or, better, for a sense of stewardship. The time has come when there should be faith for preaching and teaching, out of the Good Book, concerning the right use of property. Men of means should be given to understand that for the manner in which they use their wealth they must give account to God. They should be taught that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness therof, that the silver belongs to Jehovah, and the gold likewise, and that those who possess an abundance of these things hold them in trust. Every rich man is a trustee for God, whether he knows it or not. Those whose financial resourses are limited should be taught that he who is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much. This is a principle of the divine government, that "to whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required," and to whom little is given, but little shall be required. Paul says that "if the readiness is there, it is acceptable according as a man hath, not according as he hath not." In the language of Paul to Titus, "These things speak and exhort, and reprove with all authority." But with the teaching and exhortation let there be much fervent prayer. Let us pray for a spirit of liberality—for a sense of trusteeship. This is the next point to make in the evangelization of the world. The doors are open—the fields are ready for workmen—the men and women are waiting to be sent—they are well equipped for the work—money only is needed to successfully, under the blessing of God, carry on the work of world-wide evangelization. Let us pray.

Do not fail to place before the people, in this monthly concert of prayer, facts connected with the work of making disciples of all nations. The newest news—the freshest and the most surprising—to the person of average intellignce, are items concerning the success of the gospel in non-Christian lands. There are those who think—CHRISTIAN, men and women, too—that the greatest victories of the gospel were achieved in the first century of the Christian era. The stories told in "The New Acts of the Apostles" are more wonderful than are the stories in "The Acts of the Apostles" in the New Testament. Greater victories have been secured in the nineteenth century of the missionaries of the cross than were achieved in the first century. Before this statement is calld in question take time to read up on modern missions. The baptism of 2,222 in one day, in Telugu Mission, in India, was more wonderful than the baptism of 3,000 in Jerusalem on Pentecost.

To get the facts before the people in a favorable way engage in a study of missions, ancient, mediæval and modern, in this meeting. Let the leader be full of facts. He should appoint others to secure and present facts. Take a single field for an evening. The evangelization of the Sandwich Islands is a story of surpassing interest—what the natives were when the islands were discovered by Captain Cook; what they were when the missionaries went to them; how it came to pass that missionaries were sent to that port by the world; what they did; what was done to them, and the present moral and spiritual condition of the islands. Take this story for one evening. Present the facts in consecutive and clean-cut form. See if the prayer-meeting is not considered a better meeting than usual. Consider the evangelization of the City with Sea Islands. Brief biographical sketches can be used with interest and profit. The lives of Williams and Paton are suggested. The evening spent in the study of Japan will be thrillingly interesting. Among other items have some one present in ten minutes, or less, the story of Joseph Hardy Neesima. Proceed to China. Take the story of Robert Morrison, the first Protestant missionary in that far-away empire. Note what has been done, the efforts that have been made, the work now in progress and the successes attending these efforts to Christianize the Chinese. The religions of the Chinese—their names, origin, peculiarities, etc., etc., will be an interesting lesson. Enlist as great a number as possible in the collection and presentation of facts. Go around the world in this way. There is nothing in print better, as a germ, than A. McLean's "Circuit of the Globe" and his "Handbook of Missions," prepared for Societies of Christian Endeavor. It is multum in parvo. These books will excite a desire to read other similar volumes and will point the way to them. The monthly concert of prayer for missions, conducted in the manner here suggested, will be found to be the best of all the meetings for prayer and conference. Every pastor ought to preach at least once a month on the great commission—the command of Christ to preach the gospel to the whole creation. Tell the story of Paul, of Raymond Lull, of Francis Xavier, of Francis of Assisi, of Zinzendorf and the Moravians, of William Carey, of Adoniram Judson, of David Brainerd, of Henry Martyn, of Livingstone and Moffett, of Bishop Hannington—and in this way fix in the minds of the people the command of the Christ to make disciples of all the nations.

Do not fail in this monthly concert of prayer to make much of our own effort—that of the Disciples of the Christ—to do the will of the Lord in this matter. Assume that the people are not well informed on the subject and proceed to give an account of the American Christian Missionary Society, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. When? Where? Under what circumstances? For what purpose organized? What have these societies done? What are they doing? What is before them to do? How can we aid in this work? Tell of the Board of Church Extension, of the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization, of the Board of Ministerial Relief and of the Board of Education, all in connection with the American Christian Missionary Society. Fail not to speak of the organized and systematic effort to educate our young people in the principles and practices of New Testament Christianity. Seek to leave the impression that the Disciples are not a mob, but a well-disciplined army, recognizing only the authority of the Son of God. What a field this monthly concert of prayer for missions presents! My soul is on fire! How God honors us by calling us into such a service. Duty is lost sight of. It is a privilege—an unspeakably glorious privilege—to engage in this work. This is the greatest work known among men. All else is insignificant. Men throw themselves into the breaches with a heroism inspired of heaven. Harvey Biddle goes to Africa and dies before he gets to work. While our hearts are sad and our eyes are filled with tears, Royal J. Dye steps to the front and says, "Here am I; send me!" What a privilege! To some of us this is denied. Let us give thanks for those to whom the privilege is given and pray for them that they may be wise and strong and Christly in all their ways. Let us talk of them in our meetings, in one homes and by the way. Let us make their names household words. O Lord, show me how I can get money to be used in their support. Amen!

A NEW ROLL OF HONOR.

A religious magazine has called for the names of churches that contribute more for outside and general Christian causes than for current and local congregational expenses. There are in this country 165,000 churches. Many of these are immensely wealthy. This magazine proposes to put the names of all churches who give more for outside causes than they spend on themselves on a special roll of honor. Several churches have been heard from in response to this call. One church in Brooklyn reports $13.50 a member for outside causes and $7.59 for current expenses. This church has been trained to give from its foundation. For thirty-five years it has taken six collections a year for foreign and six for home missions. Some time ago it undertook to put up a new building and expended in that enterprise $60,000. This building was two years in course of erection. In those years all the collections were taken up as usual, and there was a gradual increase in the contributions for missions during that period. This church, which began in a Mission Sunday-school, has now over 900 members. The trustees hold property worth $125,000, absolutely free from debt. Giving liberally has not impoverished this church. The churches that do are not the churches that die.

Another church, in Reading, Pa., gave for outside causes last year $2,893, and for home expenses $2,849.92. This church is not large, but it is liberal. One of the strong churches in New York City gave for outside causes $59,844.05, against $24.051.76 for home expenses. Dr. A. J. Gordon's church, of Boston, has been giving more for outside causes for years than it has been giving for itself, sometimes twice as much. One church in New London, Conn., gives $1,000 more a year for missions and kindred objects than it does for current expenses. A church in Plainfield, N. J., contributed to foreign causes $20.49 a member, while the congregational expenses were at the rate of $14.83. A church in Newton, Mass., spends $12,000 on itself and gives $23,000 to benevolent objects. Its home missionary contributions alone are nearly equal to its own expenses. This church has a long and highly honorable record of benevolences.

It would be interesting to know just how many churches there are in this country who are entitled to have their names put upon this special roll of honor. Taking the churches as a whole and considering their numerical and financial strength, it is clear that the criticism of selfishness is true. One of the largest and richest religious bodies in America reports ten millions for church expenses and three millions and a half for outside causes. It would seem that the churches should average at least one dollar for missions for every dollar that they may spend upon themselves. This is the one great work of the church, its first concern, its supreme business. It is the one work that our risen Lord gave his disciples to accomplish.

Hour of Prayer.

AN INWARD LOOK.

(Psa. 139:1-13, 23, 24.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic. Jan, 11.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: God's immanence in human life and his perfect knowledge of all our thoughts, desires and purposes.

It is well at times to look backward. It is prudent, also, frequently to look forward. It is altogether right that we should look upward, but it is none the less important that we should oftentimes look inward. This inward look is necessary to enable us to take an account of our moral assets, in order that we may know ourselves approximately, at least, as God knows us. The backward look is that we may learn from the past. The forward look is that we may have some idea of what we are to meet in the future. The upward look is that we may see in God the source of our help and strength; but the inward look is that we may know the state of our own heart and our readiness for the duties and responsibilities to which we are called.

In the wonderful psalm cited above, which should be read carefully as the best preparation for this lesson, the psalmist declares of the Lord Jehovah: "Thou hast searched and known me." This knowledge of God includes the very details of our lives—our "down-sitting," our "uprising," even our thoughts, our paths, our "lying-down;" in a word, "Thou art acquainted with all my ways."

Men are restrained from wrong-doing frequently by the knowledge that others will know of the deed. Many of the sins committed in secret would be avoided if it were known that they would come to light. But according to this lesson, and according to all our conceptions of God, we know that He is perfectly cognizant of all our thoughts, purposes, ambitions and deeds. We cannot hide anything from Him. We cannot flee from the presence of God:

"If I ascend up into heaven thou art there;
If I make my bed in Sheol, behold, thou art there;
If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea,
Even there shall thy hand lead me and thy right hand uphold me."

Neither darkness nor distance prevents the all-seeing eye of God from knowing our thoughts and our deeds. If we could realize this as we know it, if we could take the fact up into our imagination as well as our faith, so that it would stand out before us continually in all its vast reality and significance, what a mighty influence for good it would have upon human life and conduct! But, alas! we forget God or presume upon His indulgence in a way wholly unauthorized by anything revealed concerning his will and character. "Thou, God, seest us," is a truth that should be burned into the memory and imagination of every accountable being.

It follows that, if God thus knows us in all the secret purposes of our lives, we ought to know ourselves and not be self-deceived. Self-knowledge is essential to that knowledge of God and of Christ Jesus which is said to be "life eternal." But we dread to turn the light inward upon our own hearts, lest we discover a condition of things not pleasant to contemplate. Men prefer darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil (Jno. 3:20). The unwillingness to look into our own secret motives and purposes and desires is a most unfavorable symptom of moral disease.

It is refreshing to hear the psalmist opening his secret soul to the searchlight of God's eye and exclaiming:

"Search me, O God, and know my heart:
Try me, and know my thoughts:
And see if there be any way of wickedness in me,
And lead me in the way everlasting."

The man who can utter that prayer sincerely has caught a vision of holiness, and sincerely desires to realize it in his life. He is on the road of spiritual progress who can utter this prayer sincerely. We can easily make it the test of our spiritual condition at this beginning of a new year. Do we honestly and earnestly invite the searching examination of God into our hearts and lives, and sincerely desire His co-operation with us in removing any "way of wickedness" that He may discover in us? Is it our supreme desire that He lead us in "the way everlasting?" Will we at once examine our own hearts in the light of God's word, and wherein we find anything contrary to God's will make an earnest effort to correct it, seeking the divine help in so doing? We put these questions in order to probe our hearts so that we may know ourselves. If we can answer them affirmatively, then we may anticipate a year of spiritual cleansing and growth and power, which shall result in the conversion of sinners and the extension of God's kingdom on earth.

PRAYER.

O, Thou great Jehovah, whose presence we cannot escape, whose all-seeing eye penetrates through all darkness and all disguises into the very secrets of all hearts, Thou knowest the imperfections of our lives, and how far short we have come to living up to the measure of our light and obligation. We confess our faults and humbly implore Thy forgiveness, for Thou knowest our frame, that we are dust. We implore Thee to assist us in putting away from us every wicked way, and even every unholy thought, and so fill us with Thy Spirit as that we may walk daily in the way everlasting. Help us to look into our own hearts more narrowly, and, discerning the evil therein, may we seek the cleansing power and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, in whose name and for whose sake we ask it. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

With this number the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST begins its 36th volume. Speaking after the manner of men, the paper has reached the stage of mature manhood, having safely passed through the perils of whooping cough, chicken-pox, croup, measles and other diseases incident to childhood. But here the parallel between the life of a paper and the life of a man ends. Man reaches the meridian of his strength, which then wanes until his active life ends on earth to be renewed in another sphere. But a paper knows nothing of the feebleness of age. Its editors may come and go, but it goes on forever. Once it has rooted itself in the confidence and affections of the people, it lives on from generation to generation as long as its fruit ministers to the hunger of the human mind and heart. We sometimes try to imagine what the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will be when it celebrates its centennial. We can scarcely doubt that it will reach that age and still be in the vigor of its youth. It will have a magnificent corps of editors and contributors, superior in every respect to what it has now, but we fancy that something of the same life and spirit which now animates the paper will animate it then, and we should like to believe that the editor-in-chief of the paper at that day will look back over the volumes of the paper which belonged to the 19th century with a feeling of sympathy with it in its struggle then to realize a higher ideal. But what if otherwise? What if in that future time the paper may be very different in its aims and objects from what it is to-day? We must trust the coming generations to see to it that this shall not be.

But we are reminded that it is our duty to deal, not with the distant future, but with the year of our Lord 1899. As we turn our faces to the new year, and assume the duties and responsibilities associated with the management of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, we feel it is due to our readers that they know how much we are indebted to them for the encouragement and inspiration which have been our support through all the weary, toiling years of the past. It does take some courage and some faith to undertake the piloting of a craft like the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST through unknown seas—and the future is always unknown to us. Who can tell what issues will arise, requiring the utmost wisdom, tact, patience, charity and courage, during the year upon which we have entered? We neither know what issues may arise, nor how many of our good friends may censure the policy we shall pursue concerning those issues. No man more highly esteems the good-will and approval of his fellowmen than we do, but the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has never been conducted with a view to courting public favor. We have steadfastly sought to be true to Christ, and pursue the course we believed He would like to have us pursue. Sometimes this has made us enemies, but oftener it has made us friends. For, after all, the great mass of our readers are loyal to Christ in their hearts and purposes, and if sometimes they have had occasion to differ from us, it has often happened that they have afterwards come to see with us and to be all the stronger friends. This is our aim for the future. We shall seek to make the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST convey those truths and give emphasis to those things which we think Jesus Christ would like to have it do. In this way only can it serve the highest interest of the cause it is seeking to promote.

But we were speaking of the help we have received from our readers and our sense of obligation to them. This help comes, sometimes in the form of brotherly criticism, advice or suggestion, and sometimes in words of encouragement and approval. There is a bond of sympathy between an editor and his readers which grows stronger with the passing years. An editor comes to live for his readers. He studies continually what things will prove helpful to them. He tries to remember the different classes of his readers and to give something for each. He knows that most of them, like himself, carry heavy burdens and need encouragement, and he seeks to make the tone of the paper optimistic, hopeful, encouraging. He tries to keep the bright side of things before his readers, because he knows that most of them see enough of the dark side. No doubt the reader, on his part, sends up a prayer for God's blessing upon the editor, that he may have wisdom and grace and patience for his arduous work. At least, we love to cherish the hope that our readers do this for us. No doubt, too, there are feelings of gratitude on their part which are often unexpressed. It must be, too, that there are times when the desire to criticise is repressed out of consideration for the editor's feelings. We feel that this must be so in our own case. And so it comes about, by this action and interaction, that a very close feeling of friendship grows up between the editor and his readers. We should not be true to our own feelings if we did not sincerely thank our readers for all their forbearance and for their kind words of appreciation and sympathy.

No one has expressed the sentiment we feel toward our readers more happily than our own American poet, Longfellow, in the following lines from his "Dedication" of "The Seaside and Fireside:"

"If any thought of mine, or sung or told,
Has ever given delight or consolation,
Ye have repaid me a thousandfold
By every friendly sign or salutation.

Thanks for the sympathies that ye have shown!
Thanks for each kindly word, each silent token,
That teaches me, when seeming most alone,
Friends are around us, though no word be spoken.

* * * * * * * * * *

Perhaps on earth I never shall behold,
With eye of sense, your outward form and semblance;
Therefore, to me ye never will grow old,
But live forever, young in my remembrance.

* * * * * * * * * *

Not chance of birth or place has made us friends,
Being oftentimes of different tongues and nations,
But the endeavor for the selfsame ends,
With the same hopes, and fears, and aspirations.

* * * * * * * * * *

Therefore I hope, as no unwelcome guest,
At your warm fireside, when the lamps are lighted,

To have my place reserved among the rest,
Nor stand as one unsought and uninvited."

So feels the "Easy Chair," which hopes to always have a place around the "warm fireside" of our readers, as an invited, welcome guest.

Questions and Answers.

Is it unscriptural to elect a sister to the office of elder? C. E. M.

Yes, if we are to be governed by scriptural precedent. The New Testament describes the kind of man who should be elected to the office of elder or bishop. While the New Testament clearly teaches that there is neither male nor female in Christ, that sexes stand upon a basis of equality as to rights and privileges in the church, it does not follow from this that there is not a wise selection to be made of different persons for different kinds of work. There are many places of usefulness and responsibility in the church which women may well be called to fill, but it would require a very radical change of present conditions before it would be advisable to elect them to the office of the eldership.

In the light of the New Testament teaching is baptism essential to the highest type of salvation? A. Dennis.

It is quite generally conceded that baptism is a requirement of Christ under the present dispensation. He commanded his disciples to "go teach all nations, baptizing them," etc. "The highest type of salvation" involves obedience to Christ in all his requirements. The "highest type" of faith raises no question as to whether obedience to any of Christ's commandments is essential to salvation, but only asks what Christ has commanded, and then promptly obeys.

1. Has the pastor of a congregation authority to act as an elder when he does not hold his membership in that church?

2. Have the elders the authority to bring charges against a member and vote him out before the person is notified of the charges. W. J. Skinner.

1. This question implies a distinction between the office of pastor and elder which the New Testament does not recognize. If the preacher acts as pastor of a congregation he is acting as elder, and if he lives in the community he should be identified with and amenable to the local church.

2. No, the elders have no authority to vote anybody out of the church. They may bring charges against an offending member and give him a fair and impartial investigation, and if they find him guilty of unchristian conduct, and are unable to bring him to confession and repentance, they may lay the matter before the congregation with their recommendation that he no longer be recognized as a member of the church, but the action of the church is necessary to give effect to the recommendation of the elders.

1. From whom did Cain and Abel get the idea of making offerings to God?

2. Why did Abel select and bring the firstlings (first born) of his flock? or why would not other of his flock do?

3 In what respect was Abel's sacrifice "more excellent than Cain's?"

4. Would not the hypothesis that there was a law given to the patriarchs, by which sacrifices and everything pertaining to them, be a safe one? C. M. Drew.

1. There is a God-implanted instinct or intuition in the human heart that leads to worship. There was probably some divine direction given to Cain and Abel as to their manner of worship.

2. If the answer to the first question be correct, the answer to the second would naturally be that Abel followed the divine direction.

3. In the respect that it was the kind of offering that was required, involving the shedding of blood with its typical significance.

4. There is no evidence of such a law given in an objective form prior to the law given on Sinai; but it is safe to infer that in every age where men have sought divine guidance with sincere hearts they have found some method by which they could approach God acceptably.

You recently urged the necessity of great prayer-meetings, this year, in order that we may realize the highest and most permanent results from our Jubilee Year. Will you tell us how we can have such prayer-meetings? A. B. C.

Let the few spiritual minded in each church, who feel the need of improving the prayer-meeting, get together, pray over the matter and plan for such improvement. These plans may differ, and perhaps should differ in different churches, but there must be a definite purpose to improve the prayer-meeting, and the leading members should go about it in a business-like way, as if it were worthy of their time and best thought. We would recommend the use of the uniform series of midweek prayer-meeting topics, arranged by the committee appointed for that purpose and used in this paper, and in most of our other papers. This will give you the benefit of the best thought on these subjects. It would be well to send to our publishing houses for a sufficient number of copies of these uniform topics to put a copy into the hands of each member of the church. These could be kept in a convenient place in the home that the members may know, each week, what the topic will be. Leaders should be appointed sufficiently far ahead to make thorough preparation. The meetings should be thoroughly devotional in character and all discussions and controversies avoided. The prayer-meeting committee of the Endeavor Society might give great assistance in securing a larger attendance at these meetings. An effort should be made to enlist as many as possible of those who attend in active participation in the meeting. It would be well for the pastor to announce the topic and leader for the prayer-meeting at the Sunday service.

The Student Department of the International Committee has decided to recommend the Universal Day of Prayer for Students—the second Sunday of February—adopted by the World's Student Christian Federation, as the regular annual day of prayer for students of the United States and Canada. This day has already been adopted by the Student Christian Movements of all other countries.

CAN I LOVE MY ENEMIES?

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

VII.

It is not the purpose of these articles to treat the subject of the love of enemies exhaustively. Such influences as the love of God, union and communion with him, the individuality of the Holy Spirit, close acquaintance with the Christian Scriptures and association with those of God's people in whom the passion of Christian love is strong—all tend to greaten us and fill us with an abounding benevolence to our kind. We cannot dwell on these subjects nor pause to consider their relation to that hardest task of the heart — the love of enemies; but there is one other condition so indispensable to the success of those already mentioned that it cannot safely be omitted from any consideration of the means by which this duty may be performed.

The parable of the talents is the express enunciation of a law of our nature. Its demand is inexorable. The talent that is hid in a napkin will be lost; the talent that is utilized will be increased. The arm that is unused will wither and grow useless; the arm that is used will grow strong. In nothing is this more emphatically true than in respect to the affections. If, under the influence of divine truth, something of the Christ-love has been quickened within us, it will be greatly enhanced by passing out into the actual blessing of others; the heart will be greatened, the realizing imagination will be quickened, and our love will take on something of that robustness which will enable it to overcome obstacles. There are a thousand subtle influences at play about such an act to strengthen and ennoble, and an indescribable sense of spiritual health fills the heart. But if there is no outgoing of our love to others, no quickening power, however great, can avail to keep it alive.

But there is another sense in which effort in behalf of others assumes an overwhelming importance. If our love be generous, self-bestowing, necessity will be upon us to do good to others; and if we feel no such impulsion, it amounts to nothing short of a revelation that the love is not Christian love at all, but a love which lies within the confines of the selfish nature. Genuine and selfish love have many things in common, and the danger of self-deception here is very great. Such a mistake, moreover, is fatal. Self-bestowment is the great test of the existence of generous affection. If there be no such desire, the affection does not exist.

The forms of this selfish emotion are very numerous. Men will flock to listen to an impassioned preacher, and weep under his appeals, or be uplifted by the power of his eloquence; and for the same reason that they visit the theater—that they may enjoy the luxury of excited emotion. There are few to whom an inspiring prayer meeting does not bring a pleasing sense of exalted feeling, but if this feeling is sought that it may be felt, it is but a refined voluptuousness. We are making sweetmeats of our emotions. If we are not moved to self-giving, self-sacrifice, these feelings belong to the sphere of selfishness; and such abortions of emotion are harmful to the spiritual nature. They wrench asunder what God has joined together—the heart and the hand. Such feelings are lacking in the generous element and by so much fall short of being Christian. It is to be feared that many look upon them as of the very essence of religion.

The reflex action of deed upon heart is far-reaching and powerful. A noble deed returns to make its way through every avenue of the soul's life, and quickens and blesses it throughout. So strong is this tendency that some have even claimed that it is only necessary to do a righteous act that the feeling proper to it may exist.

It is a common saying, that those whom men injure they hate. For a like reason those whom they bless they will learn to love.

The possible ministries of love are almost infinite. Every moment brings opportunity for its exercise, from the kindly word and the sympathetic light of the eye to the great sacrifice. It is the most royal of ministries. You walk as a prince scattering jewels. Wherever you go there is heaven. Sympathy is the sweet wine of life for which men are famishing, and the more these sweet fountains within you are spent the deeper they grow. Thrice blessed is he who has learned the secret of such a service. Opportunities for the exercise of this holy passion are wide as human life, and by it you grow glorious in heavenly ministry.

There is another condition of great importance in attaining to the love of enemies. If it be felt that the task is beyond the reach of frail human nature, and that Christ somehow could not have meant that we should really love our enemies, or that the achievement is only possible to those of exceptional endowment—no effort will be made to conquer our resentments. But if we believe the love of enemies to be possible, that it is an essential element of the Christian spirit, that it belongs to the nature of all generous love (the only love to which any reward is attached), and that Christ demands it of every disciple—we have a condition which makes powerfully toward its fulfillment.

How this can be may not at first appear. Can we command the feelings? Are they subject to the will? When we have recognized that we ought to love our enemy, has our hatred vanished? Like the sea at the feet of Canute, has not the blood rolled on heedless of our bidding? How can it help us to know that Christ says we must, or that without that love which "beareth all things" (observe that it is the love, not simply a sense of duty, that bears all things) Paul declares that our Christian character is nothing?

Is it of no avail that men are commanded to repent? And yet repentance involves a profound change of feeling. Has the burglar repented when he hears the police and runs away? Has a man repented who is bought off from doing wrong, even by such a reward as heaven? What have such things to do with breaking the love of sin? Yet let there be no command to repent, or let men believe repentance impossible, and what effect would it have on the work of converting men? Men can repent and they can love their enemies.

The sharp sword-flash of command across the sinner's path arrests him in his course, and is of infinite worth. It drives him upon other forces which slay his love of sin and redeem him to righteousness. He who realizes that he must love his enemy on forfeiture of Christ's approval will be driven in upon himself; will wrestle with God in prayer for strength; will restrain his tongue and hand from retaliation; will study his Bible that he may catch the Christ-spirit; will ask himself if there be no good in his enemy, if he has no sorrow; will see him in eternity, and reflect on his loss and his unspeakable calamity; will pause and listen at those words of the cross, "for they know not what they do," and will see the blindness of sin; will go to men of faith that he may learn from them, if possible, the secret of this loving; and at last, perchance in sheer despair, with a dead heart, will put kindness on the head of the offending one and be lifted to a higher love. In every moment of such a battle the soul is growing mighty. For every such struggle there is victory.

As there are things sometimes which stagger even a strong faith, so there may be wrongs so great that baffle even a great love. But, as to surrender the faith is to be lost, so to suffer love to be overborne is to wreck the spiritual life. A harbored hatred throws its chilling spell on all generous feeling. The little rift in the lute makes the music still. A single falsehood, harbored and persisted in, poisons the whole fountain of truth. No enemy must stop your loving, or you are lost. You must master here at whatever cost. Many such desperate battles are infinitely pathetic. They are battles for the soul, sometimes O, how terrific! They are generally known only in heaven. What histories are being written there! It is well to know that our brothers are fighting these battles, and out of awful struggle are gaining the heights. There is much of love in the world which has been wrestled for as Jacob struggled with the angel.

A Christian lady learned that another person had done her a great wrong. The wrong was so excuseless and aggravating that she was filled with bitter resentment. Weeks passed, and every thought of the wrong but increased her bitterness. She at length became aware that this feeling was poisoning her spiritual life, and she sought to banish it; but it remained like a spot upon the soul. She prayed for strength to overcome, but the unwelcome anger remained. She attended to her usual Christian duties, but a canker was eating at her heart. She felt that her pastor could not help her. Months passed, and a cloud hung between her and heaven. At last, on listening to a noted evangelist (Major Whittle, I believe), she resolved to lay her trouble before him, and seek his counsel. She did so; and through his guidance and help she was enabled to overcome her bitterness, and peace returned.

What was it not worth to that lady to know that that resentment must be conquered, and that that single hatred was blighting her whole Christian life! How many Christian lives are wrecked by such obstacles, and fall to the level of that company—all too numerous—whose love is only that of the heathen-hearted—selfish.

The love of the enemy is the one miracle of character which convinces all men of the divinity of our religion; and it is the one miracle which all Christians are empowered to work. Best of all, while it convinces, it wins. It subdues even the savage, and he is your friend forever. It tames the wicked heart, and you may lead it whither you will. It is a divine presence, going forth into the soul and quickening it. A single such triumph over some great hatred has often caused a revival in a whole community. How much such miracles are needed everywhere! Labor is turning away from the church as not its friend. This great self-bestowing, self-mastering love will win its heart. This is the secret of all success. There is no other. There may be wise expedients, but they must be expedients for the getting on of this love. It must bind the church into one; it must fuse all hatreds in its holy fires. Every church must be a heaven in the midst of the world's winter-heartedness, every Christian a torch from God. Then shall the Word of the Lord prosper in that whereunto he sent it.

The heresy that we cannot love our enemies is a cold, hard feeling for our heart's life. Let us beware! Keep your heart clean; keep it sweet; keep it warm toward all men, as you value your salvation.

COURTESY IN CONTROVERSY.

ERRETT GATES.

It has seemed to me, from observing veyr much of our newspaper controversy, that some of the Christian graces were wanting. I wondered if Christian principles of honesty, fairness and love were not applicable to that sort of intercourse between men who regard each other as Christians. From reading some insinuating criticisms by writers upon other writers one would conclude that they were very unlovely if not unchristian men. It is hard for me to understand how a man is released from ordinary courtesy toward a fellowworker the moment he turns critic in a paper. Is not kindliness of treatment as obligatory on a man in writing as in speaking? If some of our newspaper controversialists should display the irascible and pugnacious spirit in social intercourse that they display in the criticism of a brother, they would be regarded as intolerably boorish. I am convinced that many things written at a man in the papers would not be spoken to him in personal conversation. Why do men assume such a violence of spirit in the papers when they know they would blush in meeting the person afterwards. Concerning such controversialists who hide behind a sheet of paper I want to ask some questions.

1. Is it brotherly?

Does not such controversy proceed on the wrong principle? I speak now of controversy between men who regard each other as Christian brethren and would not hesitate to sit down at the Lord's Table and oommune together. You would not recognize those two men as the same persons when they become critics of each other in the papers. Is such a change of demeanor consistent? Men who are as gentle as a zephyr or as mild as a sunbeam in personal conversation become as ferocious as a wolf the moment they begin to write. When a brother is overtaken in a fault in writing, shall he be treated differently than when overtaken in a fault in conduct? "Ye which are spiritual (orthodox) restore such a one in the spirit of meekness, looking to thyself lest thou also be tempted" (mistaken). If that admonition of Paul is not good for iutellectual error, it is not good for moral error.

Some of our writing against supposed error is not done in a spirit consistent with kindness, much less meekness. A man needs to write the truth in love as well as speak the truth in love. We need to learn a lesson from "Our Fathers" in this Reformation; though they themselves were not always true to their principles. I wonder how many of us to-day would be as kind and charitable toward a "Restorationist" as the Campbells were toward Aylett Raines? How the ordinary treatment of a man from whom some of our brethren differ in opinion, is different from the treatment of heretics by the Catholics in the days of the inquisition and auto-da-fe, is hard to see. It is the same spirit, but the spirit is robbed of the mediæval instruments of torture and persecution. There are not wanting, however, means by which the errorist is made to suffer and all others made to shudder. Vitriol is injected into the morals and insinuated into the character instead of the throat and eyes, and with the evident interest and satisfaction of causing the victim uneasiness if not agony. That is thought to be one way of reclaiming him from his error and warning all others against it. The fagot is applied to his reputation rather than his body. What injury is greater, for what possession more precious to a man seeking to preach the gospel or teach the young, than an untarnished reputation? There is a glee in the manner in which a man is put on the rack, simply for a difference of opinion. This is the incredible thing about it, that a people who have learned the difference between faith and opinion should so soon forget it, or neglect to illustrate it in their conduct. Where there is a chance for difference of opinion, give the other man credit for just as much honesty of purpose or intelligence of judgment as yourself. Do not impeach his character to start with or impugn his motives. Some self-appointed defenders of the faith proceed upon the principle that the person of the errorist is as offensive as his error. Or they assume that his error must be due to some defect of character or derangement of mind, and to discover that is to refute his error. Others go upon the assumption that wisdom will die with them, or will only pass down to those whom they bless, or upon whom their intellectual mantle falls. Another familiar method of impeachment is to show that the opinion entertained was once held by a person or sect who has now become offensive.

One of the first things newspaper critics need to learn is that Christianity is good for all the relationships of life, especially the controversial relationship; and that two of the indispensable qualities of a Christian is honesty and courtesy. If some of the writers we read after were transfixing the devil on their pen instead of a Christian brother, there might then be some justification for the hysteria and frothing at the pen manifested. The names that are called, the innuendoes suggested, remind one of a daily newspaper during an election. If the person criticised were half as bad or dangerous as represented, it would lay the writer under moral obligation to disfellowship him in the church or present charges against him before a church council. Since nothing of this sort ever follows, it impresses one as an attempt to "show him up" before the brotherhood or "down him" in argument, neither of which is edifying to the public or beneficial to the reader.

2. Is it profitable?

It reduces itself usually to a passage at arms between two "valiant knights of the faith" and a test of their relative ability or scurrility. Many earnest Disciples who want to patronize our own papers are not pleased with such controversy and are ashamed to put such reading matter into the hands of friends or strangers. I want to see the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST made an ideal paper and I want to testify to its comparative freedom from questions that gender strife. Still, there is room for improvement.

THE A B C D OF A GOOD PRAYER-MEETING.

EDWARD BAGBY.

We are expecting great profit from the interchange of ideas in the department of methods in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as suggested by J. E. Lynn, of Springfield, Ill. It is to be hoped that in this new column the conduct of the prayer-meeting may receive due consideration. How to make the midweek service interesting, spiritual and helpful. For eight years at the Ninth Street Church, Washington, D. C., we have been trying to solve this problem, but find ourselves still far from the ideal. Some account of our efforts may prove suggestive and possibly provoke others to use and relate their experiences.

1. We have considered the first requisite of a good prayer-meeting the attendance of all always.

We have found that scolding the non-attendants, especially when they are not present to get the benefit of the scolding, does little good. To arrange attractive topics, have inspiring meetings and draw them as a hungry man is drawn to a well-spread table, as a cold man is to a cheerful fire is a little better plan. On Sunday we tell them what a delightful meeting we had on Wednesday, what a rich spiritual treat was missed by those who stayed away, etc. Personal letters sent through the mail, private exhortation in the homes, giving as many as possible some part in the service, keeping the matter prominently before the people, are some ways found helpful in increasing aud keeping up the attendance.

2. We endeavor to have the meetings brief and brotherly.

We keep in mind the motto: "One hour and a quarter is long enough for a good meeting and too long for a bad one." The leader sets an example of brevity and raps down the brother who talks too long. We make prominent the thought that the service is a home gathering for members of the same family, to praise God, pray and exchange views. Mention is made of the names of those who are sick and prayers offered for any in trouble. The members are encouraged to remain after the service for handshaking and social intercourse.

3. We emphasize as the main purpose of the meeting, communion and consecration.

We try not to lose sight of the fact that "Christ is in the midst." Whether there be few or many at the service, he will be there and an hour's fellowship with him will lighten the load, ease the heartaches and strengthen for the conflicts to come.

Communion with Christ leads to consecration. His purity makes us sensible of our impurity; his love constrains us to give ourselves wholly and unreservedly to him. No matter how entertaining and instructive the prayer-meeting may be, it is not a success unless it brings to those present a desire and determination to live a better life.

4. In the conduct of the meetings we try to have them diversified and delectable.

In arranging the menu we endeavor to present a variety, in running the meeting we try to keep out of ruts. As a rule we take the topic published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, have the prayer-meeting committee of C. E. Society distribute verses and clippings bearing on the topic, have a brief introductory talk by the pastor who always leads, and throw the meeting open for voluntary participation.

Frequently we use half the time in a Bible reading. Some such subject as "Angels" or "The Office and Work of the Holy Spirit" is chosen and Scripture texts are called for and read, the leader explaining and commenting upon each passage. At one service we will spend most of the time in song, at another in prayers and another in testimonies. There have been times when the pastor has consumed the whole hour, reading, for example, some booklet as A. J. Gordon's "How Christ came to Church," or a story with a moral like that of "Thanksgiving Ann." At another time (mirabile dictu!) the pastor will keep still and the members will speak to edification. One such night we broke the record and heard from 161 persons in a single meeting! We had once a delightful experience meeting, calling on those who had served Christ for fifty years or longer to testify, then those who had been 25 years or more in his service, then on down until the young converts were given a chance to tell of their "new-born joys of sins forgiven."

A service possible in cosmopolitan Washington was a state experience meeting. I announced that I would call a roll of the states and as each one's state was called he would be expected to rise and give his experience. If he did not we would take it as evidence that he was ashamed of his state. When I made that remark a young lady from Old Virginia said, "I am certainly not ashamed of my state and I can't speak in meeting. I am going home." And out she walked. Her sister did better. When Virginia was called she arose and said, "I love my native state. I cannot tell how much I love Old Virginia. But I love Christ better." No midweek services during the eight years of our history have been more enjoyable than the evenings with the hymn writers. "An evening with Frances R. Havergal," "An evening with Fanny Crosby," "An evening with Alice and Phœbe Carey," singing their hymns, quoting their verses and discussing their characters are among "the beautiful pictures that hang on memory's walls."

A profitable meeting is one conducted after this plan: The leader says, "Now I will give you the subject, but you must preach the sermon. 'A Good Fight' is the theme. Give us the qualifications of a good soldier? Tell us about the enemy? The rewards of a good fight."

A skillful leader will be able to bring out all he knows and develop many bright thoughts which would never have occurred to him. The average congregation will manifest surprising homiletic ability when thus put on their mettle.

In the regulation prayer-meeting of the olden time the leader would select a chapter and give a running comment as he read. This method is said to have possessed advantages, for when the speaker was persecuted in one verse he could flee to the next. Some paper, I think the Church Economist, has suggested a plan which gives greater variety than the former and besides avoids persecution in any place. A chapter is chosen and announced from the pulpit and printed slips. Every member is asked to read the chapter and select his favorite verse. The prayer-meeting committee collects the slips containing the favorite verses, counts them and announces the result. The leader asks those who have voted to give an exposition of the verses chosen and a reason for so choosing. We have recently spent three delightful evenings discussing Phil. 4, Col. 3 and 1 Thess. 5.

There is much yet to be said concerning the conduct of the prayer-meeting. We are strongly tempted to keep on through the alphabet, but fear we might get stuck before getting to X and Z. If we were to add one more it would be the advice of Paul, "speaking to men to edification." We realize that in spite of all one's plans and good intentions the meeting sometimes will not go; or if it goes, it reminds one of a ride over an East Virginia corduroy road in an ox cart. Such an insignificant thing as a bat or a bug or even a baby will upset the best of meetings. Or sometimes a brother with more zeal that common sense will counteract in the closing moment the good impressions of a whole hour.

Just one illustration of a brother who spoke, but not to edfication, and we will close.

One evening when the names of several of our sick had been mentioned, a brother whose peculiar manner of speaking usually excited the risibilities of the young people arose and said, "There is a lady down the street here who is sick, and I think some of the prominent sisters ought to call and pray with her. She has the jaundice; that is, I think it is the jaundice. She is very yellow. She is exceedingly yellow around the eyes. It looks like the jaundice," etc.

When he began to tell of the lady's ailments, some of the young people smiled and looked at the pastor. When they saw the leader's face relaxing they tittered and when the pastor strove in vain to repress a smile they were convulsed. But the speaker went on, enlarging upon the lady's yellowness and giving his reasons for supposing it was the jaundice.

The pastor with as much solemnity as he could command, turned to the hymn which had been selected as the closing one and said, "Let us sing 682 and be dismissed." The order in the meeting was not at all improved as he gave out the lines of the hymn: "'Mid scenes of confusion and creature complaints," etc.

Dr. John Henry Barrows has been elected president of Oberlin College. This college has been without a president for two years. Its prestige will not suffer while under the management of Dr. Barrows.

What Our Home Missionaries Are Doing.

Arkansas.—E. C. Browning writes:—"M. D. Smith has had 54 additions at Bald Knob in the last two months; he was about leaving for more support, but your appropriation will enable us to make arrangements to keep him. Hot Springs should receive at least one hundred dollars during the year. Can the board increase the appropriation that much? Oh, these bricks that are to be made without straw! God help us to do our whole duty."

Shreveport, Louisiana.—Claude E. Jones writes:—"I can hardly find words to express to you and the board the gratitude of our hearts for the appropriation you have made to us. The glad word reaches us when the struggle seems hardest, and your help insures the continuance of our effort to plant the cause of primitive Christianity in Shreveport, the second city of Louisiana. May the Jubilee Year witness the establishment of a church possessing the missionary spirit which brings it into existence and cares for its infant life."

Massachusetts.—S. M. Hunt writes:—"My heart yearns for a church in New Hampshire this Jubilee Year. You know that we have no church in that entire state. I do urge your help in establishing a church in the Old Granite state. If we can get five hundred dollars from some of our well-to-do friends in the West the New England Board will guarantee the success of the undertaking. Let us know you will do your part."

Utah, Salt Lake City.—W. H. Bagby writes:—"The church is in good condition. If our house were completed we would be self-supporting, and second to none in the city. C. E. Millard will spend January with us in a special meeting."

Texas, Galveston.—Jesse B. Haston writes:—"We have had ten additions lately; our work is growing, audiences are growing constantly. We could never have had a church here without the assistance of the Home Board."

Illinois, Chicago.—Errett Gates writes:—"The Hyde Park Church appreciates what the Home Board has done for us during the past four years; you adopted the child at birth, and like a patient mother you have nursed it through infancy to self-support, which we now assume. Your investment here was justifiable and profitable, for during the year 1898 this church has returned to our various missionary treasuries not less than four hundred dollars."

South Dakota, Sioux Falls.—L. H. Humphrey writes:—"My wife and I are doing the best work of our lives, but it is a source of comfort to know that our efforts are successful. We are working and praying for a Jubilee blessing upon the American Christian Missionary Society."

"We owe much more to the negroes at home than in Africa, yet it is much easier to interest people in Africa than in the negroes of Arkansas. We covet your help to do this great work."—E. C. Browning.

Southern California.—H. Elliott Ward writes:—We have engaged Cal Ogburn to do mission work under the direction of our board. We thank the board for your help in the past, and we covet your help for this year."

New Orleans, Louisiana.—S. R. Hawkins writes:—"Your check was most welcome. With sickness in my family which promises to be far more serious than we hoped, your help is truly an angel of mercy. When I whispered it in the ear of my afflicted wife it cheered her and she seemed for a time to forget her suffering. I hope I soon can be in a work where I can show my gratitude to the home board. I must thank you for your kind words, which have been not less helpful than the help of the board."

Oklahoma, Stillwater.—"We dedicated our new church last Lord's day. It is a monument to Home Missions; without the help of the American Christian Missionary Society it could never have been built. The expenditure of about four hundred dollars by the society has led to the raising and expending for the Lord's work of over seventeen hundred dollars in the last seventeen months. The churches I have organized will have large increase in membership this year. This work started by you will go on with increasing power as the years come and go. Count me always an enthusiastic friend of Home Missions; my work on the frontier has shown me the great need of your help to start the weak, scattered brethren to work for the King."—Vertes Williams.

Tempe, Arizona.—"Dear Bro. Smith:—We are in the West and things do not move on as they do in the East. But still they move, and move in the right direction. My audiences are much better and the interest is growing We commence this morning hauling rock and sand for the foundation of the church. We will commence whether we finish or not. We will pay as we go. I have commenced a subscription asking ten persons to give a hundred dollars each on the condition that we get the ten. I have three names, including my own, which heads the list. We are compelled to lead in this new field or things will not go. Just here the first load of rock came and now it is unloaded at 9:00 A. M. Three cheers for the Jubilee Convention—$100,000! 100,000 sou's for Christ, more consecration, more growth in grace. Amen! Fraternally yours.—R. A. Hopper."

Alameda, California.—"The Missionary Society is helping us to gain a victory in Alameda. The outlook is getting brighter, the brethren are encouraged, and we are gaining friends. We take hope and press forward. These old mistakes and frictions of the past are hard things to overcome, but with Christ in our lead and the Home Society at our back, we'll hold the fort and throw out new lines into the enemy's district.—A. R. Hathaway."

Salt Lake City.—"How thoughtful and kind it was of you to send the check in advance. You can imagine how much happiness it brought with it when I tell you that for some time I have been seeing the eyes of a brave, true little woman swimming in tears as she saw Christmas coming on apace and did not see the way open to do the little things that loving hearts prompt at that glad season. It is a joy to know that though the mighty mountains intervene between us, we are not forgotten, but true hearts, interested in us for our work's sake, think of us and do something to cause us to sing in our hearts the song of joy that gathers volume and strength as the years go marching on. God bless you and cause his face to shine upon you and fill your hearts with joy and crown your labors with success and your years with abundance of peace. Gradually but surely our work is gathering force. With the blessing of God, '99 will be the best year the church has ever known. We will end '98 with every obligation promptly met, a thing no previous year has witnessed. Fraternally. —W. H. Bagby."

These letters show the work we are doing; we have seventy-three missionaries, not counting their wives, on our pay roll. We hope the friends of Home Missions will remember this work in personal offerings. It is yet four months until the harvest of the May offering, and our missionaries must not be allowed to suffer. Let the Sunday-schools send in the offerings from Children's Day to help in this time of especial need.

An all-day prayer-meeting of the ladies of all the Protestant churches in this city will be observed on Friday of this week, Jan. 6, at the Central Presbyterian Church. The half hour to be occupied by the Christian Church of this city will be from 2:30 to 3 P. M.

Our Budget.

—What, under God, shall we make the year 1899 to us?

—What progress shall it witness in our religious life?

—What kind of history shall we make for this Reformation?

—What solution awaits the problems that confront the nation?

—These are questions we naturally ask, but we must await the issues of the year for their answer.

—It is not necessary that we should see a year ahead. It is well, indeed, that we do not. It is far better to trust God by doing our duty each day as we are able to see it.

—It is likely to be an important year in the history of our own religious movement, because of the Jubilee Convention and the effort to advance all the lines of our work, and our ideal of Christian living to a higher standard.

—This means that we must make it a year of watchfulness, activity and prayer. Watch, Work and Worship, are the three W's that will bring success, especially if accompanied by the three P's—Pluck, Patience and Perseverance.

—Is it not about time to call a halt on the musical craze that seems to prevail in some of the churches? In an announcement that we have seen for Christmas day an apology was offered by the pastor for delivering a sermon! The music had the right of way in the church on that Lord's day. In another paper the following announcement appears: "The splendid musical program to be rendered Sunday evening has been arranged by * * * The singers are among the finest in the city, and we have no doubt the house will be crowded. There will be no sermon!" Has not the time come to call a halt? In the case last mentioned the crowning attraction was the fact that "there will be no sermon!" "Preach the Word," is the command. "Be instant in season, out of season," is the accompanying word of exhortation.

—A reader sends us a clipping from the Word and Way, a Baptist paper, entitled "Dr. Whitsitt and Jeremiah Vardeman," in which the writer attempts to vindicate Vardeman against the implication from Dr. Whitsitt's writings that he was a convert to Mr. Campbell's views. To do this he quotes from the elder Vardeman's son who makes his father say that Alexander Campbell, on being pressed by him to express his views on the Holy Spirit, said to him, "Bro. Vardeman, I regard the whole doctrine of the regenerative agency of the Holy Spirit as a figment of the brain." Vardeman is said to have replied, "If that is what you believe and intend to teach, the back of my hand to you forever." This, of course, is an utter perversion of Mr. Campbell's view of the Holy Spirit's agency in conversion and regeneration. It was in his debate with Rice, we think, that Mr. Campbell said "he would not give a farthing for any man's conversion that was not begun, carried on and completed by the Holy Spirit." It was some false theory of the Holy Spirit's operation, no doubt, that he regarded as "a figment of the brain."

—Dr. Peck, in Zion's Herald, suggests that the General Conference pass a resolution that no person be appointed a member of the official board who does not take a church paper. This sort of regulation among us, we fear, would decapitate a great many elders, deacons and Sunday-school superintendents.

—H. M. Beadle, in a long article in a recent number of the Catholic News, tries to make it appear that the Roman Catholic Church is the great champion of the Bible. That some of the facts cited in the article concerning uses made of the Bible by the Roman Catholic clergy in other centuries are not to be questioned, we admit; but it is also patent that their efforts to circulate copies of the Bible among the masses of the people have not been and are not to-day as conspicuous as those of Protestants. The Bible is not one of the commonest visible books in the homes of Roman Catholics to-day, especially in countries where their religion has been dominant for centuries. If, however, they want to excel in a zeal for circulating the Word of God among the masses of the people we are sure that the chasm between Roman Catholics and Protestants will not be widened thereby.

—Our announcement last week of our new publication, the Christian Portrait Gallery, to be published quarterly, each number containing 32 8vo pages, and to contain portraits of our leading men and women, past and present, is already awakening interest among our readers and eliciting responses. The first number of this publication will appear in February. It will be both pictorial and biographical, and will be such a volume as every one connected with the present Reformatory Movement would desire to have in his home. To make this possible the price has been put at $1.00 per year. Prompt responses will enable us to determine as to the number to be printed in the first edition, Address Christian Pulishing Co., St. Louis.

—We are receiving a number of expressions of interest in the forthcoming congress of our brotherhood, to be held in St. Louis in the latter part of April, and appreciation of the high character of the program, as published in our last issue. This program should be preserved for reference. As it is the first meeting of the kind we have ever had, it is hoped that this one will be truly representative in its personnel and in the character of its discussions.

—In another place will be found an article on "Our Colleges in Missouri," by Pres. Lockhart, of Christian University. What he says about the influence of the educational conference at Moberly, in removing a good deal of misunderstanding among the friends of education in Missouri, is quite true. The editor of this paper has always felt a warm interest in the school at Canton, but his efforts to establish biblical instruction at the seat of the State University have been understood by many of the friends of that school and perhaps of our other colleges as hostile to their interests. This idea, we think, has been thoroughly dissipated, and it is now understood that the success of the Bible College will not interfere with any of our other schools and vice versa. Each has its own appropriate field which the other cannot occupy. The Bible College will find all the work it can do among the students of the University, who ought to find in our Bible College whatever instruction they may need to fit them for their calling—whether it be that of a lawyer, a doctor or a preacher of the gospel. This is a field all its own, and it impinges on that of no other school.

—On the other hand, there is a work for an institution like that of Christian University, for instance, which will never be done by the state university and the Bible College combined. There is a widespread demand among the brotherhodd of the state for an institution of our own so endowed and equipped as to be able to cope with other schools of similar character in this and other states. Many of the brethren—most of them, indeed—prefer to send their sons and daughters to one of our own schools, so equipped, believing that the religious atmosphere of such a school will be more favorable for the spiritual welfare of their children. We sympathize with that feeling and have always done so. We believe our colleges have an important work to do in helping forward our reformatory work. Here, then, is an ample field for such colleges. Let us endow them and enable them to occupy it.

—Peace Hymn of the Republic, is the title of a beautiful poem by Miss Anna M. Saunders, of Lincoln, Neb. The poem occupies only seven pages, but is beautifully printed and bound as a peace souvenir. It celebrates the achievement of our army and navy during the war. Also those of the Red Cross Sisters; but interprets these great events in the light of a divine purpose. In conception and execution, in thought and poetic form, the poem is worthy to live with the best productions born of the late war. The poem sells for 25 cents and the author pledges a per cent. of the receipts from its sale to Home Missions.

—We are still receiving letters from all sections of the country, urging us not to discontinue any of the departments of the paper which have been running during the past year. We have been very much gratified at the uniform expression of appreciation of the value of these departments and of the manner in which they have been conducted. If we had entertained any doubt concerning the propriety of continuing these departments it would have been removed by the numerous testimonials we have received from every section of the country as to the appreciation in which they are held. The departments will be continued, and the effort will be greater than ever, no doubt, on the part of those conducting them, to make them still more valuable to our readers.

—Those who attended the meeting of the Board of Managers of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society at Chattanooga will probably remember the name of Dr. Hammond in connection with the proposed work in Cuba. He was spoken of by those who met him as a man of fine scholarship and ability, who had but recently come among us from one of the religious bodies. He has, we believe, contributed articles to one or more papers, and succeeded in making an impression of his sincerity and ability. It has come to pass concerning him, him, however, as it has concerning others who, though strangers to us, have been taken up and treated as men worthy of our confidence. It turns out that he is a consummate fraud, an exceedingly clever swindler, a religious adventurer, who has been through all the ecclesiastical ranks from that of the Catholic priest to the Plymouth brother. He is likewise a matrimonial adventurer, having been married nine ttmes. This information has come through the Chief of Detectives of Chicego. This adventurer is now in Havana pretending to do religious work, and what is worse, pretending to do it in our name. He is defiant and may cause us some trouble. The Master's warning against impostors is still needed: "Beware of false prophets that come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly are ravening wolves. By their fruits ye shall know them." The trouble, is we are generally too impatient to wait for the fruits, but judge men by their professions. The sheep's clothing must be stripped from this wolf, that his real nature may be understood.

—The third number of Vol. I. of Pulpit Diagrams, edited by Z. T. Sweeney, has reached our table and after a hasty glance at its contents we do not hesitate to commend it as an aid to pastors and evangelists. The Diagrams will not only suggest sermons for the preacher, but if used before an audience will help the hearer to clearer perceptions of the facts and commandments of the gospel, the analysis of the Bible, the ordinances of the church and to more deeply impress them upon his mind. The diagrams are not all above criticism, neither are any without merit. As a whole, however, they seem to be too much confined to the outward things of the gospel and not as inclusive of its spiritual phases as seems essential to the best interests of the church. But perhaps the editor intends to devote another number as exclusively to the spiritual essentials of Christian life and living.

—As there are two series of Prayer-meeting Topics issued by the Christian Publishing Co., those desiring the Uniform Series prepared by the committee appointed at Chattanooga should so state in sending in their order. This is the series that is being used in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the "Hour of Prayer" department.

—Geo. Plattenburg, whose picture appears as our frontispiece this week, ranks high among our Missouri preachers both as a writer and a speaker, though the has been for the past few years living quietly on his farm near Dover, Mo. He was born in Wellsburg, Va., March 25, 1828, a place and time that would throw his life in the current of the Reformation, then in the flush of its early triumphs. He graduated in Bethany College in 1851. He afterwards studied law and was admitted to the bar at Selma, Ala. But in 1855 he was ordained to the ministry, which has been his life calling. He has promised the readers of this paper a series of articles during the present year entitled, "Traces of Half-forgotten Sermons."

—On the evening of Jan. 1st, Kentucky University celebrated the centennial anniversary of its founding. Gov Bradley and staff were present. President Warfield, of La Fayette College delivered the principal address and Pres. J. W. McGarvey, of the Bible College, delivered the historical address, embracing the most important events in the history of the institution since the founding of Transylvania Seminary 115 years ago. Kentucky University is the successor of Transylvania University.

—Henry Waterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, advises the Democratic party to nominate George Dewey, of Vermont, for President and Fitzhugh Lee, of Va., for Vice-President on the platform—"The Stars and Stripes—God bless them." This he thinks is the only combination that would have any show against Wm. McKinley and Joe Wheeler on a platform of national unification and expansion.

—The editorial staff of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will remain unchanged for 1899. Besides W. W. Hopkins, the Assistant Editor, B. B. Tyler, J. J. Haley and W. E. Garrison will contribute editorially as they have done during the past few years. The departments to which our readers have become accustomed and attached will be continued. A few new features will be added, the most important of which is the Outlined History of the Reformation of the 19th Century, by a number of our ablest writers. There is no reason, therefore, why our readers may not expect the volume of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to eclipse anything in its past history. We are making but little noise about the new subscribers that are coming in, as space forbids, but we are doing quite well, thank you, and hope to do even better.

—It is said that O. H. Rockefeller, a second cousin to the great multi-millionaire, recently died in poverty in a lodging house in Chicago. For four years he had eked out a scanty living by selling artificial flowers made from scraps of paper. One cannot keep from thinking that a man of such wealth as that of the oil king could find a position for such a kinsman without seriously jeopardizing either his business reputation or his enormous wealth.

—I see many letters of congratulation to you concerning your good paper. There is one thing I must congratulate you on, and that is the nice cuts that you give us each week of our brethren. We hope you will continue this plan. C. H. HILTON.
Larned, Kan.

—It was reported in the office of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a few days ago by a brother that a man had said to him that he had a friend in Texas who was "a strong Cammeliter and was well reversed in the Scriptures." If we are correctly informed there are several people down in Texas who are quite well "reversed in the Scriptures." The Christian Courier, of Dallas, comes in contact with them occasionally.

—A little partisan paper down South advertises a booklet in which "two distinguished Campbellites, A. M. McGary and T. R. Burnett," are utterly extinguished. Really, now! Can it be possible that these Goliaths, who must be known throughout the counties in which they live, have been unhorsed by this Baptist David? If this can be proven to be a fact, the Baptist editor is entitled to a vote of thanks.

—Our esteemed Texas correspondent, M. M. Davis, pastor of the church at Dallas, has recently passed through an experience that was new to him, but is as old as the race. His only daughter, Una, was married to William M. Peck on Dec. 21st, and the happy couple are in the East on their wedding tour. Una was as bright and cheery a daughter as ever cheered a parental hearthstone, and we do not wonder that Bro. Davis says in a personal letter:

I had often heard people talk of having the heartache, but I never fully realized what it was till Mrs. Davis and I sat down to the table alone the first time after she had left. But with quaint, tender Whitcomb Riley we can say:

"Nothin' to say, my daughther! Nothin' at all to say—Gyrls that's in love, I've noticed, ginerally has their way!"

—The greatest sorrow of my life is upon me. My precious wife departed this life on the 14th inst. Your broken-hearted brother,
Hickory, Wis. P. S. OLSON.

May the loving hand of our Heavenly Father bind up the broken heart of our dear brother, by his tender promises, and heal it with His comforting grace.

—The Church Progress, a Roman Catholic journal published in this city, of date Nov. 26th, contains the following significant confession:

The Protestants of the United States contributed last year over $3,800,000 to the "foreign missionary" operations of their sects; while the Catholics, who outnumber the church-going Protestants for the country at large, and in the great centers of population are several times as numerous, gave only $35-000 for the propogation of the true faith. Many little sects, with not one-tenth our numbers or wealth, send many times as much to their missionaries. There is no excuse which we can give, which the sectaries could not have availed themselves of with equal propriety. Until our apostolic zeal surpasses that of the Scribes and Pharisees and our charity is Christike enough to extend like our Master's to all the ends of the earth, we cannot expect the full blessing of heaven or to successfully prevent the leakage which is the necessary outcome of indifferentism. The church is apostolic by its very nature; her primary commission is to "preach the gospel to every creature." The charity which begins at home and stays there is not the genuine article.

—It is calculated that a fluent speaker utters between 7,000 and 7,500 words in the course of an hour's uninterrupted speaking; many orators, of more than usually rapid utterance, will reach 8,000 and even 9,000. But a 125 words a minute, or 7,500 an hour is a fair average. The average number of ideas given in an hour's speaking could be represented by three figures—sometimes by ciphers.—The Watchword.

—J. Fraise Richard, of Washington, D.C., a frequent contributor to our columns, expresses himself in the Washington Evening Star on the subject of Expansion, from which we make an extract. We freely pardon his appropriation of our poetry, seeing that it is used in a good cause:

Let us appeal to history. Ask the thirteen colonies in the days of the revolution: "Do you believe in expansion?" With one accord they would answer in the affirmative.

Ask President Jefferson when he was negotiating the Louisiana purchase: "Do you believe in expansion?" His answer would be in harmony with his acts—"Yes."

Ask President Polk when Texas, the lone star, a mighty empire in herself, was seeking to shine in the galaxy of free republics: "Do you believe in expanion?" His countenance would radiate with the consciousness of having done a worthy deed to struggling humanity as he pointed to his acts in securing that state and other valuable territory.

Ask Secretary Seward, while engaged in securing the purchase of Alaska: "Do you believe in expansion?" and his reply would be in harmony with those of his historic and official predecessors.

Who that believes in growth and progress can sit down and weep because Uncle Sam's dominions did not confine themselves to the original narrow limits of the Atlantic Ocean? Who regrets the addition of the orange fields of Florida, the fertile valley of the great Mississippi, the ore-producing mines of the Rockies, the untold wealth of the Pacific Coast, or the icy gold fields of Alaska? Who dare lament that a form of government which in its incipiency required its founders to pledge to each other their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor has outstripped the most sanguine expectations of its framers, and attained a position and an influence outshining "the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency?" Who, believing in the right and the capacity of man for self-government, and recognizing the desirability of allowing the principles of civil and religious liberty to prevail throughout the earth, would purposely take such steps as shall fossilize this modern type of republican government, and end its leavening influence among the nations? Who does not believe in expansion?

So long as the Government of the United States shall stand—

"For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be,"

it will command the favor of God and receive the support of its own subjects.

—We find the following unpublished card from Bro. Munnell, sent, perhaps, in response to a request made to a number of persons that they suggest some things that need emphasis:

As to suitable subjects for weekly articles, the following seem to me to be much needed:

1. The Salvation of Rationalism—What it is.
2. The Sin of the Man of One Talent.
3. Christ's Dual Nature.
4. Limits of Religious Thought.
5. The Punishment Due to Sin.
6. Why God Hardened Pharaoh's Heart.
7. "Repented Not that Ye Might Believe."
8. Why God "Shut Their Eyes Lest they Should See."

Much would depend, of course, upon the manner of handling such, or any theme, but the above seem to me to be among the needed.

—The trustees of Bethany College have been notified that by the will of the late Bro. Robert Macdougald, of Edinburgh, Scotland, the whole of his estate comes, at the expiration of certain annuities, to Bethany College. Particulars are promised as early as practicable, but it is known that the amount of this bequest is considerable.

—The New York Voice recently presented a very striking illustration of an unequal enforcement of municipal authority in New York City. Through the kindness of a restaurant keeper on the Bowery, near Fifth Street, New York City, from two to three hundred hungry men were given a cup of coffee and piece of bread as a midnight lunch. At the complaint of a near-by saloon keeper the police raided these men and carried away fifty of them to the station house. The next day the police court refused to punish any of them on the ground that they were a body of honest but unfortunate men without work and without money. Over against this the Voice places another scene which is not calculated to increase one's appreciation of the impartial administration of municipal laws. The Voice says:

But come again, as a Voice representative did, on the next Sunday night, to that same part of the city. On every corner law is being violated with a pretense of secrecy: dance-halls that outrage decency are open as all outdoors and the house of shame advertised as plainly as a department store. Within 100 feet of the door of the station house of the precinct where the police captain who arrests hungry men sits as the representative of the people's power, Rum's anarchy defies law, and liquor is being illegally sold with only a pretended disguise, so thin that the veriest innocent must see the fraud. This is organized society exhibiting its usual respect for its own laws and its usual care for public interests.

Educational Work in Missouri.

The Executive Committee appointed by the Educational Conference at Moberly, Mo., on the 6th and 7th insts., met in this city on the 28th inst. and had a very important and harmonious session. One of the methods agreed upon for carrying out the purpose for which it was appointed is presented in the following preamble and resolutions:

WHEREAS, the Educational Conference at Moberly on the 6th and 7th insts. arranged a program of educational work which harmonizes all our educational interests in the state, and whereas, this program involves the raising of a sum of over $150,000, to meet immediate and pressing wants, and whereas, it is desirable that the entire brotherhood of the state participate in this forward movement in behalf of our colleges—

Therefore, be it Resolved by this Executive Committee, appointed to carry out the recommendations of the Conference above mentioned,

(1) That each congregation in the state be requested to contribute a sum that will be equal to one dollar for each member in its membership for this purpose.

(2) That each congregation be requested to appoint a committee of three to have charge of this matter, to canvass the church for subscriptions and to collect and forward same to the proper person.

(3) That the churches be earnestly requested to complete the canvass for subscriptions as far as possible by Educational Day, the first Sunday in July next, and that the subscriptions be collected by that time, if possible, and reported to the treasurer of this educational fund.

(4) That the press and our ministers in the state be and are hereby solicited to co-operate heartily with this Executive Committee in bringing this matter to the attention of our churches and urging its paramount importance upon them.

(5) That all moneys coming into this educational fund, without instructions, be prorated among the institutions mentioned at the Moberly Conference according to the resolutions there passed.

This ought to inaugurate a popular movement in the state among the churches which will enlist a large number of donors and bring the churches into more vital touch with our colleges. Much depends upon how heartily our ministers in the state enter into this work of endowing and otherwise assisting our institutions of learning.

Another method agreed upon was the employment of a suitable man to represent our educational interest in the state, awaken interest in them and secure endowment from persons able to give larger sums, so soon as such a man can be found and his compensation provided for.

The perfect harmony of feeling which has been brought about in the state ought to be followed, and we hope will be, by a genuine revival of interest in education bearing substantial fruit.

"Maintains its High Standard."

The grand old C.-E. does more than maintain its high standard of excellence, it is always pressing forward to get greater heights. The Christmas number is delightful. Its splendid pages could not be read by any one without profit. Then the Editorial Easy Chair musings—they awake sweet melodies as they strike the chords of symapthy and memory in the heart of the reader. And where Bro. E. Ditor softly blooms out into poetry, in "Christmass Chimes!"—I know that brother. Not to be disrespectful, "he's cute, he is," to hide in the faint shadow of such a guise. I have known him a long time. His head is gray, but his heart is young. He preaches in a great many places; indeed, there's no telling how many thousands of places are made better every week by his words. The C.-E. needs not fear nor need the most watchful and stalwart brethren anywhere fear, while he has a guiding hand in its course. As stanchly loyal to Christ as he is lovingly liberal to Christ's people—the heart of his brethren may safely confide in him. Long life and blessings to the veteran E. Ditor and his loved ones, and perpetual prosperity to the C.-E. G. E. IRELAND.

PERSONAL MENTION.

S. M. Martin begins a meeting at Mason City, Ia., with Sumner T. Martin, Jan. 7.

Prof. Sherman Kirk, of Des Moines, is in a meeting at Lincoln Schoolhouse, Johnson County, Ia.

C. M. Hugbes, singing evangelist, changes his address from 187 South Upper Street to 207 South Limestone Street, Lexington, Ky.

C. M. Hughes, singing evangelist, will correspond with church or evangelist desiring his services for February. Address him at West Salem, Ill.

J. S. Smith reports a prosperous year at Carrollton, Ill., and the church so well pleased that it gave him a Bible for a Christmas present.

W. H Hanna, of Carnegie, Pa., sailed from New York, Dec. 31, on the Cunarder, "Etruria," to join J. A. L. Romig in England and act as singing evangelist with him during the remainder of his English campaign. Bro. Hanna's permanent address will be 47 Lidderdale Road, Sefton Park, Liverpool.

T. E. Cramblet, of Pittsburg, succeeds Bro. Hanna as Cor. Sec. of West Pennsyluania C. M. S.

Otha Wilkison has resigned the work at Clay Center, Kan., on account of ill health, and gone to McLoud, Okla., where he will remain a couple of months, after which time he will be ready for work again. The church at Clay Center has not yet chosen a minister, but Bro. M. S. Jameson, of Nebraska, is with them at present.

G. Halleck Rowe has closed his work at La-Fayette, but continues at Woodhull, and will correspond with churches wanting a pastor for half time. He would also like to hear from churches which would be interested in his illustrated lecture, "Scenes in Dixie." Bro. Rowe himself admits that it is a thrilling lecture.

David N. Wetzell, of Farmer City, Ill., was the recipient of a Christmas surprise party from his appreciative congregation. The presentation of a purse as a testimonial of esteem was a pleasing variation of the familar and often calamitous "donation." Bro. Wetzell and his able wife deserve well of their people.

E. P. Grow has finished his work at Grayson, Ky., and as evangelist of Center County under the auspices of the Kentucky State Board. Two additions in December. Any desiring his services address Grayson, Ky.

T. F. Driskill, preacher and dentist, of Corsicana, Texas, has resigned the pastorate of the church in that city, closing a successful year with many additions. Dr. Driskill has for three years been preaching once a month at the State Orphan Home, where he had five confessions Dec. 25.

H. A. Denton, pastor of the church at Centralia, Mo., sends us a report of his year's work showing the congregation to be in healthy condition, growing and giving as it should. The pastor's statement of what he is trying to do, the immediate objects of his work, shows a clear conception of the function of the ministry and the need of the church.

E. A. Cantrell has been called unanimously by the church at Englewood, Chicago, and has entered upon his work. Bro. Cantrell was born near Springfield, Mo., in 1872. He has shown excellent ability, both as pastor and evangelist, and begins his work at Englewood with the prospect of accomplishing great good for the cause. We fondly trust that such may be the case.

W. F. Turner began his work at Joplin, Mo., on the first Lord's day in the year, preaching in the morning on "The Ideal Preacher," and in the evening on "The Ideal Church." There were two additions, and the church is hopeful.

William Garrison, brother of the editor of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST, has been re-elected to the Oklahoma Senate. While here he does not forget the services of the church, often presiding at the communion table, teaching in the Sunday-school and meeting with us in prayer-meetings. What an example as a legislator! He proved a terror to the encroachment of a certain trust at the session of the last legislature. May his tribe increase, especially in this growing territory.—M. T. Hurlbut, in Christian Standard.

J. C. Hanna has been called to remain as pastor of the church at Newton, Iowa, for an indefinite period of years with a substantial increase of salary. At a dinner given by the congregation recently, the church presented to the pastor and his wife valuable Christmas presents which they highly appreciate. Thus are the hearts of pastor and people knit more closely together for the work of the future. The church is now in the midst of a great union meeting.

A MISSIONARY'S WIFE

Interesting Letter from India—A Long Summer Season.

The following letter is from the wife of an American Baptist missionary at Nowgong, Assam, India: "After living here for several years I found the climate was weakening me. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla every summer. This I found so beneficial that I now take one dose every morning for nine months in the year, that is, through the hot weather. My general health is excellent and my blood is in good condition. My weight does not vary more than one pound throughout the year. I find Hood's Sarsaparilla indispensable in the summer and recommend it for use in a debilitating climate." MRS P. H. MOORE.

The above letter is similar to thousands received and constantly coming in.

Hood's Pills cure nausea, indigestion, biliousness. Price 25c.

L. W. Kinker has closed his work at Herington, Kan., to give his full time to the church at Peabody during the coming year. He reports for the past year 116 sermons, five lectures, 25 additions to the church, and that the church at Peabody has paid all its debts and repaired its building.

Z. T. Sweeney, of Indiana, lectured at Decatur, Ill., Tuesday evening of Christmas week on "The Golden Age." A local paper aptly characterizes Mr. Sweeney as "a torrent of eloquence and a mine of wit."

C. H. Hilton, of Larned, Kan., has been visited by his members in a body, who took possession of the house and left many good things to testify of their appreciation of their preacher.

Herbert L. Willett, writing us from Germany, under date of Dec. 7, sends us "greetings from Berlin" and says: "We are greatly enjoying our stay in Berlin. The weather is delightful, even though we are so far North. There has been no indication of cold or stormy weather as yet, and the days are sunny, though of course very short. We are making many pleasant acquaintances both in the American Colony and among the Germans."

L. B. Pickerill has recently moved to De Land, Ill., and has taken charge of the work in the church at that place. This is the home of Bro. T. E. Bondurant, who has been the leader in the movement for the endowment of Eureka College, and whose example ought to inspire many others of like ability to do a like work.

W. W. Hopkins, of this paper, has been confined for a few days to his home, at Kirkwood, in consequence of an attack of the grip. His eldest daughter, Nellie, was married on the 26th ult., to Geo. Walling, grandson of J. C. Reynolds, of Macomb, Ill.

W. F. Turner closes his work at La Belle, Mo., with the close of the year and begins on New Year's Day his work at Joplin, in the Southwestern part of the state, where he has been employed. During Bro. Turner's four years' work at La Belle the church has built a new house of worship and given liberally to all departments of our missionary work, besides greatly increasing its membership. The church desired Bro. Turner to remain, but he felt it his duty to accept the call from Joplin as offering larger opportunities for doing good. Joplin is certainly to be congratulated on this arrangement, for the Missouri preachers have not in their ranks a more consecrated man than Bro. Turner. We regret to learn of the recent loss of their little baby-girl 20 months old, and tender both Bro. Turner and wife our sincere sympathy.

OUR POLITICS IN CONFUSION.

In this dear old country there are some strange mixtures. One of these is the medley of politics and religion, through the fact that we have, like most other old nations, a national system of religion established by law. Thus we can never be long concerned with religious matters without coming into contact with things political; while on the other hand, we at almost every point in civil and secular issues come across religious considerations. At this moment England is entering on a political crisis of a crucial character. The great Liberal leader, the prime favorite and trusted friend of the late Mr. Gladstone, Sir William Harcourt, has resigned his position as head of the Opposition in the House of Commons. This incident is this week creating intense excitement. Harcourt is the finest orator in the British Parliament. He is perhaps the most powerful debater living in the world. We have not his equal in this land in ready and spontaneous controversy. He is an instance of the way in which, as I have just observed, religion and politics are intertwined, like an old ivy that has for centuries been growing round an ancient oak. During the last few months a violent controversy has raged in the Church of England over the development of Ritualism. This has created a perfect cyclone in the press, and above the jangling voices of the storm of passionate opinion the clear tones of Harcourt have been heard ringing through the land. He has plunged into the fray against the High Church in a style which has struck terror into the hearts of the Sacerdotalists, and his numerous magnificent letters in the Times have marked an era in this great discussion, on which perhaps depends the fate of the Church of England.

THE CRY FOR A LEADER.

A party without a head is not always in a hopeless condition. Neither is a party without a program. The Liberal party, the party to which I belong and to which England owes its modern progress, is by some derisive critics regarded as an amorphous monstrosity. But we all know that a church which happens for a time to be without a pastor is by no means necessarily doomed to collapse. A party is not an organic body, but a vast collection of separate units which may be more or less loosely scattered at this or that time, or more or less compacted at certain other times. The great party of progress has for some years been under a cloud, because it had done a mighty work and seemed to have exhausted its powers of stimulating the nation to a further series of immense reforms. A reaction came in the Tory direction, and when this is played out then Liberalism will spring into action with overwhelming force. Some hoary old systems of abuse will then topple over with crash after crash. One of these will be the Established Church, which is doing all it can to put off the evil day by backing up Toryism without scruple or principle. Knowing that they will want a grand and fearless leader, the British Liberals are for the moment dismayed at the retirement of the redoubtable and eloquent Harcourt. But it is not forgotten that he is nearly seventy years old, and that several brilliant younger men are eligible for leadership. Mr. Asquith, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and Lord Rosebery are as popular as they are talented, and any one of these may be regarded as the future field marshall of the forces of progress.

AN UNEXPECTED PLEA FOR MISSIONS.

Those who love Foreign Missions are meeting with some very unlooked-for encouragements. Terrible things have been happening in West Central Africa, in the Congo Free State. The administration of the Congo Free State by the Roman Catholic Belgians has been of the very wickedest description, and is a diabolical failure. Not long ago missionaries disclosed that the officers had been in the habit of punishing natives who refused to obtain rubber by cutting off their hands. Then, again, we in England were all indignant at the murder of Mr. Stokes, an English trader who was falsely accused of supplying arms to natives, and was executed by Major Lothair. This Lothair was tried, England demanding that he should be brought to justice; but the trial was a farce, and he was not only acquitted, but has been appointed to important command again in the province. Since this appointment the cruelty and oppression have much increased. In Mongalla, the richest district in the Congo State in rubber, probably to avenge some native protest against his tyranny, Lothair seems to have organized a force of about 700 soldiers and native levies to uphold civilization in the district. Dividing his force, he sent one small party forward, and the natives slew and devoured them all. The cannibal negroes inflicted the same tragic fate on the next party. Thus a horrible disaster has occurred and another black page is added to the annals of Darkest Africa. About all this Mr. Courtney, one of our most respected members of Parliament, has been making a speech before the Royal Statistical Society. He says that the appalling failure of the Congo administration to introduce civilization would not have happened if the country had first been opened up, not by Belgian officers, but by Christian missionaries of every sect and nation. This is a remarkable admission from a leading politician.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE ON MISSIONARIES.

It is very significant that the most popular of the great London daily papers, the Daily Chronicle, has at once taken special and most favorable note of Mr. Courtney's remarks about the Congo State and missionaries. Here are its words, lying before me in the issue of this morning. The editor says: "That missionary method is also one of our own methods of founding colonies, and it sometimes prospers very well. Mr. Courtney is not hopeful about the future of the district in any case, and he thinks the best intentions of missionary work must yield commercial results both slow and small. But we may at least assume that as a philanthropic adventure the Congo Free State would have been a greater success under missionaries than under emissaries of civilization like Major Lothair." Now, I have quoted both the politician and the newspaper because it is a phenomenal rarity to find a good word for missionaries from either of these sources. Our secular papers, read by millions of people, and our politicians, listened to by multitudes with profound attention, have generally joined in wanton and reckless disparagement of missionaries. The tide is slowly turning, and the missionary will be one day reckoned the only true pioneer of civilization.

A WONDERFUL RELIC.

One of the most extraordinary as well as most precious and beautiful of archæological relics in England has just been presented to the public by an accomplished and learned clergyman. Canon Greenwell, of Durham Cathedral, has just finished the curious task of piecing together the coffin of St. Cuthbert. The shrine of the great Saxon saint was despoiled by the commissioners of Henry the Eighth over three hundred years ago, and the body, which was found to be intact, was reburied in its original coffin in the nave of the church. In 1827 it was again dug up by Dean Hall, who was anxious to verify the condition of the body. On this occasion the outer coffin was broken up and thrown aside. The fragments were, however, eventually saved. They have for many years been preserved in the Episcopal Library. Canon Greenwell has now put these hundreds of pieces together, with the result that it is now possible to decipher rough drawings representing St. Cuthbert, the four Evangelists, the Virgin and Child, St. Martin, the Archangel and the Crucifixion, which were rudely but deeply carved upon this interesting relic of Saxon art in the year A. D. 860. Thus we have the privilege of seeing in a restored shape a relic of pathetic interest belonging to the Christian history of this country more than a thousand years ago.

PERSONALIA.

Brother Remfrey Hunt has returned to England after the great privilege of visiting the Chattanooga Convention. He will now tell us much about China. Brother Arnold has started for China, with Sister Arnold and the children. Brother Romig has begun an evangelistic campaign, starting the work in Chester. About his excellent beginning I shall have the pleasure of saying something as results come forth shortly. W. DURBAN.

New York Letter.

Christmas has come and gone, and the New Year of grace is here! However many hardships may have come to us in the course of the old year, the Christmas love and good cheer seem always to renew the youth of men and prepare us to say farewell to the old year as to a friend, and also to start us into the unknown of the new one with gladness and hope. This is pre-eminently true of the Christmastide in New York City, for hundreds of the rich vie with each other in substantial expressions of good-will to the poor. Every grade of the poor, from the wee tot in the cradle to the aged and infirm, is in the thought of the generous rich, and thousands of the city's poor rejoice and sing for joy on Christmas Day, if on no other in all the year. To the reflective Christian the source of this generous disposition on the part of the rich is indeed beautiful. While it may be that some give to have praise of men, the origin of the Christmas custom of presenting gifts of friendship and good-will is found in the heart of God, who freely gave us life and salvation in giving us the Babe of Bethlehem. The Christmas time always leads us to think of the Better New York, and brings before us the fact that there is much more Christianity in New York than is usually credited to her. If one will but look, he will find genuine evidences of Christianity on every hand in this city, and is it not time that New York had credit for the great good she is doing because of the Christian spirit in her?

Dr. Edward B. Coe, senior pastor of the Collegiate Church in this city, has just resigned his charge of the congregation at Fifth Ave. and 48th St., in order to devote his whole time to the oversight of the collegiate parish and the other duties of senior pastor. The Collegiate Church polity is somewhat peculiar. It embraces four large churches and five chapels and a large number of schools and other public institutions. The church is "Reformed" in doctrine and consequently not unlike the Presbyterians in teachings. In the collegiate corportion the senior minister assumes duties somewhat similar to those of a bishop having upon him the care of all the churches. Besides its educational and religious duties this corporation also has great financial interests, being one of the wealthiest church corporations in America, perhaps the richest, except old Trinity at the head of Wall St. on Broadway. The Collegiate Reformed Church is the oldest church in this city, having been organized in 1628 and chartered in 1696. The four churches and five chapels have ten members on its ministerial staff. The consistory consists of twelve deacons, one half of whom are chosen every year. This governing body has called in Dr. Coe's stead the Rev. Dr. Donald Sage McKay, of Newark, N. J., "who is one of the most called ministers" in the country. It is reported that he has refused twelve calls to important pulpits within the last year. He appeared to have been one of the most favorably considered men, as successor to Dr. Hall in the Fifth Ave. Presbyterian Church, until he was called to follow Dr. Coe.

The remarkable exhibition of four hundred pictures illustrating the life of our Lord, being displayed at the American Art Galleries in this city, has called forth the warmest praise from many ministers and others. Here is part of a letter from Dr. Lyman Abbott:

The spiritual and religious quality of your pictures has so impressed me that I wish they might be open to the public on Sunday, as my son tells me they were in Paris. I do not know whether the American Art Galleries are open on Sunday afternoon, but I make this suggestion, believing that a few hours spent before the pictures on Sunday would be of the greatest benefit to a large number of people. I am prompted to write because, as you know, the Sunday opening of picture galleries in this country is a debatable question, some very good and sincere people objecting on the ground that the public exhibition of pictures is not suitable on Sunday. I think otherwise, and am always glad to see the right sort of picture galleries open on that day.

As a result the exhibition has been open on Lord's day afternoons and large numbers have been in attendance.

The uniting of weak down-town churches goes on. Not long since the Ephiphany Baptist Church at Madison Ave. and 64th St. absorbed the Trinity Baptist in East 55th St. Dr. J. W. Putnam of the latter accepted a call in the West, and 131 members go into the Ephiphany Church under the pastoral care of Dr. H. L. Jones. The financial weakness of the Trinity Church is the immediate cause of this union.

Recently, also, the New York Presbyterian Church at 131st St. and the 13th St. Presbyterian Church arranged to unite and form one congregation of the two. Dr. John R. Paxton, of the former congregation, has resigned his charge on account of failing health, and so the new church has called the Rev. W. D. Buchanan, the pastor of the 13th St. Church, to serve them. It is sad to think retrenchment of this is necessary while the population around these weak and dying churches is not diminished, but is continually on the increase. Verily, we have not solved the problem of city evangelization.

Persian Letter.

DR. J. H. GARRISON, Editor-in-Chief of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A.—

Dear Brother: In reply to your kind letter a year ago in September, I have then expressed to you my heartfelt gratitude and thanks for your kind intervention and merciful action in my behalf at the Oskaloosa Convention, 1897, in a letter containing also some information about my work in this field for publication, which evidently failed to reach you, as I did not see anything of it in the dear CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Permit me, therefore, to apologize and to thank you again for that great kindness bestowed upon me then, by which I was enabled to remain in this Persian field for another year to labor for God and suffering humanity in this far-off corner of the ancient world. Through the generous aid of our Iowa brotherhood, our work here in Persia has been continued for another year and I want to thank one and all of the friends, patrons and donors of our Iowa Armenian Mission for the help and assistance they granted us so willingly and cheerfully for the cause of Christ. May the great Captain of our salvation richly bless and reward each and all of them for the good they have done to many souls in this field, and may he make their noble Christian hearts ready and willing to attempt and accomplish greater things in the future at home and abroad in his name and for his sake, who loved us so much!

All my friends will remember very well that I was sent at first to establish a Christian Mission in Aroomia, and I have done so; but last year our mission was transferred to Salmas, two days journey between Tahriz and Aroomia, where a large Armenian population offers a better field for missionary activity, as no other missionary society is laboring at present in this important field and we shall have no denominational controversy here as in in other parts of the ancient world is unfortunately the case. Salmas being so near to bleeding Armenia, separated only by a chain of lofty mountains; we have in this field a large number of Armenian fugitives, with many orphan children whose parents have been cruelly slaughtered by the Turkish soldiers add their own Kurdish neighbors in the great massacres of 1896, and even last year the work of devastation and modern vandalism was continued in that unfortunate country before the eyes of the mighty Christian nations of Europe. I gathered at once some of the destitute and orphanized children —boys and girls—and we had a good work of Christian philanthropy, of which the Rev. Dr. G. D. Mathews, general secretary of the Presbyterian Alliance, gave the following testimonial of his visit in Salmas last year: "A home for Armenian orphans and the children of penniless refugees must awaken sympathy and tenderness in the heart of each one that hears of it. Such a home has been established in the village of Kalassar, and which under the efficient supervision of Mr. Baghdasarian and family promises to be a great blessing to many a homeless, friendless, helpless child. The buildings seem well adapted to the object. The number of inmates has been reduced owing to recent troubles in the district, but now that order has been restored there are already many applicants for admissian. I earnestly trust that the most sanguine hopes of its benevolent promoters may be abundantly realized and that the Kalassar Home may receive the prayerful remembrance and support to which it is entitled." There was great hope that the great signatory powers of Europe, led by the famous Treaty of Berlin, would at least make some effort to obtain a better treatment of the Armenians by the Sultan after so much bloodshed and horrors as we have witnessed, and all the fugitives from Armenia would be allowed to return home, but unfortunately nothing was done and the situation of these poor refugees here in Salmas is this year even worse than it really was last year. Because a terrible famine began to prevail now in this part of Persia owing to bad harvest, and while the whole native population has to buy wheat at high prices (the bushel rising from 20 cents to one dollar), the poor refugees are starving, having no means to depend on in this terrible time of general need. Visiting these poor people in the villages of Salmas last week, I made a list of the most suffering and found out that 1,300 souls are completely deprived of all means of sustenance, at the mercy of sure starvation unless help reaches them from somewhere. Terrible as the situation now is, the distress not only shows no sign of abating, but will certainly be far greater in this winter, already at our doors, when the famine will have for its prey a population already impoverished and exhausted by continued oppressions and robbery which are every-day occurences here in Persia. I am doing all I can to obtain help for both the refugees as well as the native Armenians in Salmas threatened by the formidable enemy of mankind—the famine.

I wrote to Dr. H. O. Breeden, I. N. McCash and Bro. W. W. Williams, members of our Iowa Armenian Mission Board, in behalf of poor people and I hope and trust all our brethren and sisters in the United States by reading these lines in our beloved CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will surely take to their noble Christian hearts my earnest appeal to help and enable me, their brother, only and own missionary in Persia to "visit the orphans and widows in their affliction" in these terrible times of need and "to strengthen the things which remain that is rerdy to die" in this field of missionary labor and activity. All contributions for this good and worthy purpose

Feeding the Fire.

The most powerful engine must stop if the fires are not fed. Man is the most wonderful piece of machinery in the world, yet no matter how strong and well-made his bodily frame may be, if the fire of life within him is not constantly fed his limbs and muscles become powerless and useless.

The reason men become helpless and diseased is because the food they eat, which is the fuel of life, is not properly digested and appropriated by the stomach and nutritive organs. It is not completely transformed into the strength and working power which is to man what steam is to the engine.

That wonderful power-making "Golden Medical Discovery," invented by Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y., imbues the human digestive juices and blood-making glands with capacity to extract abundant nourishment from the food. It builds up organic tissue, nerve fiber, hard muscular flesh and working force. It gives a man steam.

What it did for Mr. F. S. Hughes, of Junction, Hunterdon Co., N. J., is given in his own words. He writes: "I received your kind letter, and in reply would say that mine was a bad case of kidney and liver trouble, and that six bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and four bottles of little 'Pellets' effected a complete cure. It is well known that almost every engineer is troubled more or less with kidney trouble, especially on our fast express trains. I run one hundred and forty-four miles on these trains every day in the week, and have had no return of the trouble since taking the remedies, nearly three years ago."

may be sent to Bro. W. W. Williams, treasurer of our Iowa Armenian Mission, central office, 206 W. Fourth Street, DesMoines, Ia., and may the Lord help, bless and enable us all to do our duty at this time, is my ardent prayer. Yours in fraternal love and esteem,

MIHRAN BAGHDASARIAN,
Missionary of the Disciples of Christ in Persia.

The Professor Sleeps.

Professor James B. Crane was born at Mentz, Cayuga county, N. Y., on the 22nd day of September, 1822, and died suddenly of apoplexy at his home at Waynesboro, Va., on the 18th day of October, 1898.

When 14 years of age he united with the Church of Disciples at Throopsville, in Cayuga county. Meetings were held there by Alexander Campbell, Dr. Silas E. Shepherd, Erastus Lathrop and Bro. Benedict; so that the young man became thoroughly instructed in the great principles which those men advanced and from them received a spirit and inspiration which made him an ardent Disciple until his death.

In 1842 he moved to Paw Paw, Mich., where there were a number of other members from the Throopsville Church, and united with the little congregation which they had organized.

A few years later he and his wife, Mrs. Charlotte R. Crane, went to Hiram to attend the Eclectic Institute, and from there they went to Kentucky and took charge of the Kentucky Female College and Highland Institute.

In 1860 they returned to Paw Paw, and for two years had charge of the Union School in that place, where the writer first made their acquaintance and attended their school.

As a teacher he was thorough and genial, and possessed remarkable powers for arousing the noblest ambitions in his students, and winning their highest admiration and love. The young men felt that he was a father to them, and he gave freely of his out-of-school time to consult and advise with them in regard to their future lives and how to acquire the success for which they hoped. While he was teaching there he was a strong helper in a protracted meeting held by Bro. Wilcox, who was then pastor of the church. Many of the students and others of the young people in the town were converts at the meeting, and the refining and strengthening influences of the pastor and professor upon that large company of young people is felt for good until this day, wherever they have gone.

A fine church was built, and the counsel and subscriptions of the Professor and his family were great aids to the struggling congregation. He was peculiarly entertaining in private conversation and was ever entertaining young Disciples with the history and anecdotes of our prominent preachers. Michigan was a little north of the line along which the people of Ohio and Indiana moved to the West, so that not many of the early preachers visited the state.

The writer recalls Peter T. Russell, Timothy J. Newcomb, Benjamin Franklin and A. S. Hayden as preachers from other states who visited Paw Paw before 1860, and from them learned much concerning their worthy compeers, Thomas and Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott, D. S. Burnet, William Hayden, Harrison Jones, Dr. Hopson and many others.

The generation of to-day will never comprehend the inspiration and strength there was in those names as their fearless struggles for religious liberty and the "Word of God" were recounted by firesides 40 years ago. America will never see a greater generation of men and women than that which was in action from 1850 to 1880; they were pioneers in their wild settlements, and they were equally daring pioneers in the undeveloped fields of the highest and noblest civil and religious freedom.

The Professor came to us full of reminiscences and history of many of those men whom he had personally met, and it was an abiding pleasure to sit at his feet and listen as in his charming and learned way he analyzed and gave the peculiarities and powers of those preachers and often enlivened the scene by reciting striking instances of their tact, or some brilliant flashes of their wit, until the listener felt that he knew the men described. He regarded Dr. Hopson as our most polished pulpit orator.

In 1860 two rising men had impressed the professor very deeply; they were Isaac Errett, then residing at Ionia, Mich., and James A. Garfield, then president of Hiram Institute. And during that fall the professor said to the writer, "Garfield has made up his mind to be President of the United States."

He lived to see James A. Garfield make his name immortal and honor the death of a President with the exalted and undying glory of a great Christian spirit. He saw Isaac Errett, pure, strong and peerless, rising to lead the thought and culture of his people as they were having an increase of a million adherents with all the attendant increase in wealth, schools, missions, literature and power, and at last, while yet holding the freshness of youth and crowned with the wisdom of age, falling into beautiful sleep, and leaving a name and a memory which will be loved and cherished by his people forever.

In the fall of 1861 Bro. Errett was called to dedicate the church, but having been to Cincinnati to attend a convention, and having missed a train, he did not reach the church until evening when, attended by Bro. Wilcox and the Professor, and with a cape thrown gracefully over his shoulder, he walked down the chuch aisle to the platform, and turning his majestic form and expressive face to see the audience for a moment, he looked the orator and was at once recognized as a "master of assemblies," "a prince in Israel." He spoke that evening on the subject, "What Think Ye of Christ?"

The speaker was at his best, and as he stood upon the platform his fine physique never appeared more majestic and commanding, and he was full of the fire and logic and eloquence of the orator. In those days he was often vivid and dramatic in his descriptions and seemed to have a master's command of those deep and subtle emotions which will not be put upon paper. On that occasion he seemed to be particularly happy and all that was loftiest and deepest in his nature seemed aroused to make an impressive and splendid effort. The freedom of his overflowing nature had not been curbed by the calmness and precision of the editorial rooms.

As he drew to his close he rose to a great height in oratory in describing the dying moments of Daniel Webster and thrilled the audience as he recited the cry of that mighty spirit struggling to be free—"Thy rod and thy staff are what I want!"

Many years have passed since, but that scene and description rise as clearly and distinctly before me as they did on that November night. A meeting of several days followed, during which time he made his home with the Professor, and where the writer was often kindly permitted to hear the conversation of Bro. Errett, Bro. Wilcox and the Professor in regard to the wonderful achievements which the future held in store for their people.

It was a rare blessing to a country boy to have fall upon his pathway the light of three such inspiring lives.

After the close of the school the Professor spent several years in preaching, at which he made a fine success. He had an easy and pleasing delivery and was scholarly, strong, impressive and fearless in declaring the truth.

For several years before his death he had been practicing medicine, but to his old students he will ever remain the Professor. He has fallen into that sleep which God gives to his beloved, and we stand again before the solemn query of the ages: "Your fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live forever?"

bosses many a body and burdens many a mind. You can't enjoy the food you like because you are bilious. You take all sorts of precautions, and yet the bilious attack leaps on you like a tiger from ambush. You know the feeling! The blood seeming on fire with a dull heat; the boring pains in the eyes; the head seeming to open and shut; the horrible nausea. You know the irritability which precedes and the languor that follows the attack. It's miserable, isn't it? Why not cure the trouble? There's a pill that will cure biliousness. Dr. J. C. AYER'S PILLS are an acknowledged specific for this derangement.

A. Swanger, Texarkana, Tex., writes: "For fifteen years I have used Ayer's Pills, and find them very effective in bilious complaints. I have yet to see the case where they have failed to cure."

If You are Bilious DO NOT FAIL TO Try AYER'S PILLS

"Golden Expectations."

The historian, Justin Winsor, in his Life of Christopher Columbus, speaks of the great explorer as "a speculator who overstepped them all in audacious vision and golden expectations." He saw what no other man saw and expected what no other man expected. What he saw was an "audacious vision" and what he expected was "golden expectations." Like Columbus the child of God must have "audacious visions," else he will not "see the King in his beauty, or behold the land that is very far off." The Christian must have before him continually "golden expectations," else he will not "sow beside all waters," or "see the effect of righteousness, quietness and assurance forever."

This is the year of "golden expectations" for the Disciples of Christ. Not many of those who helped to organize the American Christian Missionary Society in 1849 will be present in Cincinnati in 1899. Not many of those who have fought the battles for organized missionary work will be present. A new generation is at the front. New names fill the long lists of workers and contributors. Let us hope that those who will contribute to the interest of the occasion of their treasures of mind, heart and purse may be those who possess "clear minds, pure hearts, true faith and ready hands;" and that the churches which they in any way or degree represent shall be large-thoughted churches; "churches which believe in God and assert God's truth, which believe that God's opinions should be our opinions; churches whose theology is axiomatic and which push self-evident truths; churches which eschew speculation and unworkable hypotheses, and put their strength into the affirmation of essentials which ask no more questions than they can answer; churches which strike at all things that debauch public sentiment, which touch the entire life of the community, which never discuss great and living issues in a whisper, but openly; churches which refuse to be controlled by gold, submitting only to the rule of principle; churches which are up to God in their aims and plans, and not behind God; churches which believe in real Christians and not in nominal Chistians, which believe in men and women with the kingdom of heaven built into them; churches which are pillars of fire in dark places, which preach a full salvation through Jesus Christ; churches which, under God, lead in truth and duty."

If such shall be at the front, "audacious visions" will be realized and "golden expectations" will crown the work of the "Jubilee Year."

Iowa Letter.

I am holding a meeting in Anita, Cass County, Iowa. C. A. Lockhart, brother of President Clinton Lockhart, of Christian University, Canton, Mo., is pastor here. Below is a letter received by us and my answer thereto. Without a word of discussion we each wrote an answer and have forwarded them to our querist. Before sending we compared our answers and were happy to find them in perfect harmony. It is not generally known and some will not believed it, but I can tell of more than one church and of more than one preacher (the letter below was not written by a preacher) in proud Iowa that faces Satan and the saloon in the wilderness of temptation. Which is easier, the lot of the ancient martyrs or that of the modern witness for Christ? One gave his body to be burned at the stake, the other gives his soul and his heart to burn in hotter fires from fagots all but quenchless:

———, IA., Dec. 20, 1898.

A. M. HAGGARD AND C. A. LOCKHART, Anita, Ia.—Dear Brethren: I write you for your opinion on the matter which I will state as follows: This county has circulated a petition for a saloon and the churches have been silent on the matter until the petitioners had the required per cent. and petition was filed with the auditor. Then the churches took the matter up and are trying to defeat it. In the first place they got out a circular with all the names of the signers thereon and scattered them all over our county. Now we have kept out of it as much as possible, simply because it was too late when they commenced the fight, we thinking it only hurtful to the cause by prejudicing the people against the church and keeping them away. As you probably know, this is a free whiskey town, as it is sold here in at least five or six places. It has aroused a great feeling against the churches here by the signers. Yesterday they took the matter up and circulated a petition to raise money for our church and raised a considerable amount. They also say they will help build us a church. Now do you think it right to go ahead and accept this money? They have done this of their own free will. I believe we could go ahead and build now; the other churches have always done what they could to keep us down and we were about done up.

Now I want you to understand that we are not advocating a saloon. But can we do more for the cause by accepting this offering, which we could not have gotten under any other circumstances, or should we decline to accept it and go down? I look at it in this light: That it is money that we could get under no other circumstances, and that it would give us a standing among outside people that we could not get in any other way; and it will be the means of getting many into the church that we could never have touched. Now this donation is not confined to those only who signed the petition; many others have subscribed and a good many who have helped the other churches, but say they will not help them any more. Please answer me at once.

Yours for the cause of Christ,

ANITA, IA., Dec. 21, 1898.

——— Dear Brother: Your letter of Dec. 20th is before me. Since it was written to both of us, Bro. Lockhart and I, without discussing it, are writing answers which we will compare before sending to you. Taking your candid letter as my only basis of reasoning from the facts in the case—in the absence of personal investigation on the ground where this interesting drama is transpiring—I am perfectly clear in my own mind. I have no doubts on the points of advice which follow:

(1) You must not take that money as it is now offered. The tender of it is so clothed with conditions and circumstances that the taking of the money will do great harm to you as individuals and as a church, besides the harm done to all our Iowa churches and the cause of reform everywhere. Let me specify a few things which will be clear to you all: (a) In the first stages of this drama between the petitioners and the churches, you held aloof because the churches blundered in attacking an evil. They were on the right side of the question but were foolish or unwise in their attack. This was their great fault as you understand it (I cannot form a judgment of my own at this distance and with meager facts, hence I will assume that you are correct). Because of this fault you took no part with them in the attack—you stood neutral or at least tried hard to do so. Now in the latter stage of this same drama the petitioners—those on the wrong side of the real question at issue—are hotly attacking the churches—those on the right side of the real question. It is a very doubtful thing, but let me suppose it and for argument's sake grant it, viz., that this attack is wholly free from folly and blunders. Now since you started out to be neutral, it is at least reasonable to expect you to continue that neutrality. But how can you do so, if you take this money? (b) Your neutrality in the first stage was interpreted by the petitioners as putting you far from the other churches and very near the petitioners. You do not mean itso, but the fact is that the men on the wrong side so looked at it. Why not this time shape your neutrality so that the interpretation will fall in favor of the blundering right side and against the wrong? This would be plausible proof that your neutrality was honest in purpose and meant to be evenly balanced. But how can you do this and take the money under present conditions?

(2) This will involve some serious difficulties, but none insurmountable. (a) Such a course to forget and forgive. It means doing good to those churches which have spitefully treated you. But to meet such a hard place in the spirit of Christ brings a blessing from God (Matt. 5:43-45). (b) Such neutrality probably (not certainly) means the loss of large funds much needed for a church house. And how much you need a house of your own no one knows better than I. But if at last the house is interpreted as standing for wrong and not for right, what real good is it? No matter how many influential members you get with it, will God stand by it and prosper it? (c) Such a course involves the apparent downfall (certain downfall some of you think) of your congregation. This is the nick of time. Take this money and live, or refuse it and die. That is the way it looks to some of you and to everybody outside. You stand at the parting of the ways. You have been led into a wilderness to be tempted as was Jesus. There are just two roads before you. These lead into eternity. The heroes of the ages have stood on the very same spot. Your feet are now in their tracks. One road is dark and impenetrable to human eyes. The other is light. Those choosing the dark way must walk, not by sight, but by faith. Those choosing the apparently light way must walk by sight, not by faith. Abraham and Moses, Paul and the martyrs, Luther and the reformers, Campbell and our pioneer heroes, chose the way of faith. They counted not the cost. It leads to light eternal. He that saveth his life or his church shall lose it and he that loseth his life or his church for my sake shall find it. I must advise you to walk by faith.

(3) If I were on the ground and could I meet the citizens and set before them our attidue against the greatest curse of the age—the rum power—I think I could so change the complications that (a) some of that money (not all) would be still offered and (b) that the taking of it would not compromise the cause of Christ. May God's good providence encompass and guide you in this critical hour.

Yours for faith in Christ and right.

Brain-Workers Should Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. C. A. GOODMAN, St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have used it for several years, with especially good results in nervous prostration, the result of mental efforts; also in sleepless condition of brain-workers."

A GOOD PRACTICE.

If You Want a Good Appetite and Perfect Digestion.

After each meal dissolve one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in the mouth and, mingling with the food, they constitute a perfect digestive, absolutely safe for the most sensitive stomach.

They digest the food before it has time to ferment, thus preventing the formation of gas and keeping the blood pure and free from the poisonous products of fermented, half-digested food.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets make the complexion clear by keeping the blood pure.

They increase flesh by digesting flesh-forming foods.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the only remedy designed especially for the cure of stomach troubles and nothing else.

One disease, one remedy, the successful physician of today is the specialist, the successful medicine is the medicine prepared especially for one disease.

A whole package taken at one time would not hurt you, but would simply be a waste of good material.

Over six thousand men and women in the state of Michigan alone have been cured of indigestion and dyspesia by the use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Sold by all druggists at 50 cents per package.

Minnesota Letter.

Merry Christmas and a happy New Year to all readers! Bro. C. M. McCurdy started to Litchfield this morning. Bro. Merredith is to lead the singing. The state board does not pay his expenses, as our singers are "laid off" on account of finances. Bro. McCurdy has held two meetings prior to this. One at Olivia and and at Eden Valley. Twenty additions at Eden Valley and the church is in fine condition.

Hurrah for Austin! 37 to date and interest and attention increasing. Bro. Muller is well liked and his work and earnestness is gaining the day. They dedicate next Lord's day. They organized an Endeavor Society Christmas day with 23 active members. Brethren, rejoice over their success and pray for their further prosperity.

Notices have been sent to all churches who have made no response to former letters. Churches, pastors, missionary secretaries, we must have money! The $500 fund is coming in, but where are the churches? Never was time so opportune, never such numbers of open doors as now.

A. D. Harmon goes to David City, Neb., Thursday to dedicate the church there. He organized this church some five years ago.

I expect to be present at Austin to rejoice and dedicate with them Lord's day. All are interested in the work.

If all moneys due up to date were in these men could be retained in Minnesota and Bro. Greggs brought back.

W. O. King, of Garden City has accepted the work at Cleveland.

H. Goodacre will begin a meeting soon at Redwood Falls, with his own church. R. A. Givens, now with Bro. Miller at Austin, will sing for him.

$100,000 for Home Mission this Jubilee Year means that Minnesota must keep busy.

Don't fail to remit at once if you are behind. Remit all moneys to treasurer.

The "Dalkullan."

The characteristic tall blonde of the Northern races is illustrated in another column by a "Dalkullan," or native of Dalarne, a mountainous interior district of Sweden, where the old fashions and costumes are still preserved.

The two great silver buttons fastening the flowing collar, the brooches at the throat and bow, the belt clasp and other jewelry are silver heirlooms; the apron is homespun, in brilliant colors, similar to a Roman scarf. Sweden has given to us Jenny Lind, Nillson and other sweet singers. We send annually to her many thousand "American Singers," silent but useful.

China Letter.

I find this old city a very interesting study. In the eyes of the Chinese there is but one more important city in all the "Middle Kingdom." That is Pekin, the capital. When Columbus was planning his voyage of discovery, Nankin had been the capital of China for over 100 years and one of her most historic dynasties was upon the throne. In 1421 the capital was changed to Pekin, and although the great Taiping rebellion desolated the city by thousands of homes and hundred thousands of lives, yet everywhere can be seen the decaying splendor of the "Ming Dynasty." Their tombs still have the approaches guarded by life-size stone horses, lions, camels, elephants and men, standing in grim silence upon the plains. On approaching the city from the interior, one rides under stone archways inscribed, "Officials and teachers must dismount here."

In 1850, near Canton, the Taiping rebellion broke out. Its leaders had learned a little of Christianity, and influenced by dreams, believed that they were called of God to establish Christianity in the empire by force of arms. They gained rapidly in members and began moving north until early in 1853 they captured Nankin and made it their capital. Before they came the city was filled with comfortable Chinese homes and a large population lived just outside her walls. Now, while the walls are only 30 miles in circumference, I ride nearly four miles from the wharf within the city walls before I reach the city. While the Taipings ruled a reign of terror surpassing the French Revolution existed. Women and children were murdered or mutilated by soldiers to decide wagers. In 11 years a city of one million was reduced to a few hundred thousand. Old men still shudder as they recall the deeds of those days done by merciless men in the name of Jesus Christ. The other day a man stepped into the Methodist hospital with a pad over his throat which on being removed disclosed a hole into the thorax made by the spear of a Taiping soldier.

Now another crusade in the name of Jesus Christ is taking Nankin, "not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." Hardly had the Taipings vacated the city when the advance guard of Christianity entered. Now the Quakers, Second Adventists, Presbyterians, Methodists and Churches of Christ are represented by about 40 workers, three hospitals, one university, several schools, and many chapels are sustained. The Church of Christ entered its walls in 1886 in the person of Dr. W. E. Macklin, and for three years found its home in a Buddhist temple which has been rented in part almost continually since by missionaries. F. E. Meigs and E. T. Williams with their wives followed and soon a hospital, chapels and schools were opened. In 1892 Mrs. Williams, who was a daughter of Pres. Loos, of Kentucky University, laid down her life for those whom she came to save. The Christian Girls' School, over which Miss Lyon presides so well, assisted by Miss Kelley is a memorial erected to her memory. Very often do the missionaries recall the impressions made by that life. Dr. Buchart was in the mission four years, then went on into the interior to establish at Lu Cheo fu another central station. Five years ago E. T. Williams withdrew from work and no one was left to systematically evangelize. Frank Garrett and wife, who arrived in 1896, are now doing most acceptably this important work. Last May Bro. Saw, who had carried on the work at Chu Cheo, was stricken with typhus fever while attending the annual conference here and died within a week. Mrs. Saw now carries on the evangelistic work among the women here. Wherever she goes "Saw Semu" is respected and loved.

The results are seen in 50 boys and girls in the schools, the latter of whom being entirely Christians, children of or engaged to Christians. They are seen in the hundreds healed of diseases, but most of all can one trace the results in those who, the poor or beggars, "have the gospel preached to them," not only in the city, but in a score of surrounding villages. The church roll numbers 150 native Christians, some weak, some strong. One beggar, the sole of whose foot was a raw ulcer, was picked up and cared for and became a Christian. He has won a score more since. When Bro. Saw was sick with the malignant typhus fever another native Christian watched over him day and night. Surely, the word that is going forth from his mouth is not returning unto him void.

1. A lack of proper organization. Members are brought into these churches and left to look after themselves. If they are healthy and vigorous they may live and become, in time, useful members; if not, they soon grow discouraged and go back into their old life again. The want of proper organization breeds confusion in churches and allows things to run at "loose ends," so to speak. In such churches every one seems to be "out on his own hook." There is no union of forces, or concert of action; and on this account the energies of the church are spent without accomplishing very much.

Every church needs a good head to organize and direct its forces. This head should consist of a good preacher and board of other officers who would come together, at least monthly, to study out plans and how to execute them for the utilizing of all the power in the church. They should consider in detail the finances of the church; the lives of the members from the least to the greatest—watching for their souls as those who must give account to God—the Sunday-school and its wants; the Endeavor Society; Aid Society and Missionary Society—how to make them bring the greatest results for the cause of the Master. If such organizations do not exist in the church they should see to it that they are established just as soon as possible. A place for every one and every one in his place is as essential to success in church as in anything else.

2. A kind of selfish idea that dominates some churches. Nearly everything that is done is done with a selfish object in view. They are not at all inclined to take stock in any enterprise unless they can see how it is in the end going to bring some good directly to their church or themselves. They invariably act upon the principle of getting They live within themselves and for themselves. Such people never know much about the cause of Christ beyond their own neighborhood. If you were to talk to them about foreign missions they couldn't tell you whether China was on the Continent of America or not. A church that does not lay aside this selfishness and reach out its arms to save the lost and perishing can not prosper. God will not allow it to prosper, because he cannot.

3. A lack of industry upon the part of the members. The successful business man studies how he can make the very most out of his time and resources to advance his business and make it prosperous. He watches all the corners, is at it late and early that he may produce the greatest possible results. Not so with the membership of some churches. They put neither mind, time nor energy into that which pertains to the church. In one word, they are lazy Christians, and act in everything they attempt to do, in the department of religion, as if they had been "born tired." I know members of some churches, who show considerable action in their business if even one dollar is at stake, but who have so little energy when it comes to church work that you have to fix your eye on some object beyond them to determine whether they are moving or not. In such churches dilapidation is written all over the meeting house, inside and out, and over their meetings, finances and even the membership. Dilapidation stares you in the face, no matter which way you turn. What did you say was the cause of this condition of things? RELIGIOUS LAZINESS.

4. Members tryiny to fill places they are not cut out for. There are too many members in some churches that want to be teachers of religion, and be at the head of affairs, who are hardly fit to fill the place of common soldiers in the ranks. This mistake of members either getting into or constantly trying to get into places they were never intended for in the church is one of the most serious drawbacks many churches have to contend with. When any member of a church finds his proper sphere and there abides, and there continues to work for the Master, the church will prosper, and not until then, as it should.

5. Members not pulling together. I once saw a team of horses with a cord of wood on a wagon stuck in the mud. They were amply able to pull it out, but could not, simply because when one would pull the other would not. Another man hitched onto the load with a span of horses that were no stronger than the ones which could not pull it out, and the wagon moved forward at the first effort, because they pulled in concert. Members of the church must be of the same mind and of the same judgment and pull together for Christ, or the cause will not move forward.

6. And lastly, some churches do not succeed because the members lack religion. When I say they lack religion I mean they are not pious and devoted. They are carnal and worldly minded. They do not love to pray and worship God. They have made no effort to cultivate their hearts and minds by studying the Word of God and religious books and papers. All you can say of them religiously is that they are members of the church. No one would ever dream of their being Christians by any piety seen in their lives. The worldly man sets them down as belonging to his class, notwithstanding that he may know they are church members. Now, flesh and blood and bones will never make a successful church. Men's spiritual natures must be touched and consecrated to God within their bodies, if they would become a force to move the world around them and lead the church to any considerable degree of success. H. T. MORRISON.

Our Colleges in Missouri.

On account of division of sentiment, or what was just as great a hindrance, a misapprehension of sentiment, the colleges of the Christian Church in this state have for many years been sadly languishing. A sufficient reason for this condition of things has never been apparent to an unpartisan observer. Missouri is a large state, and the Disciples in Missouri are a great people. There is certainly abundant room for both orphan schools, while there are means and patronage for many colleges; and all the while the need of them all has daily become more patent and pressing. But the bugbear of divided sentiment, supposed to be based on local interests or private policies, has restrained liberality until the very life of our colleges came to be a serious question. Careful inquiry outside of immediate college circles revealed generally a common attitude among thinking men throughout the state; but how and when would this will of the great majority find free and easy expression? If it should not find expression, how could right prevail, and a precious cause be rescued from imminent peril?

Only a peaceful conference could unlock these mysteries and disclose a remedy. In the very nature of things, taking account of the character and disposition of the leading actors, the evil could be only a misunderstanding. Chiefly, no doubt, wrong impressions were fixed in the minds of both sides of a controversy between the friends of Christian University at Canton and those of the Bible College at Columbia. The former supposed the College at Columbia to be intended to become a seminary to educate men for the ministry, to which at present nearly the whole state is opposed; while the latter, no doubt, thought the friends of Christian University to be arrayed against the work at Columbia even with State University students. Canton people and thousands of others throughout the state are ready to approve and aid the Bible College at Columbia if it devote its energies simply to giving instruction to State University students after the manner of the Ann Arbor Bible Chairs. The announcement of this purpose in the conference immediately put at rest the minds of the majority; and a prompt avowal of favor by the Canton people to such a work removed the last vestige of distrust. Thus a complete understanding was reached, and a prompt exchange of support was expressed. Now it makes no difference how the wrong impressions were made; they are settled. Let no reckless tongue or pen disturb their long rest. These colleges are all vital to the work of the church, and let every heart and hand unite to make them worthy of a numerous and noble-hearted brotherhood. Our peace is precious; let it be sealed with love and labor.

At present the payment of the debt on the Fulton Orphan School and the erection of a college building at Columbia are sincerely and earnestly commended to the favor of liberal people, and an endowment fund of $100,000 for Christian University will be diligently sought by the executive committee appointod by the conference. In this work the committee are encouraged by the prompt subscription of $1,000 by the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Their first effort will be to raise several thousands of dollars in Canton and Lewis County; and after that they will come confidently to the brethren of other parts of the state to help give assured permanence and strength to an institution that under the most trying circumstances and through many years has brought untold blessings to the church.

If this endowment can be promptly raised, it will instantly inspire the entire brotherhood in the state with a new hope that will give a forward bound to every enterprise in their hands. Schools, missions, church extension and church expansion will feel a thrill of confidence and prospect that will richly reward our generosity. A few gifts of $5,000 to $25,000 would immediately insure the success of the whole work of the Moberly Conference, and place before our colleges an outlook a hundredfold brighter and better than they have ever had in the past. I had confidence in our people to believe that the conference would not fail, as I freely expressed to the Preachers' Meeting at Kansas City a few days before the conference was held. I was not humiliated by the result. I still believe in this brotherhood, and I shall not be disappointed. They have a great plea to maintain, and they will maintain it. God is with them

Have You Tried Swamp-Root?

This Eminent Physician's Great Discovery Promptly Cures all Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid Troubles.

To Prove its Wonderful Merits Every Christian-Evangelist Reader May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Free By Mail.

It is now conceded by eminent scientists that the most important organs of the whole body are the kidneys.

They filter your blood and work away night and day, whether you sleep or are awake.

People are apt to believe that kidney disease is a rather rare disease, but recent discoveries have proven that it is a more common trouble.

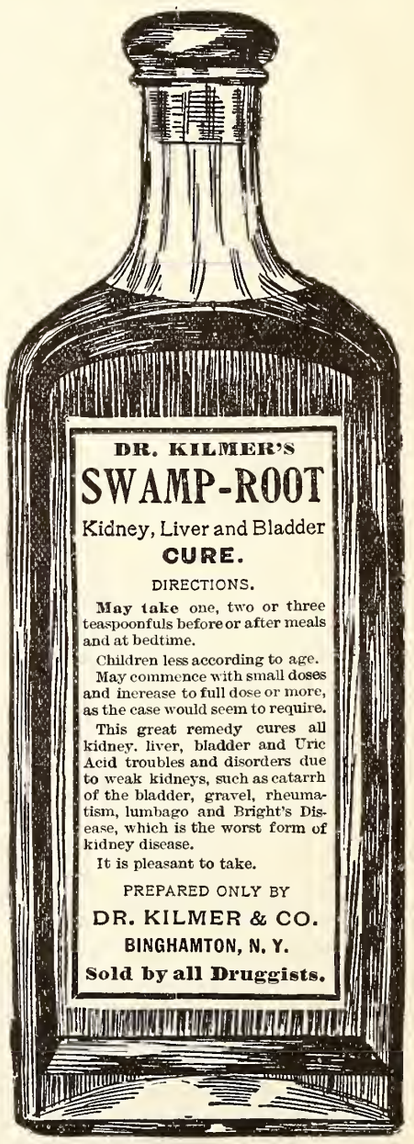
And the proof of this is that most diseases, perhaps 85 per cent, are caused in the beginning by disorders of the kidneys.

BECAUSE they fail to filter your blood.

You cannot be sick if your blood is pure—free from kidney poision and disease-breeding germs.

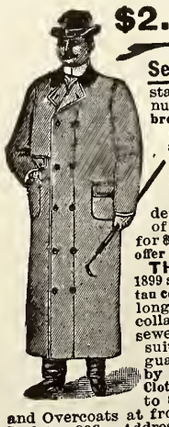
The treatment of some diseases may be delayed without danger, not so with kidney disease.

When your kidneys are not doing their work it will be manifested by pain or dull ache in the back, rhumatic pains, sciatica, sediment in the urine, scanty supply, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and get up during the night, uric acid, sleeplessness, nervousness irritability, sallow, unhealthy complexion, puffy or dark circles under the eyes, loss of energy and ambition.



If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed for twenty-four hours forms a sediment or settling or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

Swamp-Root is a vegetable remedy, the great discovery of Dr. Kilmer (the eminent kidney and bladder specialist) and has truly wonderful restorative powers over the kidneys. It will be found by both men and women just what is needed in all cases of kidney, liver, bladder and uric acid troubles.



Swamp-Root will set your whole system right.

The best proof of this is a trial, and nothing could be fairer than the offer to send a sample bottle of this great remedy and a book telling all about it, both sent absolutely free by mail to any address.

The great discovery, Swamp-Root, is so remarkably successful that our readers are advised to write for a free sample bottle and to kindly mention the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending their addresses to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can get the regular fifty-cent and one dollar bottles at the drug stores.

Samuel Gregg, pastor of the church at Sueur, Minn., writes of the encouraging condition of the cause in that new and growing city, and calls attention to the fact that that place offers exceptional advantages to any seeking in the Northwest for places of business, as physician, merchant, photographer, butcher, or as a farmer. He will be glad to furnish information to any who care for it.

In answer to many letters of inquiry which I have received, the following facts about Pea Ridge may be stated for the benefit of those seeking homes. Benton county is in the northwest corner of Arkansas. Three railroads run through the county, the nearest being five miles from Pea Ridge. The Mt. Vernon Normal College, an undenominational school, is located here. The town has Baptist, Christian and Cumberland Presbyterian Churches. This is the great fruit section of Arkansas and is especially noted for its strawberries and apples. Land is cheap, water plentiful and good, and the climate healthful. I am not a land agent, but a farmer, interested in developing this section by bringing into it the right sort of people. I will be glad to answer further inquiries. T. M. JONES,

Annual Meeting.

Yesterday was our annual meeting for the Christian Church, Centralia, Ill. We had reports of work done during the year. Every department of the work has advanced. We had a roll call of the members, and we had a good response. We now have two good Endeavor Societies, a good Sunday-school, a good prayer-meeting, a good Aid Society, a good Auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. During 1898 we had 88 additions; 52 of these were conversions. We did not lose a member by death. We are now enlarging the house so as to give us better working room. J. H. SMART.

Centralia, Ill., Jan. 2, 1899.

On last Saturday evening, to round out the old year, the members gave the pastor and family a genuine surprise. The rest you know. S.

Bethany's Prospects.

Another legacy has been announced for Bethany College, making at least a dozen on the list now known to have been given for her benefit, with several others that are not yet fully confirmed. The last one comes all the way from Edinburg, Scotland, and, while the exact amount is not yet certainly known, it may be placed somewhere from $25,000 to $50,000. Bethany has many staunch friends all over our country and in the British Provinces. It would not be surprising if many more bequests will be forthcoming; in fact, it ought to be the fashion for every old student and friend of the college to provide something substantial for her before he dies. In the East, to fail to do this for Yale ,Harvard or some other of the older institutions, would almost endanger one's chances for heaven. We need a conscience something like this in favor of our own colleges, and they will always be crippled until we realize it. After studying thoroughly the financial situation, it is my deliberate opinion, based on reliable information, that Bethany has, in present and prospective resources, aside from buildings, equipment, defunct notes, pledges, etc., at least $100,000, and it may go considerably beyond this amount.

Added to this, we have reason to expect much more in course of time, if what is already known to have been bequeathed is any promise of what has not yet been reported to us, or is yet to be given by will for her benefit. Nothing but the grossest kind of mismanagement and pessimism can destroy or cripple her usefulness, so firmly is she intrenched in the affections of our people. At present she is seriously menaced with debts, which are yielding slowly to scanty contributions that are being secured. A number of persons have expressed a desire to do something handsome for Bethany as soon as they can be assured of a stable, settled and efficient policy, that will not be attended by injurious reports as to her future existence. That we have reason to expect such a policy on the part of her management, there is every indication of realizing it from this time forward.

Lack of confidence has done more to injure her usefulness in the last few years than lack of funds; yet it is true that sufficient funds, wisely and economically administered, is bound to bring the desired new era in her time-honored history. J. L. DARSIE.

An Iowa Evangelist's Report.

About seven weeks ago I left Des Moines and visited a few days at Iowa Falls. Here I found my old friend, S. C. Platt, editor of the Sentinel, whom I had not seen for nearly 20 years. He and his wife are both members of the Christian Church. We have several other members there that have identified themselves with other congregations, simply because we have no organization there. One of these served as chairman of the building committee for the Baptists who have just completed a fine church building. We have several influential families in that town that would make a fine beginning for a congregation. What we need is money that would enable us to go in and hold a meeting of eight or ten weeks. This is one of the finest towns in Iowa, and in my judgment one of the most promising fields.

If some man or congregation would donate to the board $500 with which to enter this field it would mean much for the cause. Iowa Falls' natural and picturesque scenery, and its fine water supply, together with its location, insures for it a fine future. It was my pleasure to make a brief call on Bro. Ruby, pastor at Cedar Rapids. I found him busy in his work. The brethren say they have the man they need, and that he and his good wife are much loved and appreciated already by the church.

Nov. 13 the writer began a meeting at Central City, which lasted nearly six weeks. The result of the meeting in the way of additions was, in all, 47. Three of these may not, however, be baptized. The little band there has made a great struggle. Especially Bros. Davis, Anderson, Wilkinson and Dr. Fisher are among the number worthy of special mention. These men carried the principal burden in erecting their new house, which cost $3,000. They worked trusting the Lord, and already he is beginning to reward them in this life for their effort. Why do we not have more men who are willing to use their means for the work of the Lord? Or, if you do not want to give it, loan it unto the Lord. You will never make a safer investment. At the close of the meeting a Bible - school was organized, an Endeavor Society with more than 30 members, and about 16 will read the Bethany C. E. Reading Course this year. While in this meeting the writer visited of afternoons and spoke in the interest of the state work, at Coggen, Albernett and LaFayette. Bro. Murphy has been preaching at the two last-named places during the past year, and has done good work. He is now ready to locate in another field. Bro. Semones, who is just returning from Colorado, will begin work at Albernett and LaFayette the first of January. Bro. F. L. Platt, of Waterloo, has received and accepted a call from Central City and Coggen. Will begin his work with them in January. After closing meeting at Central City the writer visited Oelwein, where Bro. Ross is pastor and doing good work. From there returned and spent Lord's day at Waterloo. Bro. F. L. Platt has done splendid work there the past two years, and has many very warm friends. We wish to see the work at Waterloo soon become one of our strong fields in Iowa. This field is also needing more help from the state. In closing let me urge upon the brethren of Iowa to respond to our secretary, S. B. Denny, in his call for money. We should raise in Iowa this year not less than $5,000 for state work. The writer secured three life memberships in the little congregation at Central City.

There are many in the state who can well afford to take life directorship, and if not a life membership. Am now at home for a few days, but expect soon to begin a meeting at Coggen.

LAGRIPPE CLAIMING VICTIMS.

Several Deaths from the Disease are Reported in London. Timely Warning.

Influenza or LaGrippe has made its reappearance on the continent. Reports from London, England, are of an alarming nature and there are serious apprehensions that it will assume an epidemic form. It is highly probable that the dreadful disease will reach our shores ere long. Westward was its course, when it first spread its sable wings over the New World. It was at that time called by some people "The Eastern Disease," also "The Russian Influenza."

A Swiss herb remedy, called Dr. Peter's Blood Vitaltzer, proved very effective during the fearful epidemic of 1889 and 1890. This valuable remedy not only effected a speedy recovery of people attacked by LaGrippe, but it was found to be a sure preventive against the dreaded disease. Past experience has taught us that we should not wait until the calamity is upon us, but fortify our systems against the enemy by the timely use of Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. The danger is not always over when the disease has apparently left us. There is no ailment which is followed by such serious after-effects as LaGrippe. The patient, apparently cured, will be suddenly seized with heart-failure, rheumatism, pneumonia or other ailment until his condition will become really critical. This is the time when the Blood Vitalizer demonstrates its merit. It not only drives the disease out of the body, but it invigorates and renovates the system. Mr. Thomas Voigt, Mound City, S. Dak., has had some experience in the matter, which he relates as follows: "Last winter my mother became dangerously sick, having caught a terrible cold. The doctors declared that she was suffering with an attack of La Grippe. They succeeded in relieving her somewhat of her ailment, but she was never entirely cured. She experienced extreme weakness, had occasional chills, poor appetite, in fact, her entire system seemed to be out of order. Her condition prompted me to send for a trial box of Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. Now, to our great joy, mother is well again, and that also before the contents of the box was used up. She is now as spry and active as her age can admit. We are very thankful for the results."

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is not handled by druggists, but by special local agents. If there is none in your neighborhood write to Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Dedication at Grape Creek, Ill.

Christmas day was a joyful one for the church at Grape Creek, Ill. It was the occasion of the opening and dedication of the new house of worship just completed by the Christian Church at that place.

The house is located in the midst of the famous Grape Creek coal region of Illinois, said to be the most extensive coal region west of the Allegheny Mountains. Christmas day is not the very best day in the calendar for a dedication, as many people have their family reunions and Christmas dinners, etc. And yet the dedication at Grape Creek was fairly well attended and proved to be successful.

Two-thirds the cost of the house was to be provided for at the dedication. Most of the brethren were confident that the money could not be raised. But failure to raise the amount necessary to pay a church debt when the house is opened for worship is not in our dedication vocabulary, so we asked the people to give and they responded. We solicited at the forenoon, afternoon and night service, and before the close of the night service every dollar was pledged and the congregation sang, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and with prayer and great rejoicing the house was given to Almighty God. Bro. Martin, the resident preacher, and Bro. Cunningham, of Danville, were present and assisted in the service.

Bro. Cunningham was to continue with a protracted meeting. We shall expect to hear of a good ingathering into the fold of the world's Redeemer.

We shall always remember the kindness of the brethren toward us and shall ever pray for the success of the "old gospel" in that community. L. L. CARPENTER.

Hiram College Jubilee Movement.

What will the issue be? This is the question that our brethren everywhere are asking. Will it be possible to endow a college by a great popular movement? Expressions of sympathy are coming in from our leading brethren all over the country. All feel that the movement ought to succeed. Success in this undertaking ought to put hope into the hearts of our college faculties and college boards. How easy it will be to endow Hiram College if the brethren everywhere will respond even in a moderate way! Surely, we ought to get from fifty to a hundred thousand names from more than a million communicants! Do not, however, think there will be enough without you. Sit down and write quickly while your attention is called to this most important enterprise.

We herewith submit an additional list of 122 names, and we have many more to follow as soon as we can get them in order for publication.

Send your name to E. V. Zollars, Hiram, O., and lend your assistance to this supreme effort to secure an adequate endowment.

E. V. ZOLLARS.

A Tender Farewell Service.

Never in its history has LaBelle known a more tender farewell service than on last Lord's day, when Bro. W. T. Turner closed his four years' labor with the church here for his new field at Joplin, Mo.

Never was a man more universally loved. By his clear, logical sermons, his pure, unselfish life and his heart so full of love for all, he has won the love and admiration of those in the church as well as out, the old as well as young.

So when his words, so fitly chosen from Paul's exhortation to the "Corinthians"—"Finally, brethren, farewell," etc., fell on the ears of a large audience there was scarcely a dry eye in the house and many sobs were heard.

We shall sorely miss his able sermons, his godly counsel and the influence of his consistent, Christian life, but we are thankful that he has come into our lives, and feel we are better men and women and better Christians for having known him and his consecrated wife. His presence will rest as a benediction on any community; so, into the hands of the people in his chosen field of labor we commend him and his estimable family.

GEORGE S. WASHBURN AND WIFE.

Dedication at Perry, Iowa, Dec. 25, 1898.

Perry is a good town of nearly 5,000 inhabitants, some 35 miles from Des Moines. It is the center of influence and of commercial life for a large section in the best part of the state. We have a church of about 350 members, active and awake to their large opportunities. Bro. C. C. Morrison, the former pastor of the church, was the one to inaugurate the work of building, and to his untiring energy much of the success is due. He was present at the dedication and rejoiced in the completion of of his work.

The church is a beautiful frame building, the best church house in the county of Dallas. The auditorium is 60x60 feet, with circular pews and a gallery seating about 200 people. These are beautiful flake-oak pews. The acoustics of the house are perfect, and the room one of the prettiest I have ever seen. A good Sunday-school room opens into the auditorium. There are six class rooms, a large pastor's study, a basement under the whole building, furnace heat, electric light, etc. It is a complete house for beauty and for a workshop, and the marvel is that it cost less than $7,000. This, with the value of the lot, makes the value of the property about $9,000. Of this sum about $2,200 was to be provided at the dedication. The church and the community had been very thoroughly canvassed, but when the call was made the people gave cheerfully and liberally. The membership gave out of their poverty, as of old, for there was no wealth represented. But $2,500 was contributed, and the church and their neighbors rejoiced together. It was a privilege to lead their services and share their joys on that happy occasion. It was a happy Christmas time.

On Tuesday evening following Bro. J. P. Rowlison was installed as pastor of the church—not with formal words and ceremonies, but with informal words and prayer and singing. He began his work here some weeks ago, and is already installed in the hearts of the people. His brother, C. C. Rowlison, of Marshalltown, Ia., delivered the address of the evening, and short talks were made by C. C. Morrison, of Chicago, Rev. Brown, of the Presbyterian Church, of Perry, and others. There is promise of a successful pastorate and a great church in Perry. JOHN E. POUNDS.

Again the circle of the years
Has crowned our days with blessings rare,
Of garnerd grain, of corn and wine,
Of peace with all its blessings fair.

God of the nations in whose hands
We are but dust, we are but clay,
Our pilot thou has surely been;
We bow in thakfulness to-day.

We thank thee for the uplifted arm,
That makes our victories complete,
And for that banner's proud advance,
That never, never knew retreat.

Amid the pine trees of the North,
The eternal snows thy folds may thrill,
While freedom's shout rolls round the earth,
From Lexington and Bunker Hill.

The islands of the Southern seas,
Where crystal waves arise and swell,
Bright as the jewels ruddy gleam
Upon the breast of Isabel,

There floats the emblems of the free,
Upraised that it may also bless,
As was the brazen serpent raised,
By Moses in the wilderness.

But Nineveh remembered not,
And Babylon spurned thee in her pride;
And where is Tyre and Memphis—where?
Ask of the desert sands that hide.

God of the nations in whose hand
The nations rise, the nations set,
Be with us in our hour of pride,
Lest we forget, lest we forget.

What Two Boys Did.—III.

BY ALFRED BRUNK.

After a few days Mr. Latham, Harry and Fred held an earnest consultation.

"Yes," said Fred, "I think for the present it would be wise to reopen the mission on or near Wharf Street. My plans are not fully matured, but I can get a suitable hall near the one we did have, and an abundance of material to work on."

"Mr. Gotleib, Harry and I have set apart a portion of our earnings for your mission, and why not buy some building suitable for your purpose, where you can hold your meetings, teach the children and feed the extremely poor?"

"Yes," said Harry, "and I was down there the other day and saw the house which I think will answer the purpose."

"That would be much better than renting," replied Fred, "but before we go any further with this business, there is another matter I wish to speak about. Mr. Latham, I have long loved your daughter, and we have decided that with your permission we will be married, Christmas."

Mr. Latham's heart contracted with pain and his face became deathly pale. It was some moments before he spoke. Harry could scarcely contain himself for joy.

"Mr. Gotleib," said Mr. Latham, with difficulty, "such a thought had never entered my mind. Do you consider, sir, thar this is a Christlike act to take advantage of my generosity, to steal my daughter?"

"You misjudge me, Mr. Latham," said Fred, with dignity. "I have never called upon you for a cent. Of your own free will you placed money in my hands to use in any manner I thought would most materially advance the kingdom of Christ. I have done so to the best of my knowledge and ability. As for your daughter, we have loved each other for years. She is as much interested in uplifting the wretched masses as I am. I cannot, therefore, see where it would be wrong for us to spend our lives together in a cause we both love better than all the world besides."

"No, no! Say no more! You have proved a base deceiver. Under the guise of religion you enter my home, take my money, and then proceed to steal my dearest treasure. Go! And never set foot in my house again!"

Fred left the house, followed by Harry. Mr. Latham walked the floor of the library in great perturbation. Finally he touched an electric button and a servant appeared. "Sally, send Hulie here, immediately."

"Yes sir," she said, and disappeared. He sat down and hastily wrote a note. "Here, Hulie," said he to the boy who now stood in the doorway, "take this to Mr. Hollingbrook, at once."

In the course of some twenty or thirty minutes that gentleman arrived and was ushered into the library. After the usual salutations, Mr. Latham told his pastor in detail of his dealings with the poor German boy, from the time he entered his home with a broken leg, to the conversation that very morning.

"And now just to think that he aspires to the hand of my daughter! I didn't object so much to Harry working with him, especially as he seemed earnest and religious, but now to wish to marry into my family; and to my beautiful and darling Myrtle! Why, sir, the very idea is preposterous."

Mr. Hollingbrook was a wise, judicious counselor. He discreetly led the enraged man from the present into the past, back to his boyhood days; had him telling of his boyish pranks on his father's small, rocky farm. How he fell in love with and courted pretty Emma Hamsworth. How her parents had objected and how the objections were finally overcome, and they were happily married.

"Now," said the minister, "you gave me an interesting account of your youthful days, and from this account let us make some deductions: Your father was a poor but an industrous man. The same can be said of your wife's father. It can be said of Fred's mother, that she is poor, but in dustrious. Nothing is known of his father, except that he was lost at sea. So, then, so far as we know, you and your family have nothing to boast of more than Fred has. By taking advantage of the tide of immigration and the material advancement of the city and surrounding country, you have built up a large wholesale and retail trade. Fred's activities have been in another direction, and he would have made a name for himself, even if you had never let him have a dollar, but, of course, he could not so soon have equipped himself for his work. As to mission work, he takes that up entirely from choice, for I know that he has refused calls to some of our best pulpits. While I appreciate your great worth and your daughter's varied talents and accomplishments, yet I hesitate not to say that you cannot find a more worthy son-in-law, nor your daughter a better husband, than Frederick Gotleib."

That Christmas there was a quiet marriage at Mr. Latham's Mr. Frederick Gotleib and Miss Myrtle Latham were the contracting parties, the marriage service being performed by Mr. Hollingbrook.

Fred and Myrtle now threw themselves heart and soul into their work. They taught the children of the poor foreigners in one room of the house Harry and Fred had bought. Fred preached to the older people, sometimes in one language, sometimes in another. On the ground floor they fitted up a kitchen and eating room. In about six months there was one convert, Fred's own mother. She was baptized by her son in the baptistery in Cedar Avenue Church. Many foreigners of various nations assembled to witness the impressive scene, among them being some who had never before been inside of a Protestant church. Conversions were frequent after that, and a house of worship became a necessity. One day Mr. Latham, Harry and Fred met in Mr. Latham's library and held an earnest consultation.

"Fred," said Mr. Latham, "our business has grown to large proportions, and Harry and I have determined that from this time onward all the profits shall be devoted to the Lord's work. We have decided that for a few years, at least, the most of this money shall be applied to your enterprise, as we three shall determine."

The years have flown on eagles' wings, but our workers have not been idle. A large church has been built on Wharf Street, which is filled with worshipers, many of them being the first students Fred and Myrtle taught, and a few of the older ones are of those who jeered Harry and Fred in their youthful mission venture. This church has a pastor of its own, whom the members support without outside aid. They are also an intensely missionary people. Not far away is a large school where the children of all poor foreigners are given the rudiments of an education, and are especially instructed in the Bible. Near by is a large building where worthy men and women are given employment, for which they receive their board and lodging and a small money wage besides, until they can secure a position. These are also instructed in the Bible. Farther down the street is the Sailors' Home, a veritable mansion in the midst of squalor and want. Here seamen of all nationalities are welcomed, given good books and papers to read, regaled with excellent music, given Bible readings and sermons in their own tongue. Upon Cedar Avenue is a large building devoted to the higher education of the children of well-to-do foreigners, and where young men and young women are fitted for missionary labors among their own people, both in this country and in other lands. The work has also extended to other cities, and is being conducted upon the same general plan as the work in Worthington. Fred believes that enough young men and young women among our foreign population can be educated and Christianized to evangelize the millions of foreigners in this country, and also furnish a large force of workers for the land of their fathers. He also sees to it that all are carefully taught that they are but the stewards of God, and that he will require a strict account of the wealth he has placed in their hands. As a result of this vigorous teaching, some persons of property have already determined to devote the proceeds of their business to the extension of Immanuel's kingdom. Fred and Harry, in addition to the work which is now being done, are planning for work among the Chinese, Japanese and negroes of Worthington.

Another Christmas has arrived. Merry shouts can be heard on the hill, where a number of boys are coasting. Three men are slowly walking toward the group of merry lads. One of them shows the marks of age in his face and general bearing. One is tall and stately, his face beaming with love and compassion for his fellows. The remaining one is shorter, broad-shouldered, with the air of a man who is at the head of a large business and knows how to conduct it. The three are Mr. Latham, Fred and Harry.

"Be careful, Herman; you came dangeronsly near that pole," said Fred, to a tall youth of some eighteen years.

"Yes, your father got his knockout blow there when he was a boy," said Harry. "That was a long time ago, Fred," he continued, "some—some—how long has it been, Fred?"

"Twenty-seven years," replied Fred, "but it seems to me as yesterday. That kick of yours came near being my death, but just see how great things God hath wrought. That was the turning-point in my life, and in yours; and I believe it has been instrumental in leading father, here, into a greater realization of his obligation to God and mankind."

"True," replied Mr. Latham, and I thank God daily for that incident, with its attendant train of blessings which have been poured out upon me and mine."

"Fred, is it true that Felicia has decided to be a missionary to Germany?" asked Harry.

"Yes," answered Fred, the tears springing to his eyes, "it is true. It was hard for me to reconcile myself to it, but I ought not to be surprised, as it is but the legitimate result of my life and teaching. I suppose I should thank God that I have a child who is willing to devote her life to this work. I fear it will be hard to reconcile her mother to it."

"Oh, well, she is only fifteen and she won't leave you for some years yet," said Harry, in a tone of assumed brightness, but sad at heart, for batchelor that he was, he made a great pet of his only niece.

"I also have another trial of my faith in Herman," continued Fred. "I hoped he would continue my work, but he seems to have no desire to do so, but wishes to go into business. This is a great trial to me."

"Then don't let it bother you another minute," said Mr. Latham. "He is quick at business and with your permission we will take him into the store, and perhaps he may carry on the business of Latham and Son after we are dead and gone."

"If the boy is father to the man, then you will not want for a successor," said Harry, with a broad smile.

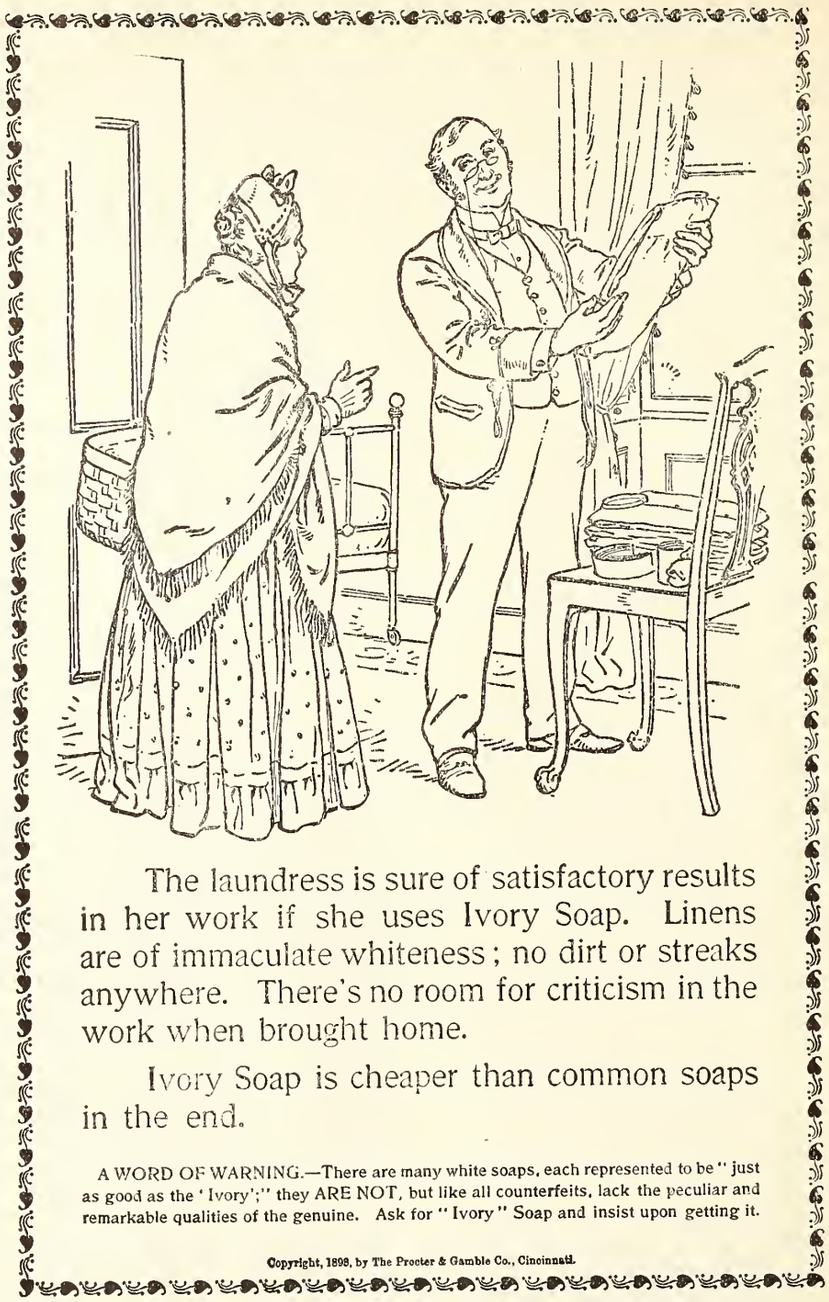
"Yesterday I had business down on Wharf Street, and passed the school. I heard voices inside, so I stepped into the hall, and discovered about ten or twelve little fellows sitting upon the desks of the seats and Bismarck was preaching to them. Two of the boys kept shouting, 'Amen!' And after two or three warnings Bismarck picked up a ruler, went to them and hit each of them several times, then went back and continued his preaching. So I think he will be all right either as a preacher or a teacher. If we could have basted a few of those fellows that used to mock us, we might have got along better," and the three laughed heartily. just then a large, heavily built man approached them, walking in a manner which indicated that he was a seafaring man.

"How do you do, gentlemen," said the stranger, heartily. "Fine sailing weather, sir, with a little more breeze. I hail from the port of Fairfax; commander of the schooner Allbright, from that port to Southhampton. Wife's people live here and we came up for a few days. I used to live here, myself, and slid down this very hill. Bad accident here one Christmas; fellow called 'Dutchy' got on my sled and started down here with canvas all spread and right there a boy, Harry Latham—his father was rich and Harry thought himself pretty smart—Harry kicked the sled and it went right against that telegraph pole, if that's the same one, and then he plunged over that cutaway. We thought Dutchy was killed, but he wasn't. I went away soon after that and don't know what became of either of them. Here, Bill! look out when you go over the cutaway. You're not used to it and might get hurt. That's my boy, sir," indicating a sturdy lad of some sixteen or seventeen years.

The three men were interested listeners to this recital.

"What's your name?" asked Harry.

"Well, that depends. On the boat I'm 'the Old Man;' those who do business with me call me 'Captain;' the boys used to call me 'Sally;' the papers call me 'Captain Hughes, of the Allbright.'"



"And I am Harry Latham," said Harry, extending his hand; "and this is 'Dutchy;' and this gentleman is my father." The Captain was surprised, but pleased to meet them. After some conversation in regard to old times, he said:

"I am sorry to hear that a syndicate has bought this ground, and is going to cut it up into lots. It seems to me that the boys ought to have some place where they can coast; but syndicates don't care for that."

"Yes, the heirs have sold this land, but the syndicate did not get it," said Harry. "Father and I have bought it and it is to remain just as it is, with the exception that the railroad company is to remove that pole, and the cutway is to be cut down a little more so there shall be no danger when going over it. We all have a great affection for this old hill, for we feel that God has used the incident you have mentioned, in such a way that we have been led into large fellowship with him, and into doing some good to our fellowmen."

(THE END.)

At Low Tide.

Is purpose dead? Desires fallen asleep?
And is there naught will make
This sluggish pulse of mine,
Which scarce doth creep,
A faster pace to keep?
For life seems only half awake!
That which was once a song divine,
And set my heart a-throbbing to its note,
Is now a discord in a minor key,
And lost its melody.
Ambition is an art which lies supine;
For like a boat
Battered and beaten by the storms gone by—
Tossed high upon the beach,
Beyond the grasping reach
Of tortuous wave and cruel tide—
My shattered hopes and aspirations lie.
Indifferent to whatever fate betide am I.
Perchance on some auspicious day
A careless rover on Life's restless sea
Will anchor slip
Anear my grounded ship;
Recaulk the seams, and set the sails ataut
To catch the breeze—the anchor weigh,
And turn her prow towards some friendly port.

How a Dog Saved a Republic.

The Hon. Charles Francis Adams writes the Boston Herald as follows: "Most persons have heard of the great William of Orange, called 'The Silent.' If the dog enemies will turn to Motley's History of the Rise of the Dutch Republic (vol. 2, page 398), they'll find this little incident related: On the night of September 12, 1572, a body of Alva's Spanish troops surprised Dutch William's camp. And 'for two long hours the Spaniards butchered their foes.' Then Motley goes on to describe what happened:

"'The boldest, led by Julian in person, made at once for the Prince's tent. His guards and himself were in a profound sleep, but a small spaniel, which always passed the night upon his bed, was a more faithful sentinel.

"'The little creature sprang forward, barking furiously at the sound of hostile footsteps, and scratching his master's face with his paws. There was but just time for the Prince to mount a horse, which was ready saddled, and to effect his escape before his enemies sprang into the tent.

"'His servants were cut down, and two of his secretaries, who gained their saddles a moment later, also lost their lives; and but for a little dog's watchfulness, William of Orange, upon whose shoulders the whole weight of his country's fortunes depended, would have been led within a week to an ignominious death. To his dying day the Prince ever afterward kept a spaniel of the same race in his bedchamber.' And in the church at Delft may be seen, to this day, at the foot of the recumbent statue of the great Hollander, a figure in stone of that 'little spaniel.' "—The Saturday Evening Post.

Tagged and Forwarded.

"In charge of the conductor," children often travel on the cars, but on a recent trip the Cunard steamship Companion carried ten boys and girls who were taking long journeys alone.

A girl of fourteen was going to her aunt in Chicago; another, aged eleven, to her stepfather in North Dakota. A boy of ten and a girl of nine were consigned to two small towns in Massachusetts. A nine-year-old boy was going to his aunt in Chicago; an eleven-year-old girl to her sister in Boston, and four children, ranging in age from five to eleven, were seeking their father in Calumet, Michigan.

It was the largest party of unattended children that ever landed at New York. All were "tagged" with directions, asking those with whom they came in contact to see that they were sent on their way.

Counting the ocean voyage and the long land journeys, several of these little travelers covered more than five thousand miles—alone, except for the thoughtful and kindly persons who may have noticed and helped them.—The Youths' Companion.

Speaking Clocks.

We speak of watches and clocks as telling the time, but we do not as a rule expect to be understood as saying that they do it in so many words. Now, however, we may make mention of clocks that literally tell the hour.

These phonograph clocks are being made in Switzerland, and are the very latest thing in the line of timepieces. When a button is pressed they pronounce the hour distinctly, thus saving the owner the trouble of looking for himself to see where the hands point.

The new invention has been utilized to awaken a sleeper in altogether a more natural manner than by the old system. A clock set up to awaken its owner at six, calls out to the slumberer, "It is six o'clock, get up!" Some clocks, evidently intended for the use of obstinate sleepers, add, "Now don't go to sleep again!"

The form of warning can be chosen by the buyer, and may be more or less emphatic.

The application of the phonographic principle to watches and clocks is the work of a French watchmaker settled at Geneva. He introduced into the timepieces little slabs of vulcanized rubber, on which the desired words are traced in grooves corresponding to the hours and fractions of hours.—The Youth's Companion.

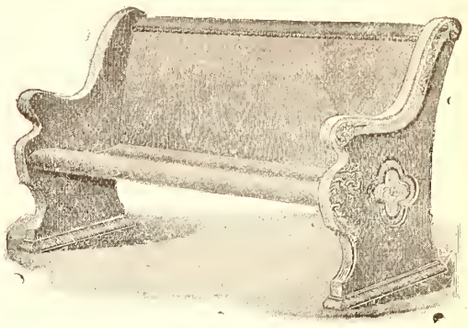
Total Abstinence in the English Army.



We may thank God and take courage that in the midst of the many apparent discouragements of our reform, so grand an uplift is given our cause by the English Government in shutting alcoholic drinks out of the army. This decree makes two hundred thousand total abstainers by process of law. It is a hard blow at the breweries and distilleries of the world, directly and indirectly. It comes at a good time to help us knock out the army canteens and soldierly tippling in this country. It is a significant testimony against the habit everywhere and by everybody.—The Minnesota Issue.

CAL OGBURN.

TEXT.—Not as I will, but as thou wilt.—Matt. 26:39.

Sermon.

Two fine young trees of the same variety, very much admired by all the other trees about them, grew close together in a great forest. The two trees were, in most repects, congenial spirits, and often engaged in pleasant conversation with each other, though concerning one thing they could not agree. They frequently heard the sound of the woodman's ax as it reverberated through the forest and echoed and reechoed from hill to hill, and the crash and roar of falling timber often startled them. They fully realized that at any time they, too, might fall before the sturdy woodman's ax. To one of the trees this was a source of no small degree of discomfort and anxiety. It could not get its consent to yield to the wish of the woodman and be cut down. In fact it was very painful to it to think of this being the fate of such a beautiful, symmetrical and much-admired tree as it was. The disposition of the other tree in this respect was altogether different. It always said calmly, whenever the subject was touched upon in their conversation, "Whatever is best—the woodman knoweth."

Early one morning they heard the sound of approaching footsteps, and presently the woodman appeared with his keen ax athwart his shoulder. He advanced directly toward the complaining tree as though he intended to hew it down, but whether or not he heard the plaintive plea it was making to be left standing, he only looked at it and passed on to its companion, and with well-directed strokes with his good ax, soon laid it low. Then men came with teams and wagons and hauled it away to a great shipyard by the sea where it was utilized in building a majestic ship to voyage the ocean and carry the people and products of great nations.

The other tree stood for sometime in sadness and loneliness—for, though in the midst of and much admired by many others of its kind, it had been deprived of companionship—admiration is not fellowship; it lacks reciprocity, congeniality, warmth, soul. There it stood till one night a storm passed over the forest and it with many others was prostrated. There it lay year after year, being gradually consumed by decay, until it became absolutely worthless even for fuel. "Whatever is best—the woodman knoweth."

Application.

Beyond a doubt many a person who has cherished a spirit of discontent and insubordination has been left to enjoy his "own sweet way" without any interference on the part of him who knows best the purpose for which he could be utilized. He has been left standing selfishly in his place until some storm has laid him low to rot away by slow degrees and at last become utterly worthless. To all inquiries and questionings, whether from without or within, the one safe answer is: "Whatever is best—the woodman knoweth." "Not as I will, but as thou wilt."

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

Jenny Weston went to school Monday morning with the determination to get Linnie Beezely to join the Advance Society. The 7th of November, 1898, was a beautiful day in Mizzouryville. There was a pretty strong wind blowing, but it was from the South, and the sun was warm, so it looked like an April day that had got lost and had been tacked on the calendar in the wrong place. The schoolyard was filled with happy boys and girls, playing different games, for it was a quarter of an hour before school time. Some were "cracking the whip," to the continual downfall of the little girl that was always at the end. Some had trees for bases, and ran from tree to tree till they got "caught." On the other side of the yard, the big boys were engaged in "scrub," a very fascinating game if you are "at the bat," but no good if you are "in the field." The little boys were playing football, the principal art of which seemed to consist in knocking down a boy smaller than yourself. There was a big pile of leaves on the girls' side, all red and golden, and these had been made into a house. The walls were about three feet high and there was a door made of a plank that had once been part of the fence. Some girls were "keeping house" in this place, with pieces of broken glass and china for dishes. The larger girls were all "mothers," and the little ones were playing like they were their children. The principal duty of the mothers appeared to be to catch their children and spank them.

Linnie Beezely, who who was the leader of her "set" of girls, sat on the grass surrounded by an admiring circle. She was telling something, and the girls were saying "Oh!" Linnie was a very pretty girl, and she felt this, and also that she was getting to be large. So she did not play any more. After she had finished her story, Jennie asked her to walk with her. When they were alone, Jennie said:

"Linnie, I would like for you to join the Advance Society, that was started in the CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST last Thursday. George and I have joined, and if some others will join, we can have a good time together, once in a while, and have a little entertainment among ourselves. I asked Mary Thomas yesterday, and she said if you would join she would. I would have asked you, but you were not at Sunday-school."

"No," said Linnie, "we never get up early on Sunday, and besides, I told the girls I was going to wear my new hat. But it wasn't ready and I'm not going to church till it is; and besides, I didn't feel very well, and then there was a letter I just simply ha-a-ad to answer! But tell me about this society. Of course I'll join."

"You promise to read every week five pages of history and thirty lines of po—"

"I have no time to read," Linnie interrupted. "I wish I had. All my time is so taken up, I hardly can breathe. There are my studies; they must be attended to, and my music lessons, and—oh, Jennie, I am embroidering the loveliest, center piece; it will be perfectly beautiful when it is done. The sweetest thing." Linnie closed her eyes as she spoke, as if she could taste it.

"I wish I was grown!" said Jennie dejectedly.

"Why, you darling child!" cried Linnie. "What makes you wish anything so perfestly dreadful?"

"Because you are under such disadvantages when you are just a girl," said Jennie. "Nothing ever seems to come just as you want it. And a girl can't make anything happen. I want to make things happen."

"You poor dear!" said Linnie, who was a year older, and consequently felt full of wisdom. "You musn't let things discourage you. I never do."

"I know I am easily discouraged," said Jennie. "But I can't help it! It looks like the world is full of things that I want, and can't have! But I must cheer up, or else I will be like Tattie Marsh." Tattie Marsh was one of the school girls who never joined in the games, or conversations of the children, but spent the recesses in moping. Sometimes she stood alone beside the tree and moped; other times she stayed in the schoolroom and stared out the window into the playyard and moped. It was no use to comfort her, because as soon as she got over one trouble another laid its clutches upon her. One thing Tattie moped about was that she was not a favorite with the girls, and another that she had not been born beautiful, and a third that she was poor. When she saw the other girls laughing and running with their pretty ribbons and bright dresses, she felt that she was receiving a personal injury. Jennie Weston had been reminded of Tattie Marsh by seeing the latter sitting alone on the doorstep, looking moodily before her, her chin on her hand.

"Good morning, Tattie," cried Linnie Beezely with her brightest smile. Tattie, not moving her eyes from the distant landscape, grunted some sound through her nose; she was moping. "So sorry I haven't time to join the Advance Society," said Linnie, as she left Jennie to go back to her circle of admirers. "I never have time to read even the stories in our magazines. Can't you come over after school? I want to show you some delicious battenburg, I am making. It is too cute for anything in this world! Bye-bye, darling!"

When Jennie was left alone, she thought to herself, "I wonder if anything could be done to cheer up Tattie Marsh, and make her feel like a human being? May be the muscles that make smiles were left out of her face. But I have never seen anybody take any trouble to cheer up the poor little goose. I believe I will take her in hand!"

At that moment the football which the little boys had been playing with came bounding across the yard from a kick some large boy had given it. It came straight toward Tattie Marsh, and Jennie thought it would surely hit her in the face. Tattie saw it coming, but she did not move an inch. The expression of her eyes said, "I will not move if I die for it!" The ball just grazed her head, but Tattie began to cry, any way, because she had gotten ready to do so. Just then the school-bell rang, and when she heard it she cried the louder. The boy who came for the ball was Jim Dancy. He laughed at Tattie, because he knew she had not been hit. This made her sob wildly. Jennie went up to her and put her arm around her. "You go 'way!" cried Tattie, giving Jennie a push that nearly upset that good Samaritan. When they had gone in the schoolroom, Jennie began to write rapidly all over a large page of foolscap paper. She wrote the same thing over and over: "Wish I was grown—wish I was grown!" When she looked up, Linnie Beezely was throwing a note to one of the girls. Tattie Marsh was moping. At that moment she heard the teacher say, "Every soul is a world to conquer." Jennie said to herself, "I am going to conquer Tattie Marsh!"

Next week our story will treat of Jennie Weston, the Conqueror. In the meantime, I must ask those members whose names have not yet been named on our page, not to fancy that they are overlooked. Before long a page will be devoted to their pleasant letters and bright little stories. The vote on the favorite books has been very interesting. The result will be announced in three weeks. You see it takes a long time to hear from me, since all I write is written at least two weeks before you read it. Well, how do you like 1899? I think it is the nicest year that ever was, because it is the one we are living right now, and if we try we can do pretty much anything we make up our minds to do. But by making up your minds, I mean keeping it straight to the point all the time, never forgetting what you mean to do and be. Some people make up their minds as they do their beds, just to tumble them up before the next day.

Out here in Missouri, you have to put a stamp on every envelope that goes; so don't expect me to answer your letters, unless that stamp is enclosed. I am willing to give you some of my time, because I have lots of it at present; but not more stamps than I need. I answer one letter here by saying, you don't have to pick out a poem with just 30 lines; only read that much of some poem, or put two or more together, if you like. Another asks if listening to the reading of the Bible in school counts. I think not. I believe it is best to get in the habit of reading for ourselves. Another asks if you must copy the quotation in the notebook. No, although this is a splendid plan. Others wonder if they are too old to join. Not unless you are too old to improve. Some of our members are 18, 20, 35, 49, 54, etc. The youngest is seven. Last Monday week we had 229 members. What do you think of that? Doesn't that make you feel like getting others, or joining yourselves, at this beginning of another year?

TERRIBLE BREAKING OUT

CURED BY CUTICURA

I was afflicted with a terrible breaking out. I was treated by the very best physicians, who pronounced it blood poison, but it got worse. I was suffering untold agony, and finally had to give up work. CUTICURA REMEDIES were suggested, which I immediately procured. From the first, I experienced a soothing relief, notwithstanding my intense pain. I improved right along till at last I was entirely cured, and not a sign on my body anywhere indicating that anything had ever been the matter with me. M. B. BASTIEN, 156 W. THE MARRIAGE IN CANAAN.*

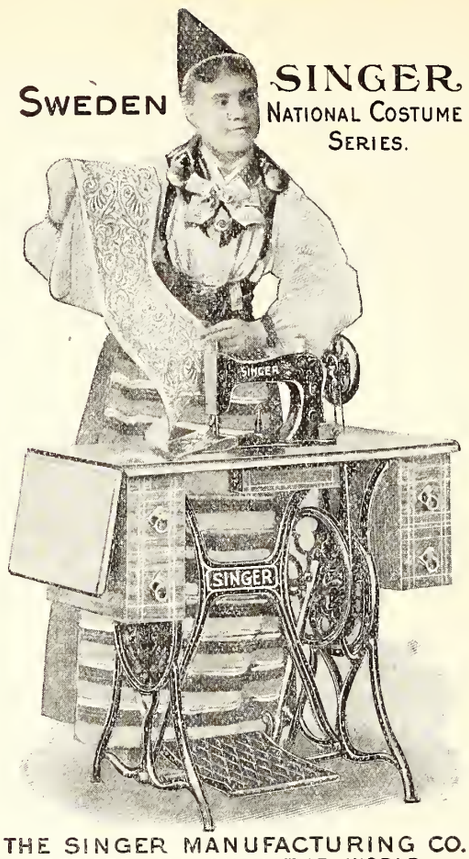
HERBERT L. WILLETT.

All four of the evangelists introduce us to the miraculous element in the life of Jesu at a very early age in his ministry. There have been repeated efforts to eliminate this factor from his work, and to prove that nothing more than extraordinary human power and intuition belong to him. But the Gospels are united in testimony of a different sort. And this testimony is of still stronger character from the fact that the earliest of the Gospels—Mark—deals most with the miraculous. It is impossible, therefore, to suppose that belief in this power of our Lord grew up in the second generation of disciples, for the authentic records of the first circle disprove it. Miracle was the natural expression of Jesus' divine life. Such a life as his demands such work as he did as its natural product. When once the life and character of Jesus are undert stood, miracle is the most reasonable and natural thing. The life of Jesus without miracle would have been the strangest event in history.

It has been seen already that John's Gospel begins with a week, and of this week the closing day was that of the wedding. Jesus had taken a small body of disciples northward with him from the Jordan, when he returned to Galilee to visit his family and friends for a short time before beginning his ministry. Almost at once upon his arrival he was met with the invitation to the wedding. All the circumstances point to the event as being celebrated in the family circle of which the household of Jesus was a part. Mary and her son were present almost as hosts, rather than guests. Joseph is not mentioned and was probably dead at this time, and Jesus was head of the little household at Nazareth. Mary was perhaps a near relative of the bride, and as the family name was dear to her she felt some responsibility for the adequacy of provisions for all guests. Another fact deepened this sense of responsibility on her part. Jesus brought with him, no doubt quite unexpectedly, several comparative strangers whom he had chosen for his friends. The open-handed hospitality of the time made it fitting to invite them as well as himself to the wedding. The number of guests which was probably small was thus increased unexpectedly by five or six, and Mary felt that Jesus might be considered the cause of any failure of supply.

The willingness with which Jesus went to this wedding is strikingly illustrative of his whole manner of life. He never withdrew himself from the affairs of men, he was like his fellow-beings in all that concerned the activities of life. Herein he was strikingly unlike the religious teachers of the day, and even John the Baptist. The latter fasted and enjoined his followers to do the same. Jesus, however, "came eating and drinking," joining the festivities of the people wherever occasion offered and his work did not prevent. In this regard he has set forever an example to his followers. Religion does not consist in abstaining from pleasure if the pleasure be of a proper sort. The life of the Cnristian is the happiest life possible. There is no virtue in gloominess, as many good men have imagined at various periods in the history of the church. We never honor our Master more than when we seek to be happy and to increase the happiness of others.

But in the midst of the festivities the supply of wine failed. This was a great embarrassment to all who shared the responsibility of the entertainment, of whom Mary seems to have been one. Of what character the wine was which the host had provided we do not know, for both fermented and unfermented wines were used in that age, though the latter was more common. But when Mary discovered the need she came at once to Jesus with the news. It is unnecessary to suppose that she appealed to him expecting him to exert any supernatural power. We are expressly told that the miracle which followed was his first. Of such power Mary knew nothing. She appealed to him as the head of the family since Joseph's death, a near relative of the bride and the one whose coming with several friends was perhaps the direct cause of the failure of supply. But her words could not fail to mean more to Jesus than she understood. His whole life work lay before him. His hour, i. e., his time of opportunity for doing good, and especially the hour when that good should be consummated by his supreme act of self-devotion, was not yet upon him. She spoke in the language of an anxious friend and mother. He replied in the words of one whose vision is opened to life's deepest realities and is ever seeking for an occasion to work righteousness. She was thinking of the pressing need and the way out of the dilemma. He had in mind only the opportunity to manifest the Father's will, and in this action he could take no suggestions even from his mother. The times and seasons of the divine purpose could not be known even to her.



But the strangely enigmatical answer of Jesus to his mother seems to have reassured her, and perhaps if we knew the story of his life at Nazareth up to this period we should understand why this utterance satisfied her. Of his ways of speech she knew enough to feel that what was necessary would be done, though of the means she could not guess. In this confidence she bade the servants do promptly whatever he told them. Soon after, we know not how long, Jesus noticed the waterpots and ordered them filled with water. The contents were then poured out and the astonished servants discovered that the water had been changed to wine. So excellent was the quality that the guest who had been chosen to preside at the little wedding feast specially commended the bridegroom for reserving the best of the wine till the last. Then the story came out, for the servants knew, and soon the wonderful secret was told among the guests, of whom perhaps the most interested were the five or six men who had come with Jesus from the Jordan, and who saw in this first miracle of their Master the convincing proof that he was worthy to be believed and followed.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

The faithfulness of Jesus to his mother and his home duties is one of the most charming and instructive elements in his life-story. Jesus shared the joys and sorrows of humanity. Wherever he goes upon ministries of joy or sadness he invites his disciples to go with him. In every time of need it is Jesus to whom we may go with confidence of help. Sometimes the answers to our prayers are like that of Jesus to his mother, hard to understand; but the prayer is answered in the best way. The power of Christ to transform water into wine is a pledge of the transforming grace of his gospel. Mary's advice to the servants is timely always: "Whatsoever Jesus says unto you, do." The wine of Christian life is like that at the feast of Cana, always best at the last. Jesus' whole life was a manifestation of his glory. The belief of the disciples was his object in all his ministry. No argument for wine-drinking can be drawn from this lesson; we may be certain that our Savior never created a poisonous and corrupting drink; it is a weak plea for drinking that can be founded on this narrative.

We cannot too strongly nor too often urge the supreme importance of planting seeds that are perfectly pure and fresh. Seeds that are offered at cheap prices are almost invariably of doubtful origin and uncertain age, sure to cause the planter disappointment and loss. TOPIC FOR JANUARY 15.

WHERE AM I GOING?

Every life is going somewhere. No one is standing still. Backward or forward, upward or downward, every one is going. Life is compared to a ladder, to a hill, to a path, to a race, to a journey, to a voyage, to a river, in order to show its constantly changing character.

In this modern day, and especially in our country, people are forever going in one direction or another. Trains whirl by us loaded with people. Boats ply back and forth. Restless and unquiet, we are forever on the go. So each life goes on its little round or its long journey. Whither does your way tend, Christian? Are you looking toward the little wicket gate and the celestial city? Or are you faring toward the city of Vanity Fair?

Paths and roads are the marks of civilization. The great civilizing nations of the world have been the great roadmakers. From the golden milestone in the middle of the Roman Forum, roads unrolled like great, broad, white ribbons in all directions, so that it could truthfully be said, "All roads lead to Rome." Some of those roads still exist with the very same stone foundations. Along those roads Christianity made its way more rapidly than it could otherwise have done. Are our hearts prepared roads for all civilizing and Christianizing purposes and ideas?

Do our roads lead through dangers? Time was when through all this American Continent trails wound along between trade centres, and every traveler journeyed with watchful eye and armed hand, expecting ambushed foes. To this day are there no foes for us to fight? They are thick about us. Some of our lives are in thickets and ambushes more frequent than others have. All are clearer in some places than in others. It is for all of us to pray, "Lord lead me in a plain path because of mine enemies!"

Some of us go soon to die, some of us go on to live. "For me to die is gain," said Socrates and Paul. At the last moment, however, the great philosopher said, "I go to die, you, to live. Which of us is destined to the better state of existence, God alone knows;" but the great apostle, in far less doubt, said in his last hours, "I have fought a good fight, there is a crown laid up for me."

Some of us go on to prosperity and success. Let us beware lest we glory. The path of glory leads but to the grave. The footprints we leave behind us, no matter how deep, are but in the sands of time and all will be obliterated in the tide of the next generation. All our success is as nothing except it be for the glory of the cross.

Some of us are walking into the red-hot arms of suffering. If we allow His Spirit to attend us, we shall come out of furnaces with not even the smell of Moloch upon us.

"O, fear not in a world like this,
And thou shalt know ere long,
Know how divine a thing it is
To suffer and be strong."

Most of us, let us hope, whether in joy or pain, O Endeavorers, are going to the celestial city. Find all your delightful words, pile them together and even then you cannot paint its possibilities. If gold, silver and other precious stones do not convey your ideas of happiness and joy, then use the words work, activity, expansion, freedom, growth, light; all our noblest ideas will be for us found there.

We cannot see the path very far ahead of us, but we know it is somewhere there. How many, just before they come to a bend in the road, sit down and cry because they are sure there is no further road! How many, as they see the river in the distance, moan and wring their hands because they are certain there is no bridge! "The blind world stumbleth on its round of pain." "Lead, kindly light; one step enough for me."

There is a tide in the affairs of men? Yes, tides, gulf streams, trade winds and all sorts of currents. Life is one continued flux. Never resting, never ceasing, but heaving, ebbing and flowing. Wherever we drift, nevertheless, God is there.

Though from out our bourne of time and place,
The flood shall bear me far,
I hope to see my pilot face to face,
When I have crossed the bar.

Wherever we go let us see to it that we go as cheerfully as possible and make the best of life. Seek peace and pursue it. Madame de Gasparin says well, "Splendor! Immensity! Eternity! Grand words! Great things! A little definite happiness would be more to the purpose."

THE OUTER AND INNER MINISTRY OF JESUS.

By H. L. Willett, Director.

It is evident that our Savior pursued a consistent and progressive method of work during his whole ministry; that he foresaw its features and its results, and that at each new crisis he adopted such new methods as he had foreseen would be necessary to meet the new conditions. He began his ministry in the most public manner, taking up a work similar to that pursued by John the Baptist, and seemingly carrying the ministry of his forerunner into wider regions than he had hitherto reached. The work of Jesus during this period was in the province of Judea, whose people he sought to reach first of all because they were nearest the capital, Jerusalem, and had correspondingly a more important place in the religious life of the nation. He would give every opportunity for belief to those who possessed the greater advantages of education, and who held the leading positions, civil and ecclesiastical. A brief period exhausted this field of labor, for the danger from the suspicion of Herod as shown in the imprisonment of John the Baptist, and the opposition of the scribes and pharisees compelled Jesus to withdraw into Galilee where he was further from these sources of danger. But it must be noted that Jesus had accomplished one important purpose by his ministry in Judea. He had given the people of Jerusalem and its vicinity the first opportunity to respond to his call and to accept the message of the kingdom. The retirement into Galilee was not a sign of failure or of a change of purpose, but rather of the completion of one phase of his ministry which he had carried out as preliminary to his work in more remote and more responsive regions

The period of public ministry in Galilee was one of notable success as viewed from the human standpoint. His three methods of work, teaching, preaching and healing, all reached the people and caused him to be followed by crowds of enthusiastic admirers and disciples. This is the period of the great works of healing, of many of the principal discourses, and of the earliest group of parables. It is the period at which Jesus' work was launched upon its career of public success and in which the disciples were chosen and began their preparation for their future work. But it was also the period in which the opposition of the scribes and pharisees came to be of such a dangerous character that Jesus could no longer pursue his work in the same regular and public manner, and perhaps this very fact brought about, according to Jesus' plan, the most valuable phase of his ministry. He had foreseen that the time would come when the public character of his work must be diminished and he must devote himself more exclusively to the training of the disciples. This period had now been reached, and though Jesus appeared in public still and taught, preached and healed as before, these methods of work were less pursued by him than formerly, for he was turning his attention more particularly to these men whom he had gathered about himself into a special circle.

The inner ministry of his life had begun in earnest. The group was small enough to accompany him into the retirements which he now more frequently sought; and in these times, both of rest and of escape from impending danger, Jesus gave the disciples those lessons which they were so much to prize in later years. This inner ministry of Jesus is most clearly set forth in the Gospel of John, where half of the book is devoted to it. It marks the unfolding of a definite and consistent purpose on the part of Jesus to give the nation ample opportunity as a whole to accept him, and upon its open rejection, manifested not in one act, but in a series of hostile demonstrations, to turn to the disciples and complete in them the preparation for a world-wide ministry. Henceforth Jesus avoided publicity to a much larger extent than ever before, frequenting the outer regions of Palestine, such as Galilee and Perea, and thus avoiding that conflict with the authorities which he knew would abruptly terminate the training of the disciples by bringing his life to a premature close. These two phases of the life of our Savior stand in striking contrast in the record of his life, and both find their appropriate consummation in the events of the closing week.

BLACKLEDGE.

On the evening of Dec. 21, 1898, Bro. Blackledge passed away from his earthly home with his only living daughter, to his Father's home on high. He was born in Columbiana county, O., Dec. 28, 1817, and at the early age of 15 became the lifelong disciple of his Master. In 1841, Bro. Blackledge came to Iowa and entered the land on which he lived till within two years of his death. In 1844 he returned to Ohio and was married to Miss Jane Feigly, Dec. 12. This union was blessed by one boy and two girls, the boy dying in infancy, and one daughter passed away eleven years ago, leaving one daughter, Sister Emma Stewart, with whom he and his wife have made their home for the last two years. Bro. Blackledge was one of the charter members of the old church and one of the first elders and continued in that capacity till the day of his death. Many preachers will gratefully remember his faithfulness, his liberality and Christlike goodness.

GREEN.

Departed this life at the residence of her husband in this city, Dec. 17, Mrs. Mary Eskridge Green, in the 27th year of her age. She was born and reared at Macon, Mo., and was the daughter of Mrs. Dr. Thos. B. Jackson, by a former marriage. She was the granddaughter of Eld. P. A. McCall, of blessed memory. From girlhood she was a member of the church. Beautiful in person and in character, she died in the blessed hope of the gospel. About eight years ago she was married to Mr. Harry B. Green who, with two little girls, is left to mourn her departure. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

HEATON.

Fred Campbell Heaton, born Jan. 22, 1977 died Dec. 17, 1898. He was attending Barnes' Medical College, St. Louis, Mo., when taken ill and by advice of physicians came home where after two weeks' intense suffering, died triumphant in the Christian faith. Fred was a model young man and will be missed as a citizen, as a student, as a Christian and a dutiful son. He was active in Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor and Y. M. C. A. He was fond of home and singularly wrote to his mother sometime ago, "I am going home the 17th," and it was on this day that his gentle spirit took its flight to the home above. The writer preached to a large and sympathetic congregation Sunday, Dec. 18, 1898.

ROBERTS.

Jennie Littlejohn Roberts died at her home in Higginsville, Mo., Dec. 21, 1898 She was a consistent member of the Christian Church and died full of faith and having a bright hope for the future. She talked pleasantly of her expected departure to the happy land, was patient in her long suffering and confinement caused by her disease, consumption, and admonished her friends to meet her in the home that knows no sorrow. Her death was a triumph, a victory in deed and in truth.

ANDREW SCOTT.

SUTTON.

Zereldah Emeline Sutton was born in Fayette County, Ky., July 4th, 1814 and died at her late home in Plymouth, Ill., Nov. 24th, 1898, aged 84 years, four months, 20 days. She was married to John Ritchey Dec. 31st, 1835. To them were born six children, one son and five daughters, the son and husband and one daughter preceding her, leaving four daughters to mourn the sad loss of a dear mother. In 1838 together with her husband she removed to Brown County, Ill., later to Plymouth, where she lived the remainder of her long and useful life. In 1839 she united with the Christian Church at Mt. Pleasant, Hancock County and changed her membership to Plymouth in 1842, becoming a charter member. Her life was a beautiful and useful life, generous, faithful, loved the church and was as truly devoted to her Christian obligations as any one I ever knew, and was dearly loved by all who knew her and will be greatly missed by the church and community. Funeral services were held in Plymouth Church, Nov. 27th, after which her sacred remains were laid away in the silent city of the dead to wait the resurrection morn.

WARREN.

Mrs. Sallie W. Warren died in Sedalia, Dec. 15, of heart-failure, and was buried at Dover, Dec. 18, the writer of this notice conducting the service. The death of Sister Warren was like that of her brother, Enos Campbell, who dropped dead upon the street, startlingly sudden and wholly unexpected. On Wednesday evening she attended prayer meeting, having previously prepared notes for a talk on those fine words of St. Peter, giving a reason why we should submit patiently to the wrongfully inflicted buffeting of men: "For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow in his steps." On Thursday evening she again attended a service, reaching home at 9 o'clock. She complained of being tired and sleepy, and at 10:30 retired to her room and was found at 6 A. M., Dec. 15, dead in her bed. She passed away evidently with out a struggle. Her face was pure and beautiful in death, stamped with the placidity of a sinless, sleeping child. Out of sorrow and darkness of the irksome world through death she passed into—

"Glory beyond all glory ever seen
By the waking senses, or by the dreaming soul."

Mrs. Warren, daughter of Archibald Campbell, a brother of that illustrious and venerable man of God, Thomas Campbell, was born in Newry, Ireland, in the year 1834. When about eight years old, with her elder sister, she was brought to this country by her cousin, Alexander. My fellow-collegians of half a century ago will remember the old Bethany meeting house at a time when Mr. Campbell's unequaled mind was at its ripest and fullest, how these sisters, with those other sisters, daughters of quaint and amiably eccentric "Uncle Archie" Campbell, made the old walls musical with their fresh, young Irish voices, as they rendered the stately movements of Duke Street and Balerma. She married Samuel Warren, of a widely known and respected family. Her husband died leaving her with two children, both girls, now Mrs. Lukenbill and Mrs. Donnohue, of Sedalia. Having lost, by unfortunate loans, what means had been left, undaunted by disaster, she began her battle for bread. She became a teacher of music. She taught in Waverly and Columbia, Mo., and spent three years in Chicago whilst her elder daughter, a rarely gifted and accomplished musician, studied music and winning many medals. The twelve years prior to her death she lived continually in Sedalia. Sister Warren was a woman of great natural dignity, of a well-balanced mind, steady in her convictions, gentle in mien, yet firm in action; tender and deep in her affections, she won the esteem and confidence of all. She was a discreet and prudent wife, a wise and loving mother, a true and unswerving friend. Above all, she loved her God, honored her Savior; walking "even as he walked," she grew up day by day "into him in all things, which is the Head, even Christ." And now that the wintry storms are past, beneath a sheltering hillock in the kirkyard of a quiet hamlet, on a gentle and sunny slope, held in perpetual and loving memory by those who best knew her noble life and exalted character, she sleeps well in that—

"One enclosure where the voice that speaks
In envy or detraction is not heard,
Which malice may not enter; there the traces Of evil inclination are not known."

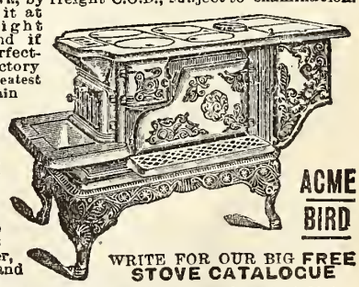
Blest and holy are the spots where rest the righteous dead, for over them—



A sanctity shall brood
Till the stars sicken at the day of doom.

GEO. PLATTENBURG.

[The editor wishes to add his high appreciation of Sister Warren, whom he knew personally for many years. She was a woman of lovely Christian character, whose mind and heart were enlisted in the advancement of Christ's kingdom. We tender our sincere sympathy to the daughters, whose loss of a mother's love and counsel has its compensation in her great gain.—EDITOR.]

Literature.

In our Sunday-schools the first six months of 1899 will be devoted to a study of the Gospel of John. Beginning January 1st, 1900, the scholars will enter upon a study of the life of Christ. This will continue without intermission until July 1st, 1901—a year and a half. This will be a new departure. Nothing of the kind has been attempted in our International Sunday-school work. This will also be the beginning of a new series of lessons, arranged by the International Sunday-school Lesson Committee, which will take the pupils through the Bible in six years. The facts in the life of Christ, for the purpose of this study, have been chronologically arranged—the study to begin Jan. 1, 1900.

A. P. Stout, Eagletown, Hamilton Co., Ind., is the author of a "Chronology of Christ's Life." This is a valuable book. It ought to be in the hands of all Sunday-school superintendents and teachers. It can be said without exaggeration that Mr. Stout has given his life to this work. In the chronological arrangement of the facts in the life of Jesus the Lesson Committee is in close harmony with Mr. Stout's work. The purpose of this note is to commend to Sunday-school teachers, superintendents and Bible students generally, Mr. Stout's book.

"The only way one can obtain a full and harmonious knowledge of the Christ is to study the Gospels side by side, in chronological order; making the evangelists supply each other's omissions from time to time as the case requires."

The "Analytical Index" is worthy of special mention in this place. By its use one can, without delay, find any incident in the life of our Lord, with all that is said in the four Gospels on the subject. For instance, turn to "Apostles," and the following analysis is found: "Called and ordained;" "Sent forth to preach;" "Their trials foretold;" "Providence of God over;" "Their lack of faith;" "Taught how to pray;" "Their trials again foretold;" "Their request for faith;" "Taught humility;" "Their ambitious request;" "Warned against the Scribes;" "Show Jesus the temple;" "Ask when the temple will be destroyed;" "Strife among;" "Washing feet of;" "Comforted by Jesus;" "Their desertion of Jesus foretold;" "Their flight;" "Jesus' first and second appearance to;" "Their last meeting with Jesus;" "Their last walk with Jesus;" "Last commission;" "The farewell benediction on;" "Their return to Jerusalem," and "Their grand success." This is only an illustration. Take the words "Miracle" and "Parable" and find a similar analysis. A full description of any "Miracle," the various records of any "Parable," spoken by the Christ, can be found at once.

This book, then, in a word, is ALMOST an ESSENTIAL to any person who desires to study the life of our Messiah in a broad and rational way—to study that peerless life as it ought to be studied.

It is a pleasure to call attention to and commend the "Chronology of Christ's Life," by the Rev. A. P. Stout.

A Complete Commentary

FOR

EVERY TEACHER AND BIBLE STUDENT

This should be the watchword of every Sunday-school in the land. Thorough, systematic work cannot otherwise be expected. In selecting these books it is always wisest to secure the Best.

I. The Christian Lesson Commentary,

for 1899, prepared by W. W. Dowling, is the most systematic, thorough and helpful published in all this broad land. Scores of the most competent critics, reviewers and practical teachers of various religious denominations have so testified. It contains 416 large pages, with many illustrations, maps, charts and helpful tables—64 pages more than PELOUBET'S, and 24 pages more than HURLBUT'S, the only other Lesson Annuals that belong to its class.

Style and Price.—Neatly printed on calendered paper and substantially bound in cloth, $1.00 per copy; $9.00 per dozen—25 per cent. cheaper than the much smaller books noted above.

II. The Lesson Helper

by the same author, is considerably smaller in size than The Lesson Commentary, but contains much of the same material in a more condensed form, designed especially for Senior Classes and their teachers. Schools and Teachers that feel that they must have a lower priced book than the one first noted above, will find The Lesson Helper very satisfactory; and they may order it with the full assurance that it is more complete every way than any lesson annual or quarterly published by the Christian Church, with the single exception of The Lesson Commentary.

Style and Price.—Printed on fine calendered paper, and substantially bound in heavy boards, only 35 cents per copy; $3.60 per dozen.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO.,
1522 Locust St. St. Louis, Mo.

TOLD IN THE TWILIGHT. By Blanche McManus. E. R. Herrick & Co., New York, publishers. Price, $1.25.

The book has a quaint cover done in two colors, and there are very pretty end papers printed in red. The full-page illustrations are in Miss McManus' best style and are printed on fine paper. The stories include those most loved by children. Told in the Twilight is an ideal book for little ones and the handsome style in which it is gotten up makes it doubly appropriate for a holiday juvenile.

TRACTS.

"The Land of Incas," by E. G. Squire, a tract of 32 pages, is an interesting account of a trip to Lima, Peru, its people, customs and the surrounding country, published by John B. Alden, New York.

The following tracts have been received at this office from the Westminster Press, Philadelphia, Pa.:

"Church Homelessness," by the Rev. G. B. Hallock, D. D., 10 pages.

"Coworkers with God," by Julia MacNair, 10 pages.

"The Mind of Christ," by Julia MacNair, 10 pages.

"Praise," by Julia MacNair, 10 pages.

"My Christmas Class," by Rev. F. A. Horton, D. D., 10 pages.

"Why I am a Presbyterian," by Rev. J. R. Miller, 10 pages.

"Predestination," by Rev. A. W. Pitzer, D. D., 14 pages.

"The Westminster Standards and the American Republic," by Rev. W. H. Roberts, D. D., 20 pages.

"The Medical Mission," by W. J. Wanless, M. D., 96 pages.

"KEEP OUT OF THE COLD"

Publishers' Notes.

Anna D. Bradley, of Fort Worth, Tex., the popular writer of the South, is excellent authority on the merits of new books. She expresses her opinion of our late publication, Queen Esther, by M. M. Davis, as follows:

"Queen Esther comes to us in new dress—no, not new dress at all, but just the same royal robes which she has been wearing all these thousands of years, only the beauty of her garments and the richness of her jewels are so adjusted that we see them as we never saw them before. The book of Esther has always held a peculiar charm for me and I thought I had studied it well, but with my friend and brother, M. M. Davis, as guide, I find whole storehouses of jewels which my eye had been too dull to see, my hand too clumsy to grasp.

"The book cannot but be helpful. It is written in a fascinating style, while the tone is pure and uplifting. All who know Bro. M. M. Davis will well understand how impossible it would be for him to write in a dogmatic or fanatical style, yet with keen, unerring precision he strikes at crime wherever it lurks and boldly defends truth and right.

"All who read 'Queen Esther' will be glad that Bro. Davis has entered the list of authors. We will hope to see the book receive the wide circulation its merits deserve. In many ways the reading of the book has been helpful to me, which help I most gratefully acknowledge."

J. M. Vawter, pastor of the Christian Church at Liberty, Mo., writes concerning "King Saul" as follows: "I am greatly pleased with the delightful story of 'King Saul,' by J. Breckenridge Ellis. It is told in most beautiful language, and is true to the Bible record."

"In the Days of Jehu," by J. Breckenridge Ellis, is a stirring narrative of one of the most eventful periods of Israel's history. It is the story of the reign of Ahab, and of the influences of that remarkable but wicked woman, Jezebel.

It is a romantic story, and a revelation to those who imagine the Bible is dry reading. The author follows the broken narrative as given in Kings, throwing about it all a realism that proves him a poet and an artist, while possessing the true historical interest. He has given all his characters, as was his purpose, a human setting, and this only is success in historical writing.—Christian Oracle, Chicago.

Each of these books on prominent Bible characters is bound in beautiful cloth and printed in clear type, on good paper. These books are sent at the following prices:

"Queen Esther," 132 pages, illustrated, 75 cents; "King Saul," 281 pages, illustrated, $1; "In the Days of Jehu," 189 pages, 75 cents.

The purpose and aim of the Christian Lesson Commentary on the International Sunday-school Lessons for 1899, by W. W. Dowling, is aptly expressed in the author's prefatory note, which says: "The helps offered are eclectic—notes, comments, illustrations, applications and suggestions having been gathered from various sources, the design being to throw the best light possible on the Scripture text and assist the teacher and pupil to fix it in the heart." Christian Lesson Commentary is a book of more than 400 pages, bound in excellent cloth, and the price is $1 per copy, postpaid, or $9 per dozen copies, charges not prepaid.

I want to speak a word in commendation of "After Pentecost, What?" I know of no book that has been more stimulating to me. I am as much in favor as any one can be of adding 100,000 to our membership this year, but I am equally anxious to see our more than 1,000,000 members become more deeply imbued with the Christ-spirit, and such books foster that much-needed element.—*Chas. Expansion.

There is an expansion of the toy balloon kind which we do not desire, because it has not the element of permanency in it. Churches often expand their membership and newspapers their circulation after that manner. Any and all sorts of means are sometimes used to accomplish this end. The final result is bound to be more or less disastrous, however.

We desire to expand by furnishing a paper whose helpful qualities will render it indispensable to old subscribers and steadily attract to it new ones.

We expect to succeed by following this plan and making our price as low as is consistent with the expense of publishing a first-class journal; of making public our rates and adhering to them. This we are doing with gratifying results, both as to old and new subscriptions. If this meets your approval, please endorse it with your active assistance.

"My Dear Bro. Garrison:—I am an expansionist as will be seen from the enclosed clipping from the Washington Star of this date.

I am pleased to see that you dare speak out on all living questions through the Christian-Evangelist.

"A live paper forms and leads public sentiment; only 'time-servers' follow in the wake. I always read 'Current Events' with supreme interest and satisfaction. That feature of your paper is of itself worth the price of the journal for a year; and there are other features equally good. Sincerely, J. Fraise Richard."

Bro. Richard is principal of the Modern Normal College, Washington, D. C., and knows a good paper when he sees it. We would not object to annexing a few more subscribers in that city.

"I like the Christian-Evangelist very much. Its 'Current Events,' 'Questions and Answers' and Editorials furnish food for thought. Your view of faith is correct. It is more than mere intellectual assent. Pisteuo means commit—committal of will—all. The spiritual feature is a great excellence, so much needed among the Disciples. God help you in the Reformation." Jno. G. Fee.

Berea, Ky.

The important part of this item is the statement that the pages of the Christian-Evangelist "furnish food for thought." That is the one essential item of education. Repetition of those opinions which we have always held and nothing more, may be gratifying to dogmatism, but is surely not conducive to growth. Every opinion advanced by every writer in every issue of the Christian-Evangelist may not agree with the opinion of every reader, but from the conflict of ideas fly the sparks of truth. If we assist you to grow mentally and spiritually ought you not to help us grow in circulation? Subscription blanks and samples on application.

"I ought not close this letter without telling you how much I appreciate the Christian-Evangelist as a weekly visitor in my home. In tone, matter and general excellence it leads among all our religious papers. May its circulation be greatly increased during the coming year." L. B. Pickerill.

De Land, Ill.

We appreciate the compliment. It is our ambition to lead, not because other journals are lacking in good points, but because of our possession of extra qualities. As to circulation, it will gratify our readers to know that we are making fine progress in this direction. If Bro. Pickerill and other of our friends will enter heartily into the spirit of his wish, there is no reason why our circulation ought not to increase at least 50 per cent. this year. We will supply the quality of reading matter; will our subscribers assist us in supplying the quantity of readers.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the ope.

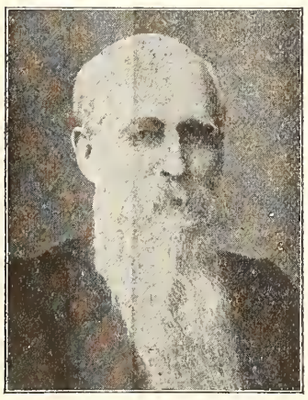
REFORMATIAN OF THE 19TH. CENTURY

Or NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

A Series of Historical Articles to Run Through the Christian-Evangelist During the Year 1899

I. Introductory Period—1809 to 1819.

By Prof. Charles Louis Loos.



This will include those stirring events which occurred in the formative period of our reformatory movement with which the present generation should be thoroughly familiar.

II. From the Organization of the Christian Missionary Society to the Outbreak of the Civil War—1849 to 1861.

By Dr. B. B. Tyler,
Contributing Editor Christian-Evangelist.

This period of our history, embracing the first decade of operations under the American Christian Missionary Society, with Jerusalem and Jamacia missions, will be full of interest to readers of to-day.

III. The War Period, from the Firing on Sumpter up to the Death of Mr. Campbell—1861 to 1866.

By Dr. W. T. Moore,
Dean of the Missouri Bible College, Columbia.

This is a turbulent period in our country's history, and one that tried most severely the principle we had adopted, of unity in Christ, in spite of differences of opinion. It ends with the death of Mr. Campbell, an event which opponents of the Reformation thought would practically end the movement.

IV. The Period Between the Death of Mr. Campbell and the Organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society—1866 to 1875.

By T. W. Grafton,

Pastor Christian Church, Rock Island, Ill.

This period covers one of those turning-points in our history in which our whole future was involved. The conflict between Christian liberty and strict constructionism, and the conception and trial of the "Louisville Plan" of mission work, enter into this part of our history.

V. The Period from 1875 to the Close of 1899.

1. AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

B. L. Smith, Cor. Sec. A.C.M.S.

2. FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

A. McLean, Cor. Sec. F.C.M.S.

3. CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Miss Lois White, Cor Sec. C. W. B. M.

The closing period in our analysis is the period of expansion. Liberty has triumphed in its contest with legalism, and it manifests its power in the formation of new organizations through which to carry on a more aggressive work. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society came to birth, and the old Mother Society through their aid, soon comes to the consciousness of its own mission. The history of these societies will be given by their respective corresponding secretaries.

The whole series will be under the editorial supervision of the editor of the Christian-Evangelist. Series begins in the issue of Jan. 12th. Subscribe at once and secure the entire series.

CURRENT EVENTS.

It has been sometimes darkly hinted and sometimes explicitly stated by those who pretend to have inside information that the pretended friendship of the British Government toward our country is a hollow mockery, a mere bid for an ally in time of need, and based upon no friendly sentiment among the people at large. From time to time anonymous correspondents report that the mass of the British people, so far from looking upon us as friends and brothers, actively sympathized with our enemies in the late war. It was even stated that our peace commissioners during their stay abroad had discovered this real British animosity, and had remarked upon it. Few people of intelligence gave credit to such reports. Those who did will be moved to revise their conclusions in consideration of the statements which Judge Day, president of the commission, made in a public speech last week. Mr. Day says that he counts the increased friendliness of England as "the most gratifying circumstance of our foreign relations during the war," and expresses the conviction that it is a friendship not only between governments, but between peoples. That is the important point. Administrations and foreign secretaries may finesse and flirt with a power across an ocean to gain support for some selfish scheme. But nations are more sincere and (barring always the French) less fickle. We believe that the British people disinterestedly desire our friendship as earnestly as the British Government desires our alliance.

Gov. Roosevelt in a brief article in the Outlook pays tribute to Gen. Leonard Wood as a "model American military administrator." Gen. Wood was colonel of the Rough Riders until Mr. Roosevelt's elevation to that position and his own promotion to the rank of brigadier-general. Gen. Wood is a young man who, as Gov. Roosevelt tells us, has found time in spite of his many duties to keep himself a first-rate football player at the age of thirty-seven. A year ago he ranked as an army surgeon; to-day he is Military Governor of Santiago Province. The public, in so far as it is acquainted with the nature and extent of Gen. Wood's service, approves the estimate quoted and believes that it sees in him "a model military administrator." He has not only proven himself an excellent leader of troops in the field, but has addressed himself with such skill to the solution of the difficult sanitary, economic and administrative problems offered by the city and province of Santiago that that corner of Cuba is becoming an object lesson of what American administration in the island ought to mean. Aside from his native executive ability and personal powers of leadership, which are indispensable for even the faintest degree of success in the performance of such a task, Gen. Wood has two qualifications which have distinguished him. In the first place, his medical training and his years of service as an army surgeon fitted him to deal as an expert with those problems of sanitation which other military leaders could only guess at. As our career of expansion leads us into tropical lands, it will be indispensable to the success of a military commander that he shall be a practical expert in hiegene and sanitation. We have proved the value of medical missionaries. Why not try medical generals in our missionary work for civilization. In the second place Gen. Wood is a young man with the vigor of youth unimpaired and equal to any physical strain that can be put upon him. We recall Gen. Kitchener's requisition when he was making up his force to return to the Soudan. He wanted a man of good executive ability, thoroughly versed in all the problems of finance and not over twenty-five years of age. The physique of a "first-class football player," the scientific training of a physician, a reasonable amount of experience in military affairs, a high degree of natural executive ability, and the vigorous and mature youth of the thirties —there you have the qualification of this "model American military administrator." It will be noted that nothing is said about a political pull. We have spoken thus out of no personal consideration for Gen. Wood, but to present a picture of the type of man for whom the government has need in the developement of our new possessions.

Andrew Carnegie in explaining to Mr. Stead, of the Review of Reviews, why he cannot give aid in a certain proposed scheme, says that he is too busy in an effort to keep this industrial union from falling away from its higher plane to the level of the European powers, which are "armed camps." The attempt to keep the republic up to any particular plane is sure to be a big day's work for one man, and no wonder our Scotch friend feels the responsibility as a heavy burden. But really it ought not to be so very hard to keep the country from degenerating into an armed camp. Nobody wants to make it that. If Mr. Carnegie accurately describes the object of his endeavors, he will have no opposition and about eighty million assistants. We predict for him an overwhelming victory over nobody in particular. But if he means that he is busy fighting the Peace Treaty and to head off the policy of expansion, that is quite a different matter. His words, taken literally, do not carry this import, but we suspect that is what he is actually doing. A great many other good people are doing the same, but granting that they have a strong argument, they ought not to use words so loosely. Again Mr. Carnegie says: "Do not make the mistake of believing that the American people are in favor of a departure from the policy of their fathers. A plebiscite to-day would drown the imperialists." Of course it would, if it could find any to drown. So would a vote in the Senate, the House of Representatives, the Supreme Court, the Cabinet, or any of the state legislatures, if such an issue could arise. But the people generally take quite a different attitude toward the administration, foreign policy, and happily that policy is far removed from anything that can reasonably be called imperialism.

The transfer of sovereignty in Cuba on New Year's Day was effected, not only in Havana but throughout the island, with an absolute absence of disorder which surprised even the most sanguine. Nowhere did the flag fail to inspire respect, nowhere was there a failure to accept cheerfully the sovereignty which it represents or to disturb the peace, the preservation of which it guarantees. In the city of Sancti Spiritus, and the district surrounding it, the flag was raised and saluted and American sovereignty acknowledged without an American soldier within a day's march. If such occurences as this are to be taken as a fair indication of the attitude of the Cubans toward this new sovereign power. it does not appear that there will be needed any vast and burdensome military establishment to maintain our authority and support the civil government in the island. Nevertheless, to guard against possible irregularities troops are still being transported into Cuba, but it is the expectation that many of them will be discharged after a short term of service. At Santiago there was a prospect of trouble arising from the misunderstanding of orders in regard to the customs receipts of that port. The Cubans believed that the system of financial concentration, under which they had suffered so long, was to be restored by some process which would deprive them of the benefits of their revenue. As a matter of fact the order was simply for a weekly report of all customs receipts to headquarters at Havana, so that steps could be taken toward apportioning the revenue among the several provinces as needed. Assurance has been given that there is no intention of stopping the improvements which are under way at Santiago and elsewhere, and all are satisfied.

At the time of the election last fall considerable attention was directed to the fact that the city of Haverhill, Mass., had elected a socialist as mayor. He was elected as a socialist and, according to the statements made in the address which he delivered at his inauguration last week, he proposes to use his power to the utmost "in the defense and support of the principles of socialism in so far as they may be applicable to a municipality." One principle so applicable is the labor union idea. Consequently, the mayor recommends: "(1) The passage of an order establishing the minimum wage for street railway employes at $2 for eight hours' work; (2) Union wages and conditions to prevail in all brick and stonemasons' work performed under the direction of the street depertment; (3) all city printing to bear the Union label." The problem of the unemployed, he said, is not for a city to solve; it could only afford some slight relief. To this end, the mayor recommends to the city to secure land which the otherwise unemployed shall be allowed to cultivate; to enlarge the fuel yard at the city farm so that all who cared to do so could earn their fuel; and to make an appropriation for the public works, to be expended in giving work to those who need it, in the line of park improvement and the construction of bicycle paths. It occurs to us that this young man has in his hands a most excellent opportunity to reveal to the public the good that there may be in socialism. It is the first time, we believe, that a socialist has been placed at the head of a municipal administration in this country. If socialism has any practical efficacy, now is a chance to show it on a small scale.

The official text of the treaty of peace after being presented by the President to the Senate and by it referred to the proper committee has been given to the public. It is not necessary at this time to discuss its details, for its various provisions have long since become familiar to the public through various trustworthy though unofficial sources. The prospect of prompt ratification by the Senate grows daily more certain. Many even of the most determined opponents of expansion see no other course than to ratify the treaty and make their fight later against the retention of the Philippines. Of course Senators Hoar and Vest still stand out against the treaty, but their supporters are dropping away. A partial canvass of the Senate last week showed sixty-one pledged to ratification. This is more than the necessary two-thirds and prompt ratification can now be considered as assured.

The situation at Iloilo at this writing wears a threatening aspect. The insurgents who took possession of this city on the evacuation of the Spanish still maintain a defiant attitude toward Gen. Miller, who at last accounts, had not yet landed his forces. Gen. Otis, at Manila, has notified this government that Gen. Miller has tried every possible method to secure the peaceful surrender of the city, but that he had been unable to make any impression on the insurgents, who declare they are holding the city in obedience to orders received from Aguinaldo. It is also reported that they have prepared to burn the city in case the United States forces under Gen. Miller attempt a forcible landing. The foreign residents and the better class of citizens are leaving the city by every steamer, taking their valuables with them. Instructions have been given from Washington for Gen. Miller to avoid any conflict with the insurgents as far as possible. He will probably land his forces on the island of Quimanras close by, establish his headquarters there and proceed to occupy the remainder of Panay, while he carries on negotiations for the possession of Iloilo. The administration is hopeful of a peaceful issue. There is no question but that the ambition of Aguinaldo is the chief cause of this defiant attitude on the part of the insurgents. The Presidential proclamation, promising them good goverment and participation in it as far as possible, has failed to pacify the ambitious leader and his lieutenants, who are seeking to pose as the liberators and rulers of these islands. It ought not to require a large amount of wisdom for these people to see that the quickest way, as well as the easiest way to self-government and independence, is through co-operation with the United States as the sovereign power in these islands for the time being. And this is the lesson they must learn sooner or later.

Henry Watterson, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, makes a characteristic and picturesque suggestion when he proposes to the Democratic party, for its campaign of 1900, the nomination of George Dewey for President, Fitzhugh Lee for Vice-President, and for a platform nothing more definite than "The Stars and Stripes—God bless them!" This scheme of nominating popular men on no other platform than their popularity and the general sentiment of patriotism, is suggested by what seems to all Republicans and many Democrats to be an extraordinary dearth of national issues to which the Democratic party can attach itself. According to Mr. Watterson we need a new outfit of platforms all around. Free trade and high protective tariff are both antiquated issues and free silver is "as dead as African slavery." The Republicans have found a platform in national unification and expansion, and it will be safer for the Democracy to trust to a personnel without a platform than to take the opposite sides of these issues. But long-distance guesses on Presidential campaigns two years away are a hazardous form of prophecy.

The currency in Cuba and Porto Rico is in a sadly disordered condition. Depreciation of the silver and artificial inflation of the value of gold by decree have produced such a state that that currency cannot readily be assimilated. The regulations which have been adopted will probably solve the problem in the simplest way by driving the Spanish coins out of circulation and making way for American coinage. In spite of the plea of the Havana bankers for the retention of the inflated values of gold coins, they will be reduced to their bullion values. It would have been an obvious good thing for the bankers if, securing American gold at par, they could have shipped it to Spain to be recoined into gold pesetas and disposed of at the established fictitious value. Silver coins, which are mostly Spanish, are to be received at a rate slightly above bullion value, but less than the exchange value in Spain. Consequently they will soon go to Spain and the field will be clear for the introduction of the United States coins. The latter are already in very general use, especially in the vicinities of Havana and Santiago.

THE DIVINE ELEMENT IN HISTORY.

We have been impressed of late in reading after some men in high official stations in life, and some of them in high religious positions, at their failure to apprehend the divine element in human history. Shakespeare saw with his keen vision that—

"There is a divinity which shapes our ends, Rough hew them as we will."

Poets of large mold have always been able to see the workings of an unseen but omnipotent force in the ongoings of the world. But statesmen and historians frequently fail to recognize this divine element. The chief mark of difference, perhaps, between what is known as sacred and profane history is the fact that the former is written from the divine point of view and the latter from the purely human point of view. This makes a vast difference in the facts recited and emphasized and in their interpretation.

We have been led to these reflections by noticing some recent statements in the press concerning the relation that this government should assume toward the Philippine Islands. Some of these not only condemn the war for the liberation of Cuba, but denounce the treaty of peace because it requires the surrender of sovereignty on the part of Spain in the Philippine Islands, and brings them, for the time being, under the sovereignty of the United States government. They call this a war of conquest, greed for territory, ambition for imperialism, all of which in their judgment augurs the abandonment of the fundamental principle underlying our government, namely, that all just government is derived from the consent of the governed.

It is characteristic of these writers and speakers to ignore facts and the consequences of these facts. They ignore the fact that this Asian Archipelago came into our possession through no plan or plot of this government. No one had any thought of such a result before the beginning of the war with Spain. It was an incident of that war. Once Dewey's fleet had taken possession of Manila Harbor and raised the Stars and Stripes on old Ft. Cavite, there were but two courses before us: One was to withdraw our forces from the Philippines and turn the islands over to Spain to continue her oppression and her war with the insurgents; the other was to hold them, for the time being, under our sovereignty in the interest of a higher civilization and of a better and purer form of government.

Considering the fact that the islands came into our possession through no design on our part and was an unexpected result of the war, and considering, too, the most remarkable victory by which this result was obtained, are we not justified in seeing in these events the operation of that divine element which is never absent from human history? Is there not a suggestion here, too plain to be ignored by any one who seeks to understand the movements of God in bringing His purposes to pass in the world, that this government is expected to assume some responsibility and labor and expense for the freedom and elevation of the millions of people who inhabit these islands? Can there be any doubt that it is the will of God that these long-oppressed Malays should have the benefit of civil and religious liberty, even as other peoples enjoy them? Is it an unreasonable supposition that God would use this nation, which He has so signally favored and enriched with His bounties, for elevating our less fortunate neighbors who have been wounded and robbed by oppressors?

This is the divine factor which the men to whom we have referred seem to ignore. Ignoring this divine factor, it is not strange that they would come to such conclusions as those we have mentioned concerning the disastrous results which are to follow an attempt on our part to administer government and establish liberty and justice among these far-away people. On the other hand, if the divine element were once recognized in the events of the late war, and it was seen that God was calling this nation to a higher and wider mission than the mere accumulation of material wealth and caring for itself, fear of consequences would vanish, for it is always safe for a nation as it is for an individual to pursue the course divinely indicated. The man of faith will reason that if God has a wider service for this nation to perform than it had heretofore dreamed of, if He is calling upon us by these events to stretch out the hand of deliverance across the sea to lift the burden of injustice from the shoulders of the oppressed and the down-trodden, He will give us strength and wisdom to fulfill this great mission. The reflex influence of this unselfish service to the oppressed and semi-civilized peoples who have providentially come within the scope of our influence, will certainly tend to our own national purification and moral elevation. The necessity of selecting men of unimpeachable honesty and of administrative ability to minister justice among the people of these islands, and the beneficent results of such administration, will be sure to suggest and emphasize the importance of electing or appointing the same kind of men for similar service in our own country.

Again, who is so blind as not to see God's hand manifest in the death-wound that has been given to sectionalism in our own country, and in the bringing about of a more fraternal feeling between the people of the United States and our kinsmen beyond the sea? These are means to an end. God purposes, no doubt, to use these two strongest members of His family of nations to lift up and bless the weaker members, for they are all his children, and the cry of the oppressed has reached His ears. If God wishes the more perfect unification of this nation and friendly relations with Great Britain, to the end that His kingdom may be advanced in the world, woe to the man that seeks to thwart the divine purpose!

But we are told by some of our "wise men from the East" that we have plenty of abuses at home that demand our attention, and that we would better accomplish the moral, social and political reforms in our own land before attempting to help the people of Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines. Isn't this the old "heathen-at-home" argument which has been so long urged against efforts to evangelize the pagan nations, but which has long since lost its potency? Is it any more applicable to governmental than to religious unselfishness? We think not.

There is another view of the matter which may well receive the consideration of those who speak lightly of our ignoring any obligation we are supposed to be under to the peoples of these islands which have come into our possession during the late war. The nation that forgets God and rules the divine element out of history, and refuses to undertake the tasks which the divine providence is clearly laying upon it, must inevitably suffer the consequences, namely, loss of consciousness of divine guidance, a shrinkage in high moral purposes and aims, and a general decline in public spirit and in high ethical standards. It is a sad day for church or state when it undertakes to run counter to the divine purpose or fails to interpret the meaning and significance of the events of its own time.

SPIRITUAL TEACHING AND EDUCATION.

If we gain the one hundred thousand conversions aimed at in this Jubilee Year of our missionary work, what are we going to do with them? After turning heaven and earth to make these converts, shall we brand them in our ecclesiastical mint and pass them on to the low-grade spiritual life characteristic of so many of the members we already have? What kind of preaching shall we have for true conversions, and what kind of teaching for after-instruction and development? Shall we have a cyclone of evangelistic enthusiasm to sweep a great cargo of raw material into our churches, without sufficient enlightenment and conviction to make the people Christian?

Dr. Parker said, recently, that preaching is the supreme impertinence as between man and man, unless the preacher is divinely inspired and qualified. This is the faith that true preaching is the union of the inspired message and the inspired messenger. Permanent and high spiritual results are produced by converted and consecrated men in the pulpit, if not by men divinely entrusted with a message direct from God to the people before them. Only the birth and the baptism from above can qualify a man to talk to his fellows about God and the soul. Flashy, shallow, sensational, anecdotal, claptrap preaching, accompanied by hocus-pocus manipulation of ignorance, or polemic pounding of the knock-down-and-drag-out style, may redound to the glory of nose-counting, and the statistical gospeling of the time, but not to the glory of God by the conversion of sinners.

What we are seeking is not a hundred thousand converts on paper, but a hundred thousand souls whose names shall be entered into the Lamb's Book of Life.

But the great need is to teach the Word of God to the individual before and after baptism. Dr. Parker said again, in referring to the ministry of the twentieth century, "I distinguish broadly between preachers and teachers. The latter we shall always need. Of well-equipped teachers we can hardly have too many. The coming century will be impatient with incompetent teachers, but the very degree of its impatienee, on the one hand, will be the degree of its appreciation on the other. Men do willing homage to the teachers who can bring them within clear sight of all the kingdoms of God—righteousness, purity, music, beauty, and eternal love." The kingdom of God is a great school-room, and the divine call is for teachers who can induce the people to learn, love, and live the Word of God. People must first be taught to appreciate the Word. John Newton wisely said he had many books he highly prized, some were comparable to silver and gold, but the Bible was a book of bank notes. Every leaf in it was worth more than its weight in gold. Luther declared that he would not take the whole world for half the Bible. He could not live in paradise without it, but he could live in hell itself with it. As a Roman Catholic priest said to Ralph Waldo Emerson, if the Bible were in hell and Martin Luther there to teach it, the climate of that region would change, and immigration would speedily set in that direction!

Our teachers have the Word. Now, if the Word has them as it had John Newton and Martin Luther, the question of system and method might be left to its own solution. Is there not a grave need that this Jubilee Year should be signalized by special and systematic teaching of the Word of God to our young people? Is there not crying need for preliminary special teaching before baptism and in order to it? And after it in the formation of character and equipment for the various activities of Christian service? Have we lost connection with the historic church, in which there was a distinct recognition from the commission on through primitive church life of the need of individual as well as of public instruction in the religion of Christ? It began with Christ and the apostles, and grew out of their clear perception of the soul's need of knowledge. Go teach all nations. And they shall all be taught of God. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. This is one of the great needs to bring the souls of men into vital and reasoned relationship to Jesus Christ. Paul was a teacher, not only in his public ministrations, but from house to house. Christianity in its last analysis is moral and spiritual education, and like every other kind of education, is the effect of teaching.

There were catechumenical schools in the ancient church, in which a course of elementary teaching was prescribed as preparatory to baptism and admission to church membership. Every candidate for the divine ordinance was required to undergo an examination in the fundamental principles of Christianity, and his personal adhesion thereto before he could enter the sacred precincts of the body of Christ. This system, though not apostolic, was superior to the slipshod method of receiving people into the church generally in vogue to-day. Persons brought in without previous church experience or religious knowledge, and not well grounded in the ethical principles of the gospel, with their crudeness and worldliness slightly stunned by a few sermons on faith, repentance and baptism, none of which they rightly understood, and no subsequent careful teaching and shepherding, and what may you expect but wood, hay and stubble instead of gold, silver and precious stones? Should principles that are to govern the whole life of man be relegated to two lectures on Sunday that nobody is bound to listen to or remember? If our children went to the day-school, and heard two discourses a week on the elements of learning, and felt no more obligation to remember and reproduce what they heard than the average church member does to remember and reproduce the two Sunday sermons, how long would it take them to get a secular education? Just as long as it takes the average church member to get a religious education, and that is never. Our methods are wrong. They are at least inadequate. Is it sufficient to teach when nobody is bound to learn? The Sunday morning service of every church should be turned into a Sunday Bible-school, with every member assigned to a class, with a definite lesson to learn and recite like other students. The most intelligent and capable members should be set to teach, and these should be taught by the minister, or should teach themselves, during the week. This Sunday-church-Bible-school should be closed by the preacher, or some other competent man, in a fifteen-minute speech, in which he searchingly applies the crucial and practical points of the lesson. This at least would give the teacher an opportunity to teach and the disciples to learn.

Hour of Prayer.

A FORWARD MOVEMENT.

(Ex. 14:15; Phil. 3:13-16.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Jan. 18.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: God expects and commands his people to go forward. The goal of Christian life lies in the future.

The lesson to-night is a bugle-blast from the trumpet of God, summoning his church to an advance movement. The citation from Exodus brings before us the picture of the children of Israel crowding together on the banks of the Red Sea, with the hosts of Pharaoh pressing hard in the rear, and Moses, their leader, interceding with God for deliverance. The deliverance comes, but perhaps not in the way expected. It comes in the form of a command to advance. "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward," is the Lord's word to Moses. In obedience to that word of command they passed through the Red Sea out of bondage into liberty, and from the condition of a tribe of slaves into glorious freedom and nationality. If they had not gone forward under their appointed leader God would not have delivered them. They would have fallen prey to Pharaoh and his chariots.

How often has the church of God halted and hesitated before obstacles which it felt it could not overcome! In every such great crisis the voice of Jehovah has been heard, through some appointed leader, bidding it to go forward. All the great reformations in the church have been wrought by men who have heard the voice of God calling them to advance, and have gone forward in the face of difficulties, trusting in God for deliverance.

The church to-day is confronted by many difficult problems. There is the problem of its own unification and the mobilization of its forces for active service. There is the problem of national purification, which can only be accomplished under the leadership of the church; the problem of the liquor traffic, the social evil and the industrial problem. These can only be solved by an advanced movement, by aggressive action. Do these look formidable? If we advance God will open the way.

In order to forward this movement on the part of the church there must be an individual advance on the part of the membership, each one of whom must say with Paul: "I count not myself yet to have apprehended; yet one thing I do: forgetting the things which are behind and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal, unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus" (Phil. 3:13 15). This is a personal application of the principle and purpose of progress. The apostle, great and noble as we believe him to have been, was conscious of imperfection, and did not claim to have realized as yet, in his own life, the purpose for which he had been called of Christ, but he determined to press on toward that goal, subordinating everything else to that one supreme aim in life.

What was that goal toward which it was the one purpose of the apostle's life to press on? Was it not the ideal character of Jesus Christ? This, then, was Paul's great purpose. Is it not the only purpose worthy of immortal beings created in God's image? Is it our purpose?

Paul's plan of realizing this purpose is worthy of our consideration. It was (1) "forgetting the things which are behind," and (2) "stretching forward to the things which are before." By "forgetting the things behind," he means the giving up of all those things in the past which hinder our religious growth and progress, and by "stretching forward to the things which are before" he means the subordinating of all earthly prizes, pleasures and gains to the one supreme aim.

Are we prepared, in view of the vast issues at stake, to adopt this plan of life for the future? If so, it is safe to predict that God will be with us and will open the sea before us, and will lead us on to a glorious future.

Suppose there be many things we do not understand and concerning which we do not all see alike. Let us not be disturbed at this. "Let us, therefore, as many as be perfect be thus minded: and if in anything ye are otherwise minded even this shall God reveal unto you" (v. 16). This is God's method of revealing Himself. As we go forward He gives us increasing light for each new problem that arises.

May this be a year in which the church universal and each particular congregation shall make great advance (1) in the knowledge of the Lord and of His will; (2) in consecration of time and talents to His cause; (3) in spiritual-mindedness; (4) in Christian charity; (5) in Christian liberality, and (6) in aggressive Christian work.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who didst speak to thy servant, Moses, bidding him to command the people to go forward, grant that we may hear Thy voice ringing in our ears, calling us to an advance movement. Thou hast sent Jesus Christ, Thy Son, into this world to be our Leader and Commander, for which we thank and praise Thy Holy Name. He has gone before us, showing us the way, and has asked us to follow Him. O, that His words may come with fresh power and inspiration into all our hearts, and may Thy Church gird itself for a mighty advance movement against all the forces of evil that impede the progress of Thy Kingdom! To this end we pray that we may purge ourselves of all uncleanness, and, fixing our eyes upon our great Leader, may we go forth to conquest and to victory. May we not be satisfied with that to which we have already attained, but press forward earnestly until we have reached the true goal of life, even likeness with our Lord Jesus; to whose Name be glory forever and ever. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Christian Quarterly for January, '99, has a leading article by the editor, Dr. W. T. Moore, on "How Shall We Save the Rich?" This is a very suggestive and timely topic. It is a question that has not received the attention among us that has been given to the relation between baptism and the remission of sins, but it is now, at least, a living question. Mr. Spurgeon said the question concerning missions was not whether the heathen would be saved without the gospel, but whether Christians could be saved if they did not give them the gospel. Of course this was gloriously inconsistent with Mr. Spurgeon's Calvinism, but that was a way the great preacher had. So, we say, it is not so much a question as to whether our educational, benevolent and missionary interests can be saved without the generous help of the rich, as whether the rich can be saved without a liberal investment of their means in these and other methods of benefiting their fellowmen. If we do not explain away all the meaning of Christ's teaching concerning the use of wealth and its relation to character, it is, after all, not a question either as to the destiny of those who fail to recognize their stewardship, and to use their means as in trust for God.

In order that wealth be not a millstone about the neck of its owner to sink him in the sea of perdition, Dr. Moore suggests that three conditions must obtain: (1) It must be "righteously accumulated;" (2) must be limited to such an amount as the owner can safely use without imperiling his own soul or the rights of others, and (3) "it must be used for noble ends." This is certainly as conservative a view of the subject as any Christian can take. There are those who deny the right of any man to be rich and be a Christian. But even these radical reformers admit that under existing conditions a Christian who is rich through no fault of his, can do no better than to regard his wealth as held in trust by him for the Lord's cause and use it accordingly. Dr. Moore's remedy for the danger that threatens the rich is an earnest effort to educate the conscience on this subject, through the colleges, the pulpit and the press.

There is one danger connected with the ownership of wealth with which the article mentioned does not deal. We refer to the custom of waiting until one dies to release his grip on his purse-strings. It is an effort to cancel at death, by means of a will, an obligation that existed all through the life of the testator, it may be. Many rich men are soothing their consciences to-day with a codicil in their will providing for leaving a part of their wealth to some college or other good cause, while they are doing nothing during their lifetime for the cause that so much needs their help now. Of course, if one has only enough for support during his lifetime, and desires that after death it go to some good cause, that is another matter. Though even in that case the annuity plan is better than a will. It is not the money simply that our educational and benevolent institutions need; they need also, along with the money, the wise personal supervision of men whose business ability has enabled them to make money.

In reading an old book the other day we ran across this strange passage: "And I hated all my labor wherein I labored under the sun; seeing that I must leave it unto the man that shall be after me. And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool?" So wrote the pessimist of Ecclesiastes. But there is not the slightest reason why a Christian should write or feel that way about the wealth he may have accumulated. He need not "leave it unto the man that shall be after" him, and if he is wise he will probably not do so. He can endow a college or a Bible Chair while he yet lives, and see that his money is so invested that it will continue to work for God for ages to come. He can invest it in mission work so that it will go on preaching the gospel among men long after he has gone to heaven. We know a great deal better what to do with wealth now than they did in the days of Solomon. Christ has given some lessons on that point which make such a lamentation as the above impossible for a Christian.

Aside from the uncertainty as to whether our estates are to fall into the hands of a fool or a wise man, when we go hence, which imparted a sense of weariness to the writer in Ecclesiastes, there is the further consideration that to give our money away when it is no longer ours, and we cannot use it, does not furnish the highest proof of our liberality and willingness to sacrifice for the Lord's cause. We are willing at death what would otherwise go to somebody else, and this somebody else often resents this delayed act of generosity by attacking the will and often breaking it. The man that "cometh after us" is usually more zealous for his personal rights than he is for the good cause which we aimed to benefit in our "last will and testament." The sure way to avoid trouble and the defeat of our purposes is to carry them out while we live. Is not this both good sense and good religion?

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I think, perhaps, it would be quite appropriate for me to take charge of the "Easy Chair" department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST instead of writing "New York Letters," for since Christmas am, literally speaking, the occupant of an "easy chair." The good people of the 169th Street Church, whom I have the high honor to serve in the gospel, sent to my study at Christmas a handsome oak, leather-seated, revolving chair with their best wishes. I am certain, however, they did not mean it as a gentle (easy) hint for me to take my ease and do less pastoral visiting, though I am frank to confess the temptation is strong in that direction. The "Branch Sunday-school" gave me also a fine gold pen (with which to write the "New York Letter," I suppose) and the other one, the main school, gave me "The Manuscripts of the Bible" (doubtless to suggest that I should preach the pure Word). These and many other presents to me and mine beautifully express the affection of a congregation, who I believe are the best people in the world. While I have this beautiful pen in my hand allow me to thank you for the "Easy Chair" article of Dec. 22nd. I read it from the pulpit Christmas night to the delight of the whole congregation.

Wishing you a Happy New Year,

I am sincerely yours, S. T. WILLIS.

1281 Union Ave., New York, Jan. 3.

We are grateful to our New York correspondent for his kind appreciation of our Christmas reverie, but we shall never surrender our Chair without a struggle. We know a good thing when we sit on it. We trust, however, he may win "golden opinions" with his new pen.

Questions and Answers.

What are the steps necessary to transfer a Missionary Baptist minister into the ministry of the Christian Church?

F. D. Wheeler.

He should furnish the local church with which he unites evidence of his Christian character, and the church or churches for which he may wish to minister with evidence of both his Christian character and his ability as a minister of the gospel. Of course, the application for connection with us would carry with it the implication that he accepts the principles for which we plead. It would be well to see to it that in the transfer the "missionary" element of the brother is not lost.

Is there scriptural ground for refusing membership to those who have been immersed, yet have not made the confession in a certain way usual among the Disciples of Christ?

Certainly not. It may be taken for granted that the church receiving such person to baptism did so on what it regarded as sufficient evidence of the Christian faith of the candidate. The New Testament gives a variety of forms in which the essential faith of the gospel is confessed, and we are not authorized to make any particular form a condition of membership. The essential thing is that Christ be confessed.

Please harmonize the utterances of Jesus as reported by Matthew and John. Matthew reports him as saying: "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." While John reports him as saying: "I go to prepare a place for you."

I. F. Tanner.

Dunkburg, Mo.

The first step, we should say, would be to eliminate the idea of carpentry from the mind as having anything to do with the preparation referred to in these passages. And then the fact that Christ "stood as a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," will throw some light on the saying that the kingdom was "prepared" for the righteous "from the foundation of the world." Each of these facts was in the purpose and plan of God from the beginning. The language of Jesus, as quoted by John, means that his going away was for the benefit of his disciples and had relation to their future well-being, and especially to their association with him in the future life.

I saw in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of the 22nd inst., under "Literature," your commendation of the "American Revised Bible." I notice also in the Outlook of the 17th inst. a protest against the Oxford and Cambridge edition of the American Revised Bible. Is this the Bible you commend?

Since the notice of the American Revised Bible above referred to was written, our attention has been called by two or three of our readers to the criticism in the Outlook and the Independent of this same edition. The point that these papers make is that the American Revisers were prohibited by an agreement with the publishers of the Revised Bible from bringing out their edition for 14 years. This time does not expire until next summer. The Oxford and Cambridge presses, seeing that they were not to get the contract of publishing the American edition, and knowing the American Revisers were prohibited from issuing the American edition until next summer, took time by the forelock and have issued this edition, incorporating into the text the readings and renderings preferred by the American Revision Companies. This fact we had not noticed when we wrote our commendation of the work. We knew there was a prohibition upon the American Revisers which did not expire until 1899, but supposed they had been permitted to anticipate a little in getting out an early edition. If the facts are as stated by the Independent and the Outlook, the course of the Oxford and Cambridge presses does not seem to us to be very honorable. Besides, it is claimed that while they have simply incorporated in the text, the preferred renderings of the American Revisers, as indicated by the American Revisers fourteen years ago, they have not applied the principles underlying these renderings to other passages as it is the purpose of the American Revisers to do, as they have still maintained their organization and are engaged in perfecting their work in order to bring out the proper American Revised Bible next summer. In view of these facts we would advise our querist and all those who can afford to wait a few months longer, to do so, and get the American Revised Bible as it shall be issued under the supervision of the American Revision Companies by Thos. Nelson & Sons, New York.

1. Whose fault is it that over one-half of nearly every local church or congregation are satisfied with obedience in baptism and after that are but nominal Christians?

2. Is it because they are not taught to claim the promise given in Acts 2:38?

3. Was not the fulfillment of that promise in apostolic times an evidence of acceptance with God as well as to show to the world his power?

4. How is the natural state of man changed to the spiritual? B. B.

1. To the extent that this condition prevails it must largely be the fault of the teaching these churches have had. Any church may be deceived in receiving unconverted persons into its membership, but no church should retain such when their character becomes evident. A proper emphasis, however, on the necessity of a thorough conversion will reduce this element to a minimum.

2. We fear this is one cause of the lack of greater spiritual life in many of our members. Sufficient emphasis has not been laid upon the gift of the Spirit as a condition of Christian life.

3. No doubt it was, and should be so to-day. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his."

4. If by the "natural state" is meant the unregenerate state, our answer is: "Except a man be born from above he cannot see the kingdom of God." This spiritual birth is brought about by faith in and submission to Jesus Christ. There is no substitute for the birth from above.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

INTRODUCTORY PERIOD.

I. CAMPBELL'S CONNECTION WITH THE BAPTISTS.

BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

The story of the early years of our effort to restore apostolic Christianity—the years which constituted its formative period—deserves for many reasons to be studied anew, and diligently and profoundly, by the present generation of our people, in order that those into whose hands, under God, the destiny for the present and the future of this great cause is committed, may well understand what were its motives and character; and that so they may keep it true to its exalted aim. They will thus gather renewed, strong and steadfast confidence in it, and be filled with the lofty inspiration which its purpose, its character and splendid achievements should awaken in the hearts of the true men and women who to-day are its legitimate inheritors and representatives.

I have been asked to set forth, within the limits of a single paper, the history, in its salient points, of the early relations of the Campbells to the Baptists.

The connection of the Campbells, father and son, especially that of the latter, with the Baptists in the beginning of their activity as reformers, had a very important influence on the tendency and the development of the reformation which they advocated. This chapter of our history furnishes lessons of great value to us as standard-bearers of the cause to which they devoted their lives.

QUESTION OF BAPTISM.

Neither Thomas Campbell nor his son Alexander, when they first conceived the idea of the union of all Christians on the foundation of the New Testament alone, regarded the question of baptism as of any special moment in this great controversy. As many do to-day, they believed that such a union could be accomplished and could exist without disturbing the differences of belief and practice relative to this ordinance. The religious agitators, such as Walker and others, with whom Alexander Campbell in his youth had come in contact in Ireland and Scotland, and who exercised no little influence on his mind, had never touched in any reformatory way the baptismal controversy. Indeed, he had had, thus far, but a very limited personal acquaintance with the Baptists. In a sermon on the commission, delivered by him in February, 1810, and repeated in May and June, 1811, he said: "As I am sure it is unscriptural to make this matter a term of communion, I let it slip. I wish to think and let think on these matters." His father was in entire accord with him in this respect.

But when these earnest reformers—the son always in the lead—proceeded to a strict application of the rule already adopted by them, viz., that everything in the doctrine and practice of the church should be tested by the Holy Scriptures as the supreme and final tribunal of decision, they soon found that baptism was, especially now, a question of great moment, and had to be regarded in a real effort to restore primitive Christianity.

We need not go into the detailed history of how the Campbells came to this conclusion. Suffice it to say that they soon came to see that infant baptism and sprinkling and pouring were wholly unknown to the New Testament; that only believing penitents were proper scriptural subjects, and that immersion was the one true meaning of baptism and the only practice of the primitive church. This decided the matter with these men of supreme loyalty to the Bible.

The discovery of true apostolic baptism, as to its form and subject, at once led the reformers to the further question of its scriptural object. This, too, had been greatly darkened by the traditions of the churches, in practice and preaching, even more than in the creeds.

As soon as the Campbells and their associates had reached a correct conclusion on baptism, in prompt obedience to the divine law they were baptized in the primitive, scriptural way, and on a simple profession of their faith in Christ. Elder Mathias Luce, the Baptist preacher to whom application was made to administer the ordinance, at first hesitated because it was not according to Baptist usage to baptize candidates without a previous satisfactory "experience;" but finally he yielded, believing that the proper conditions were present. The Campbells, and others with them, were immersed by Elder Luce in June, 1812. These reformers, under such brave leaders, from the very first were boldly determined on a return in all things to the apostolic order, to the rejection of all unscriptural traditions, however reasonable and cherished. Go1 be thankful for this!

THE FIRST CHURCH.

The little Brush Creek Church now in a manner stood alone. The Campbells felt that this was not in harmony with their aims. They did not wish to appear as establishing a new religious party. For this reason, and because of strong solicitations from Baptists, they were received into the association nearest them; not, however, without objections on the part of a few preachers, because this little congregation insisted on being received on the simplest scriptural conditions, without consenting to any creed beyond the Bible. The Philadelphia Confession of Faith was then the standard among the Baptists.

This connection with the Baptists became eventful with these reformers. It continued some fifteen years or more, a good part of the time more formal than real. No little opposition was manifested from the very first against A. Campbell by some Baptist preachers, doubtless to a good degree from jealousy of his superior talents and influence, but mainly, we must believe, because of wide doctrinal differences, to be stated hereafter in this paper.

It remains, as briefly as possible, to consider the effect on the history of the Reformation of this association of the reformers with the Baptists.

Up to the time when this union took place the range of the influence of the Campbells and their associates was limited. The alliance with the Baptists at once gave to them an open door to large communities of churches and people. It was among the Baptists that the first strong gains of adherents were made, and a broad and firm foundation was laid for the cause which A. Campbell was pleading with such wonderful power and devotion.

The Baptists were naturally more ready to listen to the argument for a return to the New Testament order of things than any other Protestants, because they had for centuries been the very people who had bravely borne aloft the banner of apostolic Christianity against the corruptions of the church in doctrine and life. It was they who had come back to the great doctrine of a converted church by means of the baptism of penitent believers only, against pedobaptist Christendom—which meant the whole Christian world. And it was they who had restored immersion as the true scriptural form of the ordinance. We know what a heroic history this had been for centuries, glorious with martyrdom in every Christian land where these apostles of primitive Christianity appeared. It cannot pass our observation and appreciation that it is the union of our fathers with these people—providential and inevitable, a logical fact, we may say—that gave the first strong impulse to our cause, and to which beyond all question so much of its wonderful success must be attributed.

A WIDER FIELD.

As soon as A. Campbell espoused the great argument of believers' immersion as the only true baptism, and with the learning and the wonderful power of mind and spirit he revealed, so unusual then in the field of his activity, thousands of Baptists were won by him to the cause to the advocacy of which he had devoted his life.

Very soon the baptismal question came to the front as a logical necessity; and it must stand there as long as pedobaptism dominates in Christendom. Mr. Campbell, in the beginning of his debate with McCalla in 1823, called baptism "the most important institution of the Lord of Glory;" to this view he had come.

The Baptists, especially in the West, had now found in this ardent reformer an advocate of their cause against prevailing pedobaptism such as they had never had before. His debates with Mr. Walker in Eastern Ohio, in 1820, and with McCalla in Kentucky, in 1823, served to increase their admiration of his power as their great champion.

The sphere of this new and really novel campaign for a strict return to New Testament Christianity, with apostolic baptism as one of its most attractive features, extended at once, by reason of this alliance with the Baptists, over the populous region of Eastern Ohio, Western Pennsylvania and Northwestern Virginia along the Ohio River, constituting together an extensive territory, inhabited by a deeply religious and wide-awake people. In the West, in an extraordinary manner, the power of this great plea was felt in parts of central and the extreme southwestern portion of Ohio, especially in Cincinnati. Thence it crossed the Ohio River into Kentucky, and found ready acceptance and development in that splendid territory of which Lexington is the center, in Louisville, in Mason county and in other parts of the state.

In the regions and localities which have been named the strong foundations of the success and growth of the cause of our Reformation were laid; here it won its first great victories. What we have since witnessed elsewhere of progress and triumphs has been largely the further expansion out from these original centers of our power. We must not fail to add here, also, Eastern Virginia where, at an early date, in a very direct manner through the Campbells personally, the new and welcome message of a restoration of primitive Christianity was preached, and with much success.

In all these fruitful fields the presence of the Baptists was the occasion and opportunity for the reformer; to them he came, with them was the sphere of his efforts and his influence. It is a most interesting study to trace the development of this reform through the lives of Baptist Churches and people. Lack of space forbids our undertaking this inviting task here.

In Ohio the entire Mahoning Association passed over bodily into the reformatory current, and with extraordinary enthusiasm. This Association extended from the Ohio River, taking Wellsburg and Steubenville as a point of departure, to the extreme northern part of the state. The Stillwater Association, also in Ohio, embracing Harrison, Belmont and Guernsey counties as its chief territory, followed in the wake of Mahoning. Large numbers of the Baptists in this broad and important region were won to the new cause. In many instances they took with them the meeting houses. While the congregations abandoned the denominational name, they were still known in popular speech as Baptist Churches. As examples may be mentioned the church at Wellsburg, Va., which in 1850, when I preached there, was often yet called "the Baptist Church." So the congregation in Cincinnati, then meeting at corner of Walnut and Eighth Streets, our oldest church in that city, was in 1856, when I served it, still known in the court records as a Baptist Church. The congregations at Somerset, Pa., at New Lisbon, Warren, Wilmington, Dayton, O., were organized originally as Baptists.

REASON FOR BAPTIST OPPOSITION.

With this movement among the Baptists towards the reformers came a large number of their preachers; indeed, these were as a rule the leaders. The first strong body of preachers that gathered around A. Campbell was largely composed of these "Reformed Baptists," as they were called. Many names familiar to the older men yet living among us were of this early pioneer class of warriors, such as Walter Scott, Adamson Bentley, the Nestor of Eastern Ohio; D. S. Burnet and James Challen, of Southwestern Ohio; T. M. Henley, R. L. Coleman, James Goss, of Virginia, and a "glorious company" of imperial men like John Smith, J. T. Johnson and P. S. Fall, of Kentucky. It was my good fortune to be well acquainted with almost all of these admirable men and the churches they brought with them. The entire field of Eastern Ohio, Western Pennsylvania and Northwestern Virginia is familiar to me.

Looking at our past history, it is difficult to say what would have been the fortunes of A. Campbell's reformatory enterprise during its first two or three decades if it had not found an admirably propitious field among the Baptists. It certainly would not have made the remarkable progress which signalized its early history. This is a fact we must not forget. The influence of our connection with the Baptists on the entire history of the Reformation is a subject worthy of our most appreciative study. In this respect we owe very much to the Baptists, in spite of the sad fact that they often became our most determined opponents. Let us not wonder at the fact that the chiefs of this great people for many years did not cherish a very fraternal affection for us. These men remained sincere Baptists. Those of their number who lived in the East and who were least acquainted with us were, more than their brethren in the West, harsh in their judgment of us. They had a reason for this quite sufficient for them. Men like Conant, of New York, and Dowling, of Philadelphia, used to say, "We cannot forget how these 'reformers' captured our churches in the West, meeting houses and all, and numbers of our preachers." Looking at the matter through their eyes we will not be surprised at this feeling on their part nor pass a harsh judgment against them.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN CAMPBELL AND BAPTISTS.

The connection between the reformers and the Baptists could not continue. A. Campbell never was a Calvinist and the Baptists were strong Calvinists. His views on the relation of the two covenants they regarded as most unsound. In the matter of spiritual influence, in conversion especially, the two parties were far apart. In the questions of the prerequisites to baptism and of its object, the reformers passed away from Baptist ground. The Baptists were strict Trinitarians; and because A. Campbell rejected the theological and scholastic terminology on this important point of Christian doctrine, and furthermore, because men had come among us who held a sort of semi-Unitarian principles, the Baptists, especially those in the East, where the reformers were but little known, and whose close proximity to Eastern Unitarianism brought them to understand well its true character and its evil influence, looked for these reasons with suspicion upon us as favoring this "heresy." And yet, none were more decided in their rejection of Unitarianism than the Campbells, Walter Scott, and their associates generally in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Virginia, and the majority, I think, of them also in Kentucky. The Godhood of Jesus was with these men a matter of supreme importance in the doctrine of Christ. Finally, the reformers all very soon rejected the Philadelphia Confession of Faith, primarily because they refused consent to any human formula of doctrine, and also because some of this confession they did not believe.

For all these reasons, therefore, it is evident that a real and lasting union between the Baptists and the reformers was impossible.

A. Campbell, as already stated in the beginning of this article, had at first no very exalted opinion of the Baptists of that day, because of the amount of bigotry and narrowness he witnessed among them. They were also, as he saw them, generally a very illiterate people, the preachers as well as the people. It is not impossible, too, that he may have brought with him from Ireland and Scotland some of the prejudice against the Baptists prevailing in the British Islands.

But it is perfectly evident that on a better acquaintance with this people he learned to have a high regard for them. Dr. Richardson in his Life of A. Campbell (Vol. II., page 103), says: "During his tour [in Kentucky in September, 1824], which occupied nearly three months, he visited a large portion of the state, addressing everywhere large audiences, and greatly extending his influence and acquaintance with the Baptists. The notions he had entertained concerning them as a people in the early part of his ministry had been greatly changed by his intercourse with them, so that he learned to esteem them very highly and to regard them as much nearer the primitive pattern than other religious denominations. He regarded their conceptions of the Church of Christ as essentially correct, and thought it would not be difficult to eliminate from the Baptist Churches such erroneous theories and usages as had gained admission." Every one intimately familiar with Mr. Campbell knows this to be true.

To confirm the above statement of Dr. Richardson, I add here an expression from A. Campbell's lips, but a few days before he died.

CAMPBELL'S OPINION OF BAPTISTS.

In the last week of April, 1866, a meeting was arranged at Pittsburgh between prominent members of a Baptist Church, the preacher included, and a number of our people, to consider our relation doctrinally to each other. It fell to me to draw up the points to be considered and to lead in the discussion. This paper, with the minutes of this meeting, is yet in my possession. I held that it was wisest first chiefly to note the points in which we agreed. It was a very delightful and profitable conference.

As soon as I returned to Bethany I went to Mr. Campbell. He was alone in his bedroom, taking his frugal evening meal; he was too unwell to meet the family at the table. When he had heard the good report I brought of the Pittsburg Conference, he was deeply moved; tears were in his eyes. He then said: "I have always regretted that the Baptists and we had to part; it ought not to have been so. I had hoped that we and that great people could have stood together for the advocacy of apostolic Christianity. They are worthy of such a mission."

This was on Friday evening. On Sunday the fatal attack fell upon him, and in a few days he died. I value this almost dying testimony of the illustrious reformer to his high esteem of the Baptists. It came from the depth of his heart, as the mature fruit of a long and rich experience, and is worthy of record, and of appreciation by us.

THE GREATEST DANGER OF RELIGIOUS EMOTION.

ROBT. T. MATHEWS.

One of the most critical experiences of the religious life is its emotions. They are sure experinces, so taught and so exemplified in the Word of God. Sometimes it is the "peace that passeth all understanding," again the "joy unspeakable and full of glory," then zeal in service, then "love shed abroad in our hearts through the Holy Spirit." Every healthy, growing Christian will have more or less of these holy feelings, varying with his individual temperament or his special duties. They may be expected, prayed for, and they are full of good for us all in the storm and stress of life.

There are not a few dangers always in the wake of religious emotions. Such perils as hypocrisy and fanaticism are evident; but the most subtle trouble is making religious feeling a luxury. This habit works in a twofold way. Sometimes one enjoying a rapture of the soul will be led to enjoy it with the "fatal taint of self-reference," congratulating himself on the possession of such an experience, and straightway will be led on to pity others and to even question their salvation or piety because they seem to be strangers to such a blessing. The beginning of the danger is in thinking so intensely of one's self while experiencing this visitation of God. It is heard sometimes in such vulgar confession as, "Well, how I did enjoy myself in that meeting!" It is seen sometimes in a free flow of tears, an hour or two after which is marked by a sudden explosion of temper and a lava of angry words. It may be felt in one's sense of self-importance after an eloquent, impressive speech or prayer in public. In all such indulgence of religious feeling there is a terrible judgment in the reaction that inevitably follow, evidenced so often in the totally opposite notion that, after all, one is not so sure of being a child of God. The history of mysticism exhibits a painful and morbid record of these hours of gloom, the poison of selfishness becoming more virulent with every moment spent in anxiety or despair.

Nor the less easy does there grow on the emotional Christian the habit of thinking of himself more highly than he ought to think, in comparison with his brethren who seem never to have these hours of exaltation and exultation. In such judgments he may not only do an injustice to the faith and loyalty of his fellows, whom the Lord assuredly accepts, but his raptures take on a dogmatic expressisn, and become a hobby of doctrine and exhibition. He needs to learn, as we all need to learn, not to overestimate religious feeling. He needs to learn, as we all need to learn, not to set religious feeling off to itself as the whole of religion. He needs to learn, as we all need to learn, not to make religious feeling a luxury. Its good is something far better; its uses far more serious. Paul's marvelous rapture, he tells us, was followed by "a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to buffet" him, that he "should not be exalted overmuch." He learned the deep, deep lesson, "sorrowful yet always rejoicing." In sight of heaven his testimony was not about what he felt or how much he had enjoyed of religion, but about duty and deed— "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith."

Religious feeling has a rich blessing in its cluster. It is meat to refresh us and invigorate us for obedience. At once a relief from care and burden, and a stimulus for service, it must have its tests in the light of all the truth of revelation and the whole ideal of spiritual character. All thought of self must have this subordination to doctrine and duty. Then well the prophet's vision be fulfilled in every "high hour of visitation from the living God." "They shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint."

THE STUDY OF MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

J. W. LOWBER.

The happiness of man depends upon a complete enjoyment of all his powers and susceptibilities. God has constituted man for enjoyment, and he only fails in happiness by perverting the faculties God has given him. The faculties of the mind must be studied in their proper order, and each one must occupy its legitimate position in administering to the wants of man. The great mistakes in life are caused by the unnatural and uneven development of the body and the mind.

The work of moral philosophy is to see that the affections and will are properly cultured as well as the intellectual faculties of the human mind. It is a fact that some of the best seholars in the land are infidels. This is largely caused by a neglect in moral education. The sensibilities and will become subordinate to the intellect, and frequently very intellectual persons are dissipated and immoral. We need a more thorough course in our high schools and colleges in the department of moral philosophy. The following are doubtless, the principal reasons why moral culture is so much neglected:

1. Man appears to value intellectual more than moral worth. When the world reaches the highest state of culture, this evidently will not be the case; but the fact cannot be doubted at present. The great masters in science and literature are more admired at present than are such moral heroes as was the celebrated Howard, who spent his life in visiting the houses of woe. The time will come when Penn, Wilberforce and Wesley will be more admired than Cæsar, Napoleon, or Frederick the Great. Mere intellectual superiority is no more to be compared to moral virtue than are the transient meteors to the great orb of day.

2. Moral culture is frequently neglected because persons think that intellectual culture comprehends everything. To the philosophic Christian the study of nature in all its laws and adaptations suggests the wisdom and beneficence of the Creator. But the man of the world who ignores the Bible and studies only nature is in great danger of making a god out of blind force and insensate matter. The Bible is the important book to study in the department of ethics, and in connection with the great volume of nature.

3. Many claim that morals and religion should be taught by parents and ministers, and not be included in our college courses. In that they are certainly wrong, for the highest part of our nature should be the most important in the highest departments of study. The highest part of our nature can be educated in the college course without the necessity of teaching sectarianism. The immoral habits frequently acquired by students at college are indeed fearful. In some cases the college course really does more harm than good.

Some text-books comprehend more Bible truth should be written. The book of Proverbs contains much that ought to be included in the book. Our duties to God and man should be clearly set forth as taught in the Bible, and not some abstract heathen system of ethics independent of the highest system of morals of which man is capable of forming a conception. The Persian system of equity, so graphically described by Xenophon, is superior in some respects to our modern schools. It is claimed by some that moral philosophy is not an inductive science. When it includes the Bible, as well as the system of nature, it can certainly wisely use the inductive method. We are as thoroughly convinced that there can be a true science of morals as we are convinced that there can be a true science of mind. As the moral faculties of man's nature are the highest; the science which treats of these must be the greatest of the sciences. The study of the science and art of morals should begin at the commencement of the child's education, and continue through life. The parent should be more interested in teaching the child truth, honesty, goodness, than in praising every indication of smartness. The education that will be durable is the education that will make the moral faculties supreme. This education will make men happy in life, and prepare them for the realities of a future life.

A RALLY ALL ALONG OTHER LINES.

JAMES C. CREEL.

The rally all along the line for one hundred thousand additions to the churches of Christ during this, our Jubilee Year, is all right, provided we do not put too much emphasis on the quantity to the neglect of the quality. It takes both quality and quantity to make true additions to the church of God. We must not make too much noise over numbers for fear we may leave out the all-important factor of quality. Numbers will be mere "hay, wood and stubble" in the end, if we neglect the genuine quality. The devil has always had the great numbers on his side, but not the quality.

The cry, "a rally all along the line" for one hundred thousand additions to the churches this year, is an inspiring battle cry. But there ought to be a rally all along "other lines" also, which may be indicated as follows:

1. We need to rally all along the lines for more vital piety in all the churches. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord." "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see [enjoy] God."

2. We need to rally all along the line for more zeal or consecration in every good word and work of the church. The blessed Christ "gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

3. We need to rally all along the line for the rooting out of our hearts all vainglory and selfishness. "Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves."

4. We need to rally all along the line, most of all, for more thorough conversion to the Christ of pulpit and pew. The blessed Lord says: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

All along these lines of vital piety, more zeal in every good word and work, the rooting out of our hearts all vainglory and selfishness, more thorough conuersion to the Christ, let us most earnestly work and pray this Jubilee Year.

Courtesy in Controversy.

An article that recently appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on the above subject is a very remarkable illus ration of the thing named. It contains such loving overtures as, "insinuating criticism,"—"unlovely if not unchristian men"—"irascible and pugnacious spirit"—"intolerably boorish"—violence of spirit"—"ferocious as a wolf"—"it is the same spirit, but the spirit is robbed of the mediæval instruments of torture and persecution"—"vitriol is injected into the morals and insinuated into the character"—"with evident interest and satisfaction of causing the victim uneasiness if not agony"—"the fagot is applied to his reputation"—"a man is put on the rack"—"if some of the writers were transfixing the devil"—"hysteria and frothing at the pen."

The man who can in the use of such pleasing language and in such a sweet spirit attribute such delightful things to brethren he does not name, but wishes understood, is surely properly called in to help on the impending revolution that is coming to the Disciples.

Possibly the author of these encomiums is simply seeking to break the force of some unanswerable criticisms he has read by this remarkable ebullition of courtesy and grace. It is not at all unusual, when arguments cannot be met, for some interested person to have much to say against a bad spirit and in favor of Christian courtesy—even though in doing so he may feel constrained to use such language as is quoted above Of course in such cases the persons hinted at so lovingly are not named lest their modesty should be hurt by the flattering references. How appropriate and beautiful it is to manifest Christian courtesy when advocating it! H. MCDIARMID.

[It may be said in mitigation of any seeming severity in the phrases quoted from Bro. Gates' article that he was describing an evil which he desired to oppose, and in so doing it is permissible to describe it in strong terms, and further he was speaking in the abstract and not in the concrete. It is not of any particular writer, or of any particular article that he affirms all these things, but of the spirit of discourtesy which too often prevails even in religious controversy. Viewed in this light, we think his language could hardly be called extravagant. While the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was included in the scope of Bro. Gates' criticism, we desire to express our entire sympathy with and approval of the purpose and import of his article. While there has been gratifying improvement in the spirit of our discussions, there is still great room for improvement, and it is sure to come as our writers advance in breadth of education and especially in Christian culture. Many a error has been helped into popularity by injudicious and unfair methods of opposition.—EDITOR.]

From Arkansas.

The necessity to get on the ground early in our mission efforts is very apparent to one who looks over this field. I count about one score of people of prominence, men and women of influence, and some of them of wealth, who came to Pine Bluff years ago, and finding no church such as they belonged to at the old home, after waiting a year or two went in with other religious people. If we could get these back to day it would double our strength. One, the wife of one of the most prominent merchants in the city, said to me: "It makes me homesick to go around to the Christian Church, but as my children have been led by me elsewhere I don't feel like leaving them now."

It will take years to become self-sustaining and get the church paid for, but we now have a home for such others as may come here to live. A Baptist brother said to me last Sunday: "I don't feel right that I refused to partake of the emblems." I replied: "That is the feeling of a majority of the Baptists in the South, and why they don't rebel like the Baptists do generally in the North and in England I can't see." He said: "I hope our people will cease to contend for close communion."

Once more: Only this week I was invited by the Episcopalian rector here to join him in a funeral service. He had me read the service and make the talk, while he read the hymns and made the prayer. To see a rector in gown and surplice thus affiliating with a Disciple was a new thing under the sun as to my experience or observation. Of course, anything that tends to destroy divisions and bring into closer fellowship all who love our Lord pleases us.

Our prayer-meeting, which will average 15 in number, when the prayer service ends becomes a Bethany Reading Circle, which exercise is often enjoyed by others than our members.

I have recently had a visit from both Bro. Downing and Bro. Ragland, and we talked of former fields in Missouri and of the prospects in the state of Arkansas. We have each seen too much of our cause to doubt our final success, but the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST is right in insisting that we should all be more anxious for our spiritual growth during the Jubilee Year than for a great increase in numbers gained to our plea, or for large amounts raised to spread the gospel. If we grow in grace we shall also grow in knowledge and in liberality. A happy New Year to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, its editors, publishers and readers.

Current Religious Thought

The Church Union for January makes observation on the new charity as follows:

The methods and thoughts of Christian theology have changed no more radically in the last few years than have the methods and thoughts of Christian charity. We believe that the new charity is as manifest and as important a fact as is the new theology. The new theology tries to look at spiritual teaching in a more hopeful way; it seems to us that the new charity tries to face the problems of need in a more hopeful way.

The old charity spent its efforts largely in remedying the evils which social wrongs and injustices wrought; the new charity spends its chief efforts in trying to remedy the social wrongs and injustices which wrought the evils. The new charity finds a case of terrible deprivation; it does not give a blanket and a loaf of bread, and go away self commendatory and satisfied. It tries to go back to the cause of that misery; it runs it back, perhaps, to the effect of low wages, miserably inadequate return for hard labor; it is not satisfied until it uses every influence to see that better wage conditions exist; or it traces that terrible misery back to a saloon; it is not satisfied until it is putting forth every effort to remedy that social curse of a saloon on the corner. Or it may be that the misery is traced back to an unjust and cruel increase in the prices of life's necessities, brought about by some grasping monopoly's hold on the lives of all the people of a state; then the new charity is not satisfied until it is fiercely wrestling with this breeder of misery in the land. Or, most likely of all, it finds that not one of these things, but all of them working together, are working out such injurious results; then, undaunted the new charity speaks out against them all and strives manfully that they may be overthrown. It does not forget the blanket and the loaf of bread, if they are really essential; but it only begins there. This is the work and the glory of the new charity.

Writing on "Christian Literature," the Observer recently gave expession to the following noteworthy facts:

We often wonder why it is that Christian people can be satisfied with the scum, foam and froth of the secular press. The very best dailies are undeniably filled with myriads of things that offend, disgust and soil the soul. Masses of prurient stuff about people whose unsavory lives blight and ruin society monopolize the columns of the secular press. The wrangling of politicians, the loud and vulgar cant of the spurious reformer, the silly gossip of empty-headed leaders of fashion and the disgusting details of police courts engage the skill and the genius of the editors and reporters of the secular press. About the only antidote for all this poisonous and enervating stuff is the religious press of the day. It comes forward with its wholesome, faithful and accurate account of what is worth knowing, but pastors and teachers are too busy to aid in its circulation. The spiritual life of the people is borne down and smothered under mases of corrupt and polluting stuff that goes by the name of journalism. Editors and publishers of pure, strong and thoughtful periodicals get but little sympathy and less help from the men who are fighting the forces of iniquity and corruption. They plead with ministers and private Christians for help, but invariably receive the reply that they are too busy to take the time to solicit subscriptions for newspapers. The men who are set over the churches as undershepherds seem to feel but little concern about the creation of a literature that will save the people from the blight of secularism. The progress of infidel science, the rapid growth of materialism, the domination of secularism in education, the narrow, realistic spirit in society, the alarming increase of marital infidelity, the open and flagrant assaults made upon the home and the church, all call for some agency that will arouse and stir the religious forces of the world. If we are to settle down to this low, vulgar and coarse life, we can contemplate nothing but mental slavery and moral depravity. Let those who care for spiritual things awake to the duty of the hour.

After reading W. T. Stead's interview with the Czar of Russia the New York Observer says:

In his interview the Czar says that as the result of the jealousies and revalries born of the scramble for territory, the armies and navies are more and more absorbing the means which should be used for the welfare and advancement of the people. On the top are a very few rich, at bottom the great masses of the poor, ground down by the increasing taxation for armament, while the best manhood of the nations is so drawn upon by the armies that no mobilization in European countries is possible without dislocating the whole social fabric. The expense of war has become so great that any nation engaging in it must stare bankruptcy in the face, and the modern machinery of war is so destructive that no army can take the field without losing so large a proportion of its officers as to inflict irreparable loss upon the country. This is a sombre picture, but one the reality of which cannot be denied, and presented by the monarch who controls the greatest fighting machine in the world, should give weight to any proposals he may make for averting war. That these proposals, which are that the nations shall bind themselves not to increase existing armaments until further notice, and shall determine in advance what they will do when menaced by war; that is, provide for arbitration, are adequate, we cannot bring ourselves to believe. That they would, however, prevent the multiplication of armaments and give time for sober, second thought, an interval in which to count the cost, and so tend generally toward peace, there is no doubt; and for this reason, if for no other, the project of a conference to discuss them cannot be without value. But there are other reasons—the facts that the nations after sharing in a conference on peace can hardly be so disposed to the jealousies which make for war, and that the sovereign of a nation having the largest army and the greatest opportunities for war, has by calling a conference, shown himself to be a dreamer and a philanthropist, and so indisposed to use his opportunities.

Our Budget.

—There is a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees.

—There are indications of unusual activity throught the camps of Israel.

—Beacon fires are being lighted on the hill-tops, and our religious forces are being mobilized for action.

—The past week of prayer ought to be followed by many conversions in all the churches, and when possible, by special evangelistic services looking to that end.

—Remember, however, that the church should make a distinct advance in Christian zeal and consecration as an essential condition of profitable numerical increase.

—The "grip" is now epidemic in many parts of our country, but an epidemic of good, old-fashioned Christianity will prove more than a match for it. Try spiritual health as an antidote for many bodily ills.

—If any have failed to read the splendid series of articles by Bro. N. J. Aylsworth on "Can I Love My Enemies?" the last of which appeared in the last issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, we urge them to find the back numbers and read the entire serial. We guarantee that any one acting on this suggestion will thank us for making it. We are giving our readers so many good things, however, these days, that it is hardly worth while to specify. The only safe course is to read the entire paper. Then you will miss nothing valuable.

—The introductory article in our historical series, by Prof. Loos, will be found in this number. No one, we trust, who is interested in the earlier history of this movement will fail to read this valuable article even though it is beyond the ordinary length of articles in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We trust the young people in the Societies of Christian Endeavor will become interested in these historical articles and study them.

—If there is any old-time senatorial eloquence left we may expect to hear from it during the discussion of the Treaty of Peace now pending before that august body. The issues at stake are of sufficient importance to call out the best oratorical gifts of senatorial statesmen.

—If we do not reply personally to all the letters of kindly appreciation of the CHRISTIAN-EVENGELIST, many of which are strictly personal, we trust the writers will not feel that we do not highly appreciate them. They help to strengthen and encourage us for the work that still lies before us.

—The important question that presses upon us just now for decision is, what part shall our Christian Endeavor work have in this great Jubilee Year of missions? Are our young people to share in the advance which we are seeking to make, and is the number of endeavor societies to be multiplied and their efficiency increased, so that we may take our rightful place among the other religious forces of the country, or is their work to be allowed to decline in this year of rejoicing and of activity? Read Bro. J. Z. Tyler's letter elsewhere on "A Crisis in Christian Endavor."

—The outlook for 1899 is much improved in many respects over that of former years. The balance of trade is now largely in favor of the United States, railway earnings and securities are greatly improved, bank clearances are larger than ever before known, New York City has become the money center of the world—so says Andrew Carnegie—and industrial conditions are improving. There is also a corresponding stimulus in the religious world. The religious denominations are more friendly than ever before and undertaking larger things along educational and missionary lines than ever before. The Methodists have proposed a fund of twenty million dollars for their use, and other religious bodies are undertaking to raise large sums for their respective interests. And of those in this forward movement we are glad to record the Disciples of Christ. Never in their history have they proposed larger things than for the present year. We should all rejoice in the brighter outlook that has come with the new year, and help to make it one of joy and of prosperity along all good and just lines.

—"The Gospel in Song and Sermon" is being presented now at the Christian Church Wabash, Ind., every night by the pastor, Earle Wilfley, and the evangelistic singer, Prof. J. E. Hawes, who, besides his solos, will have the direction of a large chorus of songs.

—Since reading Harper's Weekly and some deliverances from Dr. Parkhurst and a few New Englanders on "imperialism," we quite agree with the suggestion that President McKinley should visit the Eastern section of the country and explain some things to them which the rest of the country seems to understand. True, the "Journal of Civilization" above referred to is charitable enough to believe that the mass of the American people mean well in favoring the policy of accepting the responsibilities which the providence of war has thrown upon us, and meeting them like brave freemen should, but it thinks they are "deceived" and "deluded" and do not know what they want! Poor old Weekly! It imagines it is heading the procession still, as in the days of its great editor, Geo. Wm. Curtis, and is playing schoolmaster to the country west of the Alleghenies.

—H. W. Everest, whose good face adorns our first page this week, was born at North Hudson, N. Y., May 10, 1831. He attended Geauga Seminary, Western Reserve Eclectic Institute, Hiram, O., Bethany College and Oberlin. He began his teaching, which has been his chief vocation, at the age of sixteen. Since then he has served the following institutions: Eureka College, Kentucky University, Butler University, Garfield University, the Illinois State Normal College at Carbondale, and is now connected with Drake University, Des Moines, Ia. He is, besides being an educator, a preacher of fine ability and an author whose chief work, "The Divine Demonstration," is a text-book in many institutions of learning. His health is not good of late and he is in the South at present seeking physical recuperation. Our readers join us in the sincere wish that he may find it and be spared to us yet many years.

—T. A. Abbott, Cor. Sec. for Missouri state work, we are sorry to learn, has been sick, but our sadness is made gladness in the same letter to learn than he expects to be at work soon again. The state work is greatly in need of funds and no man feels the anxiety of this burden more deeply than Bro. Abbott. See his letter in this paper and then forward an offering for the work in "grand old Missouri."

—A short letter in this paper from Bro. J. L. Darsie, Bethany, W. Va., shows that he is making headway in his work in behalf of Bethany College. Some good brother has given 1,500 acres of land. We rejoice with Bro. Darsie in this success and trust it may be the forerunner of many valuable donations to Bethany College during the year 1899.

—The following letter carries its own sorrowful message:

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—Our dear daughter Margaret passed away in Denver, Col., Saturday morning, Jan. 7th. Mrs. Craig has been with her in Denver the past two months. I am on my way to Denver with my daughter May. The funeral will be held in Denver Monday. The family lot is there. Margaret had just passed her twenty-first birthday.

WM. BAYARD CRAIG.

We need not assure Bro. C. of our deep sympathy with him and his wife and his surviving daughter in this great sorrow. God's grace alone can comfort the heart in such a trial, and to the "throne of grace" they are accustomed to go.

—Rev. Mr. Luddington, pastor of the Shelton Baptist Church of Derby, Conn., recently made a very bitter attack on Roman Catholicism, and handed in his resignation as a result, the next Sunday. Every Protestant regards his attack as unjust. Any extravagant charge against Romanism creates sympathy for it and defeats the very end sought to be gained. Bitter denunciation does no good, but harm. The way to oppose Roman Catholicism is to throw light upon its teaching and practice, as approved by its representative men. Bring in the light, and the darkness will disappear without the use of a bludgeon. Every zealous Protestant who makes a statement concerning the Roman Catholic Church which he cannot prove, or which is not true, becomes, unwittingly, an abettor and helper of that cause. No doubt that church represents a very corrupt form of Christianity, and it must be opposed, but those who oppose it must be sure of their ground, and do it in the spirit and temper of Christ.

—Missouri Christians are sending out a call for college endowment. Eureka appeals to her Illinois constituency for ampler endowment. Hiram is asking for a popular subscription to her endowment fund. Bethany College and Butler Bible College are soliciting the endowment necessary to aid them in doing their work. Shall these appeals go unheeded? This should be a great year for college endowment. Choose ye, this year, what institution you will aid, and aid it.

—The Christian Guide now bears a number of new names on its editorial staff. Jno. T. Brown's name as editor in chief is now followed by that of A. R. Moore, associate editor and J. L. Parsons contributing editor. The Indiana column under the management of B. L. Allen has been enlarged to a page department.

—And now, Mr. Editor, if I could write as good a poem as "Christmas Chimes" I wouldn't hide my identity in a jugglery of letters. Come out in the open, sir, and let us see you.—Alfred Brunk.

It doesn't seem that the editor succeeded in "hiding his identity" to any great extent. Besides, if it had not been for the "jugglery of letters" the poem might have missed the handsome compliment given it above. There's method in our modesty!

—Lord Kitchener called on the English people a few days ago for a half million dollars to found a college at Khartoum in the distant Soudan, in memory of General Gordon, and behold the entire amount has already been raised. Thus does old England's school-teachers follow up her soldiers, and her civilization tread on the heels of her conquests. This fact reminds the Advance of Kipling's stanza on the English—"the maddest of all mankind:"

"They do not consider the meaning of things;
They consult not creed nor clan.
Behold they clap the slave on the back,
And behold he becometh a man!
They terribly carpet the earth with dead,
And before their cannon cool,
They walk unarmed by twos and threes,
To call the living to school."

—This year is not only the Jubilee Year of our American Christian Missionary Society, but also the silver anniversary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the January number of the Missionary Tidings does honor to the occasion by appearing in a beautiful cover appropriately designed. The first page gives pictures of the first officers of this national missionary organization and these are followed by many excellent tributes to this National Board for its splendid record. We congratulate the C. W. B. M. on the pleasure of celebrating her silver anniversary under so auspicious surroundings and her splendid prospects for another quarter of a century of usefulness in the Master's kingdom.

—N. Montgomery, Simonton, Tex., strongly approves the idea of the Christian Portait Gallery and says: "By all means give a special number to the poineer women who have done so much for the cause and the principles for which we stand." This is our desire and purpose so far as we can obtain the pictures of such women. We should be glad to have any of our friends, who can furnish a good picture of any of our foremothers to do so, and we will be glad to give them a place in the CHRISTAN-EVANGELIST and also in the Gallery.

—F. M. Green calls attention to an error in his article in the Christian Quarterly on "Alexander Campbell and Religious Controversy." In that article he is made to say that at the time of his debate with Mr. Owen in 1829, Mr. Campbell was president of Bethany College. As Bethany College was not founded until 1841, of course this is a mistake. He had in mind the debate with Rice which occurred in 1843.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of the 5th inst. comes with the flush of youth upon its cheek, and the strength of full manhood in its arm. I have no suggestion, but simply press forward. More than one-third of a century I have read it, even researching back into the Old Pioneer and Echo. Will hardly scan its pages so many years in the future. S.

—The Congregationalist, Dec. 29, 1898, in an article on, "The Religious World—1898" contains the following:

The denomination calling itself Disciples of Christ has grown rapidly in numbers and seems to have broadened its aims, while the sect most like the Disciples, calling itself Christian, seems to have grown narrower, making its stand on insistence that it will recognize no other name for the followers of Christ."

The Congregationalist is partly in error. The aim of the Disciples of Christ is now what it was in the beginning of their history. They labor now as their fathers did, for the union of believers by a return to the Christianity of the Christ as he gave it to the world—its creed, its ordinances, its life—and this that men may be led by faith in Jesus the Son of God. It is to be hoped, however, that they have "broadened" in their appreciation of this aim, and in their whole religious life and horizon, for such broadening is inseparable from growth.

—The Bethany C. E. Bulletin for January may be had by addressing a card to Dr. J. Z. Tyler, Cleveland, Ohio. We do not know how extensively these bulletins are used, but from an examination of their contents we do not see how a member of the Bethany Reading Courses can afford to be without a copy for each month. Neither do we know how Endeavorers can better inform themselves as to the nature and value of these Reading Courses than by reading these bulletins.

—The Church of Christ at Carrollton, which recently celebrated its 53rd anniversary with appropriate and impressive services, was organized by T. M. Gaines of sacred memory, Dec. 21st 1845. Since that time, twenty different ministers, including Bro. Gaines, have served that church as ministers of the Word. The present pastor is J. T. Ogle, now in his fourth year in that relation. From the beginning of 1866 until the present, the church has had a steady and uninterrupted growth, the bulk of the membership of which it is at present composed, having entered during these thirty-two years. Of all the names enrolled during the first twenty-one of the existence of the church, there is found to-day but twenty-two upon the present roll. This emphasizes the fact that a church must either grow or die and cease to exist.

—H. M. Brooks, of Paris, Ill., is proposing the organization of a new temperance society on the old basis of the pledge and moral suasion. He does not think legal prohibition just the right thing, and has no faith in the temperance promises of political parties. His object, he says, is to take the question entirely out of politics and place it upon moral grounds. He wants 10,000 temperance societies organized on this basis in the next two years, and 20,000 young men on the platform pleading for the salvation of the drunkard. That there is boundless room for the work proposed by Bro Brooks is not questionable, but we fail to see the harm of legal prohibition if it can be had. It would shut off the drunkard's supply and give us a chance to save the drunkard and our children. We think that the victory over the drink traffic can be secured and maintained only by the strongest use of both moral and legal suasion. There is no danger of the world going too dry on this subject.

—We call very special attention to a letter to be found elsewhere in this issue from J. Z. Tyler, under the title of "A Crisis in Christian Endeavor." The letter is written in response to a note from the editor of this paper. This correspondence will bring before the brotherhood a matter of the very first importance. We have no enterprise on hand to-day that excels in its importance the religious training and development of our young people. Christian Endeavor has been widely accepted among us and enthusiastically endorsed as offering a splendid opportunity for the religious training and character of the young. Under the supervision of Bro. J. Z. Tyler the work has grown encouragingly, even though he could give it but a fragment of his time in connection with his pastorate. We are indebted to him for the Bethany Reading Courses, which is acknowledged by leading Endeavorers of other religious bodies to be the best plan yet hit upon to promote the real interests of Christian Endeavor.

At the Chattanooga Convention, when Bro. Tyler reported that he would be unable to do the work demanded by Christian Endeavor and carry on his work as pastor, the convention recommended that his whole time be employed for Christian Endeavor, by the acting board, provided it could see its way open to provide for his remuneration. We regret that the board does not see its way clear to provide for Bro. Tyler's salary. We have no censure to offer to the managing board, but we do know that it would be a calamity to the cause of Christian Endeavor among us if Bro. Tyler be compelled to abandon this work which he has so well in hand, and we are greatly mistaken if the friends of Christian Endeavor among us are willing to permit any such thing. We believe that those among us who realize the possibilities of this work and the value of Bro. Tyler's superintendence will gladly contribute the funds necessary to sustain him in the work. We should be glad to hear from a number of brethren who have this matter at heart, in very brief letters, giving their judgment as to the importance of securing Bro. Tyler for his whole time, and the feasibility of the plan suggested by him or of any other plan for raising the necessary funds for pushing forward this work. The importance of the matter demands prompt action. It would be an unspeakable calamity should our hopes concerning the future of Christian Endeavor among us be disappointed because we have failed to realize the opportunity and to improve it.

—A number of congregations have sent us annual reports, covering their work during the past year somewhat in detail. We would be glad if our space permitted us to publish these, but it will be readily seen that if a paper which circulates all over the United States should undertake to publish annual reports of individual churches it would soon be swamped. We would be glad, however, to publish the names of those churches whose missionary, educational and benevolent contributions amount to as much as their current expenses. We feel safe, as regards space, in offering to publish a list of such churches. Among the congregations sending the annual reports are the churches at Jacksonville, Ill., Warrensburg, Mo., and others, all of which make an admirable showing.

—Ex-President Cleveland, we regret to see, has recently uttered a sort of sneer against the preachers because, as a rule, they are expansionists. He says this policy may involve the killing of a few hundred people who are not prepared to die, but he presumes the clergymen who favor expansion can look after them! But suppose it ends war saves the lives of thousands, gives liberty and the light of the gospel to millions of human beings as precious in God's sight as Mr. Cleveland—will he give any credit to the clergymen? We have yet to learn of a man who regards the whole world as God's country and the people of all nations as his children and who believes in the advancement of the kingdom of God over all the earth, who is opposed to this nation meeting the responsibilities which recent events have laid upon it.

—See the comparative statement from the Home Secretaries elsewhere, comparing receipts for the first quarter of the last missionary year, and the first quarter of the current missionary year. Gain in every column and tremendous gain in the column of individual contributions—over $10,000! This begins to look like a Jubilee Year that jubilates! Keep the ball rolling now that it is going, and it will acquire such a momentum by next October as to knock down the walls which have hindered and hampered our missionary giving in the past.

—Through the Christian courtesy of Geo. T. Coxhead, general secretary of the St. Louis Y. M. C. A., we have the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of a "Clergyman's Ticket" entitling us to all of the privileges of the Association for the present year. We certainly wish for this Association a year of rich spiritual blessing in all its departments of work in behalf of young men.

—Our missionaries in Constantinople have requested their letters and papers to be sent hereafter to "the British P. O., Constantinople," instead of "the German Imperial P. O." Is this further proof of "an Anglo-American Alliance?" It would at least indicate an "entente cordiale" between Great Britain and the United States. By the way, have you not noticed how enthusiastic our foreign missionaries are about British rule and the Union Jack?

—The Texas Letter this week makes mention of two important matters in its opening and closing paragraphs. The first emphasizes the spiritual side of baptism, and the second refers to an important decision of the courts, defining who is factional in the church.

—After stating some cogent reasons why Brigham H. Roberts, Congressman elect from Utah, should not be permitted to take his seat in the next Congress, Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., says:

The permanent settlement of this case requires two constitutional amendments: one, now lying dormant, to forbid states to maintain an establishment of religion (which is now forbidden to the nation); another, to be presently reintroduced by Senator Kyle to give Congress the full control of marriage and divorce. It is the fashion to say that it is idle to hope for amendments to the Constitution, but since it is now imperative in the words of Congressman Hepburn's amendmendment, to require a three-fourths vote for admission of Alaska and our new islands as states, let the people demand a new constitutional convention to prepare such other amendments as will adapt our constitution to the new century. The situation also calls the churches to reinforce all the civilizing forces of education and religion that are at work upon our "Turkey in America." But first of all let the plebiscite of the mail box demand that Roberts be rejected and Utah's rebellion rebuked.

—I have been reading the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST this evening and as this is a time for memory I want to thank you and assure you that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been a great blessing to me. I have been a constant reader of its pages for about sixteen years and it seems to me it has grown better all the time. J. M. VAWTER.

Liberty, Mo., Dec. 30, 1898.

—In a letter from a brother, widely known throughout the brotherhood, but now disabled for active service, he speaks with a great deal of feeling, which is amply justified by the circumstances, concerning the neglect of our colleges by the brotherhood. He says:

A distribution of the burden borne by a very few would not have been felt by the many. But rather than that teachers have been permitted to spend the prime and vigor of life in labors and sacrifices that no other class of professional men on earth are willing or expected to endure; and when the crisis comes, as come it must, and they turn away in despair from the hope that had lured them on and begin to reckon with life and estimate the fragments that remain, they find themselves out of employment, broken in health and fortune, to die under the shadow of disappointment and the regrets of failure and their memory left to rot with their bones.

Referring to the effort now made in Illinois to endow Eureka College, although not a citizen of that state, he says:

I can see clearly enough that unless the brethren in Illinois are aroused from their apathy, they will certainly lose the only opportunity now left them of having a share in preparing the intellectual and spiritual forces that the Church of Christ must have to carry forward and sustain its work and life in the new and untried conflict that is coming.

We trust these words, coming from one who has given his life to the cause of Christian education, will have the effect of awakening serious reflection on the part of many concerning the undischarged obligation to our institutions of learning.

—The first biennial report of the Missouri State Board of Charities and Correctians has just been published and on reading it our first impression was that a copy of this report ought to be placed in the hand of every citizen of the state. While many of the institutions of the state for the unfortunate and for criminals are reported to be in good condition and well managed there are nevertheless some startling revelations in the report. For instance the Board expresses the opinion that "our jails, as at present managed, are schools of crime conducted at public expense." Again it appears from this report that feeble-minded women in the county poorhouses are not protected from becoming mothers of illegitimate children. It is stated that in one county poorhouse in Missouri, seven illegitimate children were born in one year from idiotic women. This is certainly inexpressible depravity. The report also states that in Indiana fifty-seven feeble-minded women in thirty-nine of its county poorhouses became the mothers of ninety-five illegitimate children. Again, the report says that there are in our poorhouses in Missouri one hundred and forty-two children under the age of fifteen years for whom homes have not yet been provided. Just think of rearing children under such surroundings in this so-called Christian nation. In the St. Louis poorhouse there are 1,525 inmates, 815 of whom are reported insane. But we cannot mention other items just now. This board of six members visited all of the institutions of the state at a total cost to Dec. 1st, 1898, of $892.91. The entire sum of money spent by the State of Missouri on its charities and corrections including that paid by each county is given at $1,368,682.65. For this excellent report and the service this Board has so generously rendered in behalf of the unfortunate the citizens of Missouri are certainly under many obligations.

We recommend the enactment of the following laws:

1. That a colony for the feeble-minded be established.
2. A law prohibiting county courts from sending the insane to poorhouses.
3. A new building for female convicts in state prison.
4. A hospital and criminal insane building in state prison.
5. We recommend a parole law to be extended to prisoners in state prison.
6. A law conferring upon superintendents of asylums the power of nominating all subordinate officers.
7. That accommodations be provided for a large increase in the number of insane.
8. A law compelling state institutions to purchase supplies, as far as possible, from each other.

—J. Fred Jones, of Illinois, in speaking in the Christian Oracle of a certain preacher in that state said, "Bro. —— keeps a range-finder on his pulpit." This phrase, borrowed from the navy, very aptly expresses an essential element of a successful preacher. Many able preachers do not get the range of their congregations. They preach excellent sermons, viewed from a literary or theological point of view, but they hit nothing. Look out, preacher, for your "range-finder," and keep that in order. We thank Bro. Jones for this application of the phrase.

PERSONAL MENTION.

A. M. Growden, formerly of Clarksville, Tenn., has accepted a call to preach for the church at Findlay, Ohio, this year.

T. W. Grafton is engaged in a series of evangelistic services with his congregation at Rock Island, Ill., with good prospects.

J. T. McGarvey, son of J. W. McGarvey, has been again called by the church at La Belle, Mo., for another year's work.

A. L. McQuary has accepted the work of the ministry for the church at Lebanon, Mo., for 1899. He was formerly at Neosho.

Flourney Payne, formerly of Tallapoosa, Ga., has succeeded L. G. Thompson as minister of the East Side Christian Church, Denver, Col.

Wm. C. Thompson, of Plattsburg, Mo., will preach for the following churches during 1899: New Market, Mo., one-fourth time, Grayson, Mo., one-half time, and Log Church (near Plattsburg), one-fourth time.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Sellers, of Franklin, Ind., recently celebrated their golden wedding surrounded by their children, children's children and their friends. They were married Dec. 28th, 1848.

Through Sister Hugley we learn that her husband, Bro. Jacob Hugley, of Paris, Mo., has been very sick with pneumonia and heart trouble. At her writing, however, he was improving and we trust that this improvement has since continued. Bro. and Sister Hugley are among God's most faithful children.

W. V. Boltz, of The Dalles, Ore., who contemplates spending the present year in evangelistic work, announces his first meeting at Centralia, Wash., now in progress. This is also his present address.

H. H. Gilliam, of Hamilton, Mo., writes that the Church of Christ, Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational Churches all joined together in observing the week of prayer.

The pastoral letter issued by William D. Rice, pastor of the Linden St. Christian Church, Memphis, Tenn., is in good spirit, full of healthful admonitions and ought to do much good.

R. B. Preston, who has been preaching for the Central Christian Church, Pueblo, Col., has begun what is to be know as the South Side Christian Church in the same city. The church meets in the Masonic Temple for the present and the work, we learn, is to be under the Colorado State Missionary Society.

C. E. Wells, of Mt. Ayr, Iowa, was the victim recently of a surprise party by the young people of his congregation, who came with a liberal supply of those things which preachers and their wives in common with other people enjoy so much. The church has called Bro. Wells for the second year. The week of prayer is to be followed by a meeting conducted by Edgar Price, of Shenandoah.

January 4th 1899 was a grand day with the church at Canton, Ill. Among the interesting things of the occasion was the burning of mortgages. Among the prominent preachers participating were Judge Chas. J. Scofield, of Carthage; Marion Stevenson, Decatur; N. S. Haynes, Eureka; and the Canton pastors. The pastor of the Church of Christ at Canton, as you all know, is J. P. Lichtenberger.

The teachers of the Bible school of the First Christian Church, Sedalia, Mo., has by suitable resolutions expressed their deep sorrow in the death of Mrs. S. Warren, one of their most zealous and faithful workers, and have borne splendid tribute to her beautiful Christian life.

According to reports in a paper from Los Angeles, Cal., recently received at this office, A. C. Smither and David Walk have been creating no small degree of excitement by preaching the doctrine of the eternal punishment of the wicked from their pulpits in that city. It is about time for another periodical wave of this kind of preaching to sweep over the land and we shall not be surprised to hear much of it during the year. There are other cities that need to smell of fire and brimstone to remind them of their dangers than Los Angeles.

Health, Voice, Appetite and Strength Failed—Completely Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Last year my health failed entirely. My limbs were so weak that I could scarcely walk. I had no appetite and suffered with constipation. My voice failed me in the pulpit. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and very soon I saw a great improvement. In the winter I was attacked with the grip which left me weak and prostrated. I went back to my old friend, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which seems to be the thing for me." REV. C. S. BEAULIEU, pastor Christian church, Lowellville, Ohio. Remember.

G. W. Kitchen, of Canton, Mo., commends to the brotherhood L. Harbord, who was recently ordained to the ministry of the Word by the church at Bevier, Mo. He says that Bro. Harbord is a young man but has been preaching about one year.

J. Fraise Richard, of Washington, D. C., published an interview which he had with the ex-Confederate General Longstreet, Nov. 29, 1898, in the American Tribune, of Indianapolis, Ind., under date of Dec. 29, 1898. The interview was held just 35 years after the attack on Ft. Sanders, at Knoxville, Tenn., by Gen. Longstreet. The interview is interesting, giving as it does some conditions of things in prominent battles of the Civil War that were known only to commanders of the Confederate army. Gen. Longstreet says that Gen. McClelland lost the grandest opportunity of the war to achieve military renown at Sharpsburg, and that Gen. Mead lost almost a similar opportunity at Gettysburg. Gen. Longstreet in the interview pays high tribute to Gen. Grant's greatness as a man as well as a military genius, and the spirit of the interview clearly shows that Gen. Longstreet is a man of no mean proportions of character. Only a great man can talk with such sincere simplicity.

Leonard G. Thompson was formally set apart, by prayer and the laying on of hands, to the work of the ministry, in the Central Christian Church, Denver, Tuesday evening, Dec. 27th, 1898. B. O. Aylesworth, pastor of the church, presided, B. B. Tyler preached the sermon and delivered the charge to the candidate, S. B. Moore, of South Broadway congregation, read appropriate selections of Scripture and offered prayer. M. L. Streator, for a number of years evangelist in Colorado, examined the candidate. The prayer of ordination was offered by Grant K. Lewis, of the Highland Church, in Denver. Bro. Thompson has been preaching for a number of years, but on account of the precarious condition of his health, and a lack of favorable conditions he had not been formally set apart to this work. He will begin, early in the new year, to serve the State Mission Board, of Colorado, as evangelist. He is now in excellent health. Those who know him best are confident that a better selection for this important position could not have been made. He is more familiar with the field, probably, than any other man in the state. He is thoroughly alive to the importance of the work. His heart is in it. For a year Bro. Thompson has successfully served the East Denver Church. After close of the service Tuesday evening he baptized two persons who had confessed the Christ.

Texas Letter.

The following is the closing paragraph of a lecture at the recent Texas Lectureship on the subject, "How to Preach Baptism," and it is given this wider circulation because it touches a phase of the question which needs emphasis:

One final word: Give more attention to the spiritual side of the question. We are familiar with the shell; how about the kernel? We are acquainted with the house; do we know its inmates? We know the form of baptism; do we know its spirit? Some treat it as if it were only a "form." Has it not a deep spiritual meaning? and has not the time come when we are ready for a great book bringing out this meaning? We have studied with much pleasure and profit the spiritual side of other ceremonials and symbols of the Bible; why not this? We know something of the rich spiritual wealth of the Atonement in the Old Testament, and of the Supper in the New; has this ordinance no such wealth? But for their spiritual significance the bread and wine, so dear to every devout heart, would long since have lost their hold on us. But even now, after two thousand years, on every Sunday morning, as they direct our grateful souls to the awful tragedy of the cross, and show us the broken body and spilt blood of the Savior, they bring to us a lesson without which life would be poor indeed. Has Baptism no such lessons? I believe it has; and I believe, as we learn them better, this old subject will put on new and beautiful garments, and like its companion ordinance, the Supper, it will largely cease to be a source of strife and become one of spiritual strength and joy."

The First Church of Ft. Worth has at last decided to use an organ in its work and worship. Some of the best members until now have not seen their way to do this, and others who have long wanted the instrument have been patient and kind, and the result is that concessions made by both sides have yielded the rich, sweet fruit of unity, and God must be pleased. Bro. McPherson, the pastor, seems to be doing a great work there.

Marfa has dedicated a handsome new church, the beloved pastor, J. T. McKissick, preaching the dedicatory sermon. The work there is prosperous and harmonious, and the outlook was never so good as now.

Corsicana has called P. J. Dickerson, of Alena, Ill. Perhaps there is not a more promising field in the state than this, and it is to be hoped that Bro. Dickerson may do a great work there.

G. A. Faris succeeds S. K. Hallam as pastor at McKinney. McKinney has a fine congregation, and the best house I ever saw for the money invested; and now that she exchanges one good man for another, we will expect to see continued prosperity in her borders.

The famous "McGregor Church Case" has been decided. The case involved the right to the church property in McGregor. The congregation divided, and what is known in Texas as the Firm Foundation faction, so called because of their church paper, "The Firm Foundation," retained control of the property. The case was first tried before Judge Surratt of the District Court of McLennon County, and the decision was that the Firm Foundationists had departed from the faith of the church, and therefore had forfeited all rights to the property in controversy; and that the "Progressives," that section of the church which believes in cooperative missionary work, Endeavor Societies, instrumental music, etc., held to the original doctrines of the church, and were therefore entitled to the property. An appeal was taken to the Court of Civil Appeals, and on Dec. 21, 1898, it sustained the decision of the lower court. This is a matter of great importance. It settles the question that when any part of the church, however strong the majority, makes anything other than faith in Christ and obedience to him a test of fellowship, they have departed from the faith of our people, and have no property rights in the congregation they seek to rupture and destroy. W. K. Homan, editor of the Courier, fought the case, without fee, from first to finish, and his skillful legal hand is clearly visible in the progress of the case through both courts. In this Southland where religious factions seem more numerous than any other place under the sun, this decision is a God-send, and the brethren should see that the unselfish and invaluable service of Bro. Homan is properly rewarded. The case will be published in book form and will make a valuable contribution to our literature.

The Nebraska State Teachers' Association has just closed a four days' program. These are annual gatherings and never fail to bring together several hundred of the world's best educators—public school-teachers. The sessions are cut up into sections that pay attention to every line of school work from "Necessary Expenses of Country Schools" to "High School Laboratory Work in Botany and Zoology," with "What Can the Library do for Woman's Clubs?" "Scientific Temperance," "Practical Geography," "The True Measure of a Teacher" and "Punishments and Rewards for Children," etc., etc., sandwiched along the way.

Two features were make especially prominent: first, a desire to weed out evil tendencies, and second, a recognition of the need of extra work and care on the part of the teacher for the pupils that have troubles with certain branches; and surely, this humanitarian spirit for the oppressed and weaker ones in the school-room is just as noble and heroic as on the field of Santiago, for Cuban woes.

The evening sessions were held at the Oliver Theatre and the pedagogues were pleased and profited by concerts and lectures. One of the lectures was given by Emil G. Hirsch, Jewish Rabbi of Chicago, on "The Teacher and the Patriot," in which, in our judgment, he said some good things for which he should be comforted; aleo some evil things for which he ought to be tormented.

Among the good things he emphasized the need of a less noisy and more constant patriotism. A patriotism, not of Fourth-of-July noise or Presidential-campaign-party-exaltation and opposite-party denunciation, but a brand of patriotism that loves our institutions and endeavors to maintain them by a careful study of the demands, and conscientious discharge of the rights and privileges of citizenship, especially in state and national affairs, since these are the source of causes that produce national conditions.

One of the bad things: "Morals cannot be taught by text-books." If this is true, what must we do to be saved? for I understand the Bible to be pre-eminently a text-book of morals which the Great Teacher has given for our moral and spiritual education in the class-room of earth.

When the bell of destiny summons to the hereafter, God grant there be none of us to answer "not prepared."

Tuesday, January 3rd, '99, at high noon, the Nebraska Legislature will convene in regular biennial session. Aside from drawing salary and appropriating moneys with which to oil the machinery of state for the coming two years, a U. S. Senator must be elected to succeed the Hon. W. V. Allen. Several candidates are in sight already, and among the good and sufficient qualifications for the position we note that one is "an old soldier," another has a large "barrel" which was used for party interests in the late campaign, a third has the proper geographical location, while the fourth is more or less a poor man and "needs the salary," by all of which it becomes the plainer to the clear-eyed that private interests rather than public good is the motive that impels some of the statesmen in these closing days of the 19th century. Alas, alas! is this to be the legacy our boasted civilization is to bequeath to the coming century?

"Expansion"—"Destiny"—"Imperialism." These are great words just now, and I for one am in for expansion in Home Missions. Instead of a hundred thousand we ought to raise half a million. One cent per member each week will more than do this; it is enough to warm the coldest heart and thrill the slowest pulse to contemplate what mighty results could be accomplished with half a million dollars at our command. Let us stand aside for a moment and watch the funeral procession of '99 approach: 4,000 an hour—100,000 every rotation of the earth—35,000,000 before January 1, 1900. On, still on, rolls the tide of death. Really, brethren, we ought to pour a million dollars into the treasury of missions. Let us pray for a spirit of benevolence that will enable us to extend the kingdom of "The Prince of Peace" to every land and clime. Let us work out a destiny that will realize mightiest possibilities for truth. Let us advance an Imperialism that will bring all nations and peoples under the scepter of the Eternal, Immortal, Invisible God, and the Only and Blessed Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords.

Church Debts

Very likely the Dorcas Society, The King's Daughters, or the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, want funds to carry on their work this winter. Perhaps you have in contemplation a new organ or carpet for the Sunday-school, or possibly the question of paying off the church debt is troubling you. We have a plan for making more people read The Ladies' Home Journal, and at the same time providing money for any of these objects. Write to us and we will tell you how to do it.

The Form Without the Power.

The Apostle Paul in his Second Epistle to Timothy writing of perilous times in the last days, enumerates a dark catalogue of sin, characterizing those who indulge in them as "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." In all civilized countries religion is looked upon as quite a decent and correct institution. It is largely in its public observances patronized by the wise and the great, and its sanction is sought after in almost every grade of respectable society. It is esteemed a mark of good breeding and an evidence of correct manners to be in some way connected with some body of religious people. The usages, customs and accepted religious belief of ancestors are very much respected, and this complaisance to accustomed forms and habits is looked upon as the easiest way of meeting the demands of religious faith and practice. The form of godliness may not be wanting here, but we must believe that such a form is only an evidence of what may be esteemed as good manners and may be no evidence whatever of devotion to God. Those who are only outwardly religious are certainly strangers to their own hearts and have very misleading and improper ideas of their relationship to God, their duties to him and to their fellowmen. One great reason why the active duties of religion frequently become so hard and irksome, so wearying and burdensome, is because the heart does not prompt to action. Labors of love are always pleasant and the yoke is easy and the burden is light when the throbbing, palpitating heart of devotion is the impelling power. Our affections, our passions, are our mainsprings of action, and when these affections and passions have been touched by the finger of the love of God, they will put in consecrated motion the whole machinery of our being. A few mornings ago I overheard a lady remark to a friend, and the remark was accompanied by a sigh, "I suppose I ought to go to church to-day, but I do so dread the long sermons and long prayers; why, do you believe they sometimes take up a whole hour before one can leave!" She went, I believe, and probably did penance, poor soul. This lady is only a type of a large class who are professors of religion, but who look upon its duties and services as heavy burdens only to be borne from necessity and who consider the round of their religious observances as so many hard and cumbersome tasks. It is a fearfully mistaken idea for any one to consider a Christian in the light of a slave who performs his duty only under the lash of a terrible oppressor, or to look upon him as a servant serving for hire. He is a child of God, an heir and a joint-heir with Christ. He lives and loves and labors, constrained by the love God his Father and Christ the Redeemer. In his devotion to God he is inspired by the greatest, grandest and noblest purposes. His Christian duties are not mere forms, but labors of love. As he grows in grace heaven is let down into his soul and his whole life is permeated by the powerful principle of an advancing holiness. T. H. BLENUS.

A Letter from Bro. B. H. Smith.

[The following letter was written to the church at Carrollton, Mo., on the occasion of its 53rd anniversary and has been forwarded to us by the pastor, J. T. Ogle. It will no doubt interest a large number of our readers.—EDITOR.]

CANTON, MO., DEC. 15, 1898.

To the Christian Church, Carrollton, Mo.:

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS—Bro. Ogle informs me that you propose to celebrate the 53rd anniversary of the organization of the Christian Church in Carrollton, on the 21st inst. Knowing my inability to attend, he asks me to send a "word of cheer." I rejoice to know that I am held in kind remembrance by you. This invitation recalls to my mind the struggles of the faithful band of Disciples in Carrollton with whom and for whom I labored in the years of '60 and '61. Of all the associations and labors of my ministry there is no congregation of more tender remembrances or more fruitful in labor than that of the Carrollton congregation. This anniversary brings to my mind the persons and families of brethren Martin, Tull, Dare, Roy, Smith, Pritchard and others, whose kind words encouraged me in my work. Many of these have crossed over to the other shore to join the great congregation above.

I have watched your growth as a congregation since I left you and exclaim, "Behold what God hath wrought!" My prayer is that you may realize still greater conquests; that God will give to your present pastor and to those who may succeed him grace and wisdom, and that you individually may "grow in grace and in the knowlege of our Lord Jesus Christ."

I realize that my work on earth is done, in so far as my personal ministration is concerned. I hope, however, to be of those of whom it is said, "Their works do follow them." A few months ago I reached the limit—threescore years and ten. These many years with my presedt affliction admonish me that my days on earth are few. Have been confined to my bed and room for nearly four years, unable to walk or stand. But I pray God that as my physical strength gets weaker and weaker, my spiritual strength may grow stronger and stronger. With my faithful wife, son, dear brethreu and sisters and kind friends to minister unto me, I am calmly, patiently and resignedly awaiting the call of the Master.

God bless you all, and may we meet in the great congregation.

Yours in Christian hope and love,

B. H. SMITH.

New York Letter.

The greatest dailies of New York printed a "special" from Lexington, Ky., this morning which is of interest more or less to all Disciples of Christ. The telegram is as follows:

One of the most notable celebrations in the history of American colleges was in commemoration of the one-hundredth anniversary of Transylvania University last night. The University has had many famous alumni, including Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederate States, and Justice Harlan, of the Supreme Court of the United States, many congressmen and men prominent in public life.

Gov. Bradley and twelve members of his staff were present, and presidents of all Kentucky colleges took part in the programme. Ethelbert D. Warfield, president of Lafayette College, Pennsylvania, and the Rev. Dr. John W. McGarvey, of Kentucky University, were the speakers of the evening. The address of the former was on "Christian Education," while the latter spoke historically of old Transylvania. Gov. Bradley also spoke. Notes regretting their inability to be present were received from all the members of the Cabinet. Governors of many states and presidents of colleges.

I have just read the history of old Transylvania University written by the late Dr. Robert Peter and published by the Filson Club, Louisville, and also a special article by Frank G. Allen, in the Courier-Journal of Dec 25th, which contains some of the most interesting facts in the annals of American education. Kentucky University, the pride of Kentucky Disciples, is the honored successor of old Transylvania and should be generously supported so that she may carry out her plans for enlarged usefulness.

The Russian Bishop of America whose bishopric includes the United States and Canada, was tendered a farewell reception at the Syrian-Arabic Chapel of the Orthodox Greek Church on Washington Street, New York, yesterday. He is late bishop of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, and before leaving America he addressed a letter to Pres. McKinley, concerning conditions in Alaska in which among other things he says:

Alaska stands in need of radical reform in all directions. This I wrote to you in a former memorial; this I repeat to you now. A limit must be set to the abuses of the various companies which for over thirty years have had the uncontrolled managment of affairs and have reduced the country's hunting and fishing resources to absolute exhaustion, and the population to beggary and semi-starvation. A limit must be set to the abuses by officials, who, as shown by the experience of many years, are sent there without any discrimination and exclusively on the recommendation of Alaska's irremovable guardian, Sheldon Jackson. And lastly, Alaska must be delivered from that man.

The Rev. Dr. H. A. Johnson, of Chicago, has accepted a call to the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church to succeed the Rev. Dr. C. L. Thompson who a few months ago resigned to become secretary of the Presbyterian Home Mission Board. Now it seems quite likely that Dr. Alexander McConnell, of London, England, will be called to succeed the late Dr. John Hall in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. But he will not likely come until in April as he is now on a special mission to China on behalf of the London Missionary Society and will not return until then. Prominent ministers have been secured to supply the pulpit for two months to come. Walter

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Cures Coughs

"My wife was suffering from a dreadful cough. We did not expect that she would long survive, but Mr. R. V. Royal, deputy surveyor, happened to be stopping with us over night, and having a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with him, induced my wife to try this remedy. The result was so beneficial that she kept on taking it till she was cured."

"My little daughter was taken with a distressing cough, which for three years defied all the remedies I tried. At length, on the urgent recommendation of a friend, I began to give her Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After using one bottle I found to my great surprise that she was improving. Three bottles completely cured her."

Russell Johnston, the celebrated organist and musical composer has just completed his fortieth year's service as organist of the St. Paul's M. E. Church this city. His professional career is a remarkable one; from eight to eleven years of age he was organist of the Bedford Street Baptist Church, Brooklyn; afterwards he played in an Episcopal Church one year, and then, at the age of twelve, he became organist in St. Paul's in a public competition in which twenty-one candidates contested for the position. He has given more than two thousand public recitals in different parts of the country, and is very popular as a church musician.

At a recent meeting of the Schoolmasters' Association of New York, Pres. J. M. Taylor, LL. D., of Vassar College delivered a stirring address on the question, "Should the State Teach Morals in the Public Schools?" In the course of his address he said the complete separation of state and church was one of the fundamental principles of American institutions, and he believed that the history of other countries afford full justification of that principle. He also stated that whenever any church got hold of any government it always made an effort to regulate the opinions of the people by compulsion and liberty thereby is always immediately endangered. Dr. Taylor further said business is one thing and the state is another, and religion is distinct from both. He added:

I think that we ought to be able to get enough warnings from history to prevent us from coqueting with this effort in some way to bring church and state together. Now, I am not going to say that the Bible should not be read in public schools, nor that such schools should not be opened with prayer. I certainly would have no objection to such exercises. But the state has no right to enforce such regulations among people who do not wish to have their children attend religious exercises in the public schools. Public schools are founded to teach good citizenship. So far as ethical teaching may involve the teaching of religion, the state has no right to insist on it.

Mrs. Ballington Booth who has done so much to help ex-convicts back to self-respect and self support through the establishment of "Hope Halls" at New York and San Francisco has just opened Hope Hall number three at Chicago, or more strictly speaking, on a farm seven miles from that city. This one is for the especial benefit of "her boys" as they are realeased from Joliet penitentiary. In a recent address in New York in which she outlined this special branch of her work she said:

I am going to subdivide my prison work, and will give more time to the public and evangelistic work of the volunteer movement than I have in the past. I am going to begin holding councils and meetings among my women officers, and in the early spring will go to California, where I will lecture in all the principal cities. I will give public lectures in New York, too I feel that God has given me a new lease of life, and I want to work, "for the night cometh when no man can work."

And in justifying the wearing of the volunteer uniform which has been criticised severely by some, she said she strongly believed in wearing it because it admits one to places an ordinary dress would not; it states a woman's mission for her and gives her the right to speak to strangers and offer help or comfort that the conventional garb would not. It is a protection to the wearer, and besides, it solves the perplexing question, "How much money and attention should a Christian woman give to her dress?" S. T. Willis.

A Crisis in Christian Endeavor.

J. Z. Tyler, Cleveland, Ohio — Dear Brother: The recent convention at Chattanooga recommended unanimously that your services be continued as national superintendent of Christian Endeavor, and instructed the board of managers to provide for your remuneration for your whole time, if it could see its way open to do so. I understand the board has considered the matter, and has decided that it sees no way open by which to provide for your support. I learn further through the corresponding secretary that you have agreed for the time being, at least, to continue on the same terms as heretofore to prevent the work from going backward.

This condition of things does not seem to present a very encouraging outlook for the Christian Endeavor work among us. It is evident that, unless we take hold of this movement with a firmer grasp and with more determination than this action would seem to indicate, instead of forging to the front in Christian Endeavor work, we will fall behind. It seems to me that with our plan for Reading Courses we are in a condition to achieve the very best results from the Christian Endeavor movement. But these results cannot be secured without the personal supervision of some one like yourself, who understands the nature and possibilities of Christian Endeavor, and whose heart is in the work.

What suggestions have you to make to the brotherhood in reference to the present outlook and needs of Christian Endeavor among us? Fraternally ycurs,

J. H. Garrison.

Dear Brother Garrison:—Christian Endeavor, among the Disciples, has reached a crisis, and our entire brotherhood should know it. As I said in my Chattanooga report, "We have now reached a point in our Christian Endeavor work where we must either advance or recede. The present method and agency are no longer adequate; we must either make more ample provision, or recede." These sentences set forth the necessity which has come upon us with the growth of Christian Endeavor. Your note of inquiry briefly recounts the recommendation of the Chattanooga Convention, the decision of the acting board of the A. C. M. S., and my own consent to continue, for the time being, to do what I can to prevent the work from going backward. I thoroughly agree with you that "this condition of things does not seem to present a very encouraging outlook for Christian Endeavor work among us." You are correct in saying that "unless we take hold of this movement with a firmer grasp and with more determination than this action would seem to indicate, instead of forging to the front in Christian Endeavor work, we will fall behind."

On the 8th of last November, in response to a letter from the secretaries of the American Christian Missionary Society, asking me for suggestions, in view of the action of the Chattanooga Convention, I set forth my views succinctly, and I cannot do better now, in response to your request for suggestions, than to reproduce the body of that letter:

My mind is not committed to any definite scheme. I am profoundly impressed with the importance of looking after our young people more thoughtfully and more thoroughly than we have heretofore. I am certain that it is the part of wisdom to now lay broad and deep foundations for our work in the near future. I think I see great possibilities; and yet these possibilities can be realized only by comprehensive and wisely laid plans carried into execution in a spirit of devout consecration. This is the burden that has been coming upon me, with increasing weight, since my first connection with Christian Endeavor. While I have done my very best to meet it, I am overwhelmed with a sense of the insufficiency of what I have done and have been deeply distressed at the seeming indifference of so many of our leading brethren.

Here are some of the things which, as it seems to me, we should aim to accomplish: (1) We ought to increase the numerical strength of our Christian Endeavor hosts until, so far as possible, every young person among us is intelligently, conscientiously and actively enlisted in this good work. No systematic effort has yet been put forth to spread this movement among us. There should be. (2) We should awaken our entire brotherhood to a recognition of the vast opportunity which, in the good providence of God, has come to us. The Christian Endeavor movement ought to signify vastly more to the Disciples than to any other religious body. Our brotherhood needs to be awakened. (3) Our young people, already enlisted in this movement, need to be aroused and guided in practical service. We need to save the movement from "talking itself to death." (4) Every Christian Endeavor Society among us should, to a degree, be made auxiliary to our two great missionary boards, thus making our young people familiar with our missionary machinery by making them active helpers in the two great departments of our missionary service. There is no reason why our Christian Endeavor Societies should not contribute as much to missions as do our Sunday-schools. I believe that systematic and persistent effort may bring even larger financial results. But I would urge the undertaking of this work, not so much for immediate financial returns as for the practical training it would give our young people, and the larger financial returns of the future. (5) I believe the time has fully come when, if we are ever to become the great missionary people we ought, we must set ourselves thoughtfully and persistently to the task of thoroughly informing all our young people concerning the divine demand for world-wide evangelization. Our people must be brought to see that this is one great enterprise for which the Church of Christ exists; yet we can never bring our people to see this unless we begin systematic missionary instruction among our young. (6) I believe the time has come when a widespread and systematic movement should be inaugurated for a fresh study of the fundamental purposes of our movement. We are making a plea that has in it far more than our own people are recognizing. We have, theoretically, set before us the apostolic standard. There needs to be a widespread and systematic movement to rally our young people to this standard. This means much more than is popularly meant among us by "first principles." It means a complete surrender to the will of God as disclosed in the gospel; it means a deeper, more abundant and more fruitful life. (7) We should plan for a widespread revival among our young people in the private and systematic study of the Bible. (8) There should be a revival of evangelistic effort on the part of our young people.

These are some general features of the work which, as I see it, ought to be done with and for our young people. Of course, it is being done, in a measure, by present local agencies, but I think these local agencies themselves would be quickened into far greater activity and could be led into larger efficiency if an all-comprehensive and enthusiastic campaign were planned and prosecuted toward these great ends.

From this general view of the whole matter you will readily see that the suggestion to employ a stenographer to assist me does not meet the demands of the situation. A machine cannot do the head work and the heart work needed. Nor can any man discharge the duties of the pastorate and still have enough time and vital energy and spiritual power left to do what needs to be done. I have tried it.

Nor do I believe it would be wise, just now at least, to establish a salaried office. There is danger that the salary and the office might ultimately become the chief things. Moreover, we cannot now tell just what form the work might assume, what developments might manifest themselves, after we have once laid our hands resolutely to the solution of this great problem of the comprehensive spiritual training of all our young people. I believe we should be very slow in formulating definite, permanent plans, but should set ourselves prayerfully and energetically to the task immediately before us, and await providential unfoldings. To me, one of the most beautiful features of the Christian Endeavor movement has been its reliance upon divine guidance and the utter absence of formal planning and machine-making. I think we need to learn this lesson. It may be wise, by and by, to have a permanent salaried office as a part of our regular missionary machinery to look after these matters; but, taking everything into the account, I do not think it wise to plan for that just now. It is better to apply ourselves diligently to the task as we now see it and await the divine unfolding.

As you have said that "those of us who have to make provision for the future of this cause have no one in mind to whom we can turn to take your place," and that "it is the earnest wish of all with whom we have talked that some arrangement be made by which your invaluable services can be retained," I suppose I am expected to say something concerning my own possible continuance as leader in this work. For personal considerations I prefer the pastorate, and yet should it be the unanimous wish of my brethren that I undertake this task, I am at their service.

As the best means of providing a financia support, I suggest that a letter be sent to a large number of brethren asking a personal pledge. I suggest this personal pledge as much better than a general appeal to our Christian Endeavor Societies The persons making these pledges may look to the societies in their local churches and immediate vicinity to reimburse themselves The acting board, according to instruction given at the Chattanooga Convention would act simply as agent in securing, collecting and applying these pledges These pledges should be made for two years, thus affording opportunity to thoroughly test the value of the work. The letter soliciting these pledges should set forth the character of the work to be done, urge its importance and outline its method. I would suggest that a card be enclosed containing a definite pledge, and the amounts varying from one dollar to ten dollars, be printed on the margin to enable persons to easily indicate the amount pledged. The letter should also state that any amount received in excess of the absolute needs of this special work would be turned into the Jubilee Fund of the American Christian Missionary Society.

The foregoing, Brother Garrison, are the suggestions I made to the acting board last month in response to a request from their secretaries. I know of nothing better to suggest in response to your request. I think the friends of Christian Endeavor will be disappointed to know that the acting board declines to do anything in the line suggested.

In this whole matter I have prayerfully sought to eliminate every personal motive. I believe it to be God's will that we go forward. I believe it to be the will of a vast majority of our brotherhood that we go forward. I believe that they will furnish the means—cheerfully, promptly, adequately—if they are given the opportunity. I believe that vast possibilities lie just before us. I believe that much of our future usefulness depends upon the action now taken by our brotherhood concerning this vital and fundamental matter. Whatever is done should be promptly done. Opportunities neglected seldom return. "There is a tide in the affairs of men."

I have done my very utmost; I have nothing more to suggest. I leave the whole matter with God and with my brethren.

Truly and fraternally, J. Z. Tyler.

An Open Letter to Preachers.

I am in almost daily receipt of letters from preachers wanting information in regard to Texas, desiring, they say, to locate among us, and I take this method of answering in advance all who may write me in the future as regards the climate, people, etc. Texas is a great country—great in many respects. Our area includes 265,780 square miles; 247 counties—some of them as large as an ordinary state, and many of them rather densely populated, but in population nothing as compared with many counties in the New England states. We have 79 railways, including their various divisions and branches, and those railways give access to no less than 400 villages, towns and cities ranging in population from 250 to 60,000. There are 535 villages, towns and cities in the state. Our climate in winter is usually mild, the mercury in the thermometer seldom ever falling below 20 degrees—though sometimes we have what is called northers—(you may not know what that means, but if you come to Texas you will) and within a few minutes the mercury falls from 20 to 80 degrees. But this seldom occurs; usually the mercury in winter season ranges from 35 to 65 degrees.

The spring and fall seasons are very mild, but the summers are quite warm—the mercury standing from 80 to 100 degrees.

We have all variety of soil adapted to the cultivation of a great variety of fruits, vegetables and cereals. Cotton, corn, oats, wheat and potatoes are the principal products, the comparative quantity indicated by the order named.

The people here are cosmopolitan in population, but Americans largely predominating in numbers and financial strength. They are industrious, peaceable, quiet and law-abiding, and perhaps there is no state in the United States where citizens have greater respect for the laws that should govern them than the people of Texas, with barely one exception: in temperance or prohibition towns it is often the case that they have "cold storage"—a house where liquors are kept on deposit and used by the loyal (?) owner.

In this state we have about 200 church organizations that are in line with all aggressive Christian work, and about 450 that are not, and perhaps some 70 that are neither, but are semi-aggressive, and semi-non-aggressive. This is another statement that you may not understand, but you will if you come to Texas.

There is another thing in which our Texas churches are peculiar (most of them), and that is, your certificates of diplomas and commendations of your fine intellectual standing will not, considered in the abstract, secure you a situation—not even when these are accompanied with certificates of your good moral standing and full fellowship in the church. They want to see your church letter and have you preach, and then they will be the judge. Men who are not generally known to Texas churches cannot easily secure a situation among us by writing to the churches. In view of this peculiarity of the Texas churches I would advise all preachers who really want to come to Texas to arm themselves with certificates from the elders of their church as to their fellowship and good standing, and come to Texas. Come because you want to come, and come to stay. Our brethren here are a little bit suspicious when a preacher writes that he can't stand the climate where he lives, or that he must change on account of his wife's health, or his throat affection causes him to seek a higher or a dryer climate. Of course your wife is sick, or your throat is troubling you, or the climate is not suited to your general health, but it is much better not to state these things in order to keep down suspicion. Texans love Texans, and when a man comes to Texas they want to believe he is here to stay, and thus become identified with all the common interests, and not that he is here only to regain his health, or to please his wife.

Again, when you come, don't get it into your head that Texas people are a lot of ignoramus s—you might get left on that. Many persons here wear broad-brimmed hats with their pants stuffed into their boot-legs and look in dress quite common, yet perhaps they are graduates from some great university.

Again, when you come to Texas don't expect to find an easy pastorate with a large salary. You may get left on that, too.

The easy pastorates an large paying churches are all taken by preachers who are not likely to leave them any time soon. In fact, those places are seldom let out, they are made—home-made—made by home, and about the only chance to get one is to come and make it. We can only promise the material and show the place to start the factory.

I have yet to find the preacher who came to Texas knowing the great amount of inertia in matter, who went to work, and who was determined to keep at work, bringing with him a whole lot of piety and common sense, together with his commendation of good moral standing and full fellowship with his church, but that succeeded, and to-day is in demand.

We have a vast territory; the field is white unto the harvest and the laborers are few. We will welcome you and assist you all we can.

Strange Things in the Florida Everglades.

In a late issue of the Methodist Florida Christian Advocate, a writer from Everglade delivers himself as follows: "Who are the Methodists of the ten thousand islands?" and answers, "A handful of the salt of the earth, a ray of the heavenly sunbeam, a sparkling dewdrop in the parching desert of infidelity, deism, agnosticism, and free-thinkers and no-thinkers, a guide in the wilderness of doctrine, a preacher of Christ Jesus, unto the Catholics and Baptists, the Campbellites and Seventh-day Adventists." In the same article the writer remarks to his brethren, "Brethren, do not leave this little sheep among wolves, but remember that the ninety and nine are not all that he bought with his precious blood. Daniel was not left to die in the lion's den, nor did the fiery furnace retain the Hebrew children."

We have always been of the opinion that there were strange, uncanny and uncouth things to be found in the Everglades of Florida. Ever since the cruel and crafty Semmoles in 1835 ambushed and killed a body of United States troops under the command of Mayor Dade, this swampy region of almost countless islands covered with a dense thicket of tropical and semitropical growth, has been looked upon as almost unfit for the habitation of civilized beings. But according to our Advocate brother the "ten thousand islands" seem to be pretty well inhabited and by a people possessing a wonderful variety of shades of belief and unbelief. Infidels, Deists, Agnostics, Free-thinkers and No-thinkers. I fancy these are "gators"—Catholics, Baptists, Campbellites and Seventh-day Adventists. Now just fancy, gentle reader, turning loose a "little sheep" in such a howling wilderness as that. Think of "a sparkling dewdrop in that parched desert" of swamp 160 miles long by about 60 miles wide—surely a great place for Baptists and Campbellites and Seventh-day Adventists who, as I take it, do not usually flourish much under "sparkling dewdrops." It certainly would be little short of a serious misdemeanor for the "Annual Conference," to neglect this "little sheep" and expose it to the dangerous "wolves." Really, our private opinion in the matter is that the flock to which this "little sheep" belongs should encourage it to continue its efforts, and help it to guide aright those inhabiting this "wilderness of doctrine." Perhaps if this "little sheep" would put itself under the leadership of the Good Shepherd and become a "preacher of Christ Jesus" in reality, there would soon be no Catholics, or Baptists, or Campbellites, or Seventh-day Adventists, or Methodists in the Everglades, but all would be willing to become followers of Chris or Christians and thus be able to present an unbroken front of universal Bible-given truth to the "Infidels, Deists, Agnostics, Free-thinkers and No-thinkers" of the "ten thousand islands."

"And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considereth not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull the mote out of thine eye, and behold a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite! first cast out the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see more clearly to cast the mote out of thy brother's eye" (Matt. 5:3, 4, 5).

One Hunderd Years Old.

On January 1, 1799, Transylvania (now Kentucky) University began its first session, with Rev. James Moore as president.

On Sunday night, January 1, 1899, appropriate commemorative exercises of the hundredth anniversary of this noted institution, were held in Morrison Chapel. The large chapel, which was named after the late Dr. Morrison, who, at the request of Henry Clay, gave to the institution a large endowment, was filled with the most cultured people of the Blue Grass, and a number of the friends of the institution from different parts of the country.

The college building was decorated inside and out. Over the front entrance was a large electric star. The old chapel was beautifully decorated for the occasion and never appeared to better advantage. An electric coated shield was suspended over the center of the platform, immediately over the portrait of Col. Morrison, the electric current spelling through the beautiful lights,

ONE HUNDRED YEARS OLD.

A line of electric lights to the right and left of this added to the effect. Tastefully arranged cedar and evergreen hung about the windows and rostrum.

As was stated in the papers sometime ago, the Rt. Rev. Thos. U. Dudley, D. D., of Louisville, was extended and accepted the invitation of the committee on arrangements to deliver the principal address. Sickness, however, prevented his being present, and his place was ably filled by President Ethelbert Dudley Warfield, of Lafayette College, Pennsylvania, a former student of Kentucky University.

President Cave presided and carried out the following program:

Hymn, "Doxology," choir.
Invocation, Rev. I. J. Spencer.
Hymn, "America." Announced by Prof. Arthur Yager, Georgetown College.
Scripture Reading, 1 Kings 3:5-14; 4:29-34, by Jas. K. Patterson, State College of Kentucky.
Prayer, Rt. Rev. L. W. Burton.
Anthem, "Bow Down Thine Ear," choir.
Address, "Christian Education," Pres. E. D. Warfield, Lafayette College. Pa.
Prayer, Chancellor L. H. Blanton, Central University.
Historical Address, Pres. J.W. McGarvey, College of the Bible.
Address, Gov. Wm. O. Bradley, of Kentucky.
Anthem, "Galilee," choir.
Benediction, Rev. W. F. V. Bartlett.

On the platform were seated all who took part in the exercises, Gov. Bradley's staff, members of the faculties of the University, all visiting college men, members of the Board of Curators, a number of the Alumni, ministers of the Lexington churches, and other distinguished guests. The beautiful music was furnished by the excellent choir of the Broadway Christian Church. Letters of congratulation were received by the committee from all members of President McKinley's Cabinet, from educators famed the country over, from the faculty or president of almost every institution of learning in the United States, and from many others, including a beautiful letter from Mrs. Jefferson Davis, whose distinguished husband was educated in the University.

The fame of Transylvania is historic. At the beginning of this century she was ranked with Yale and Harvard as one of the greatest universities of the country. Kentucky University is her worthy su cessor and is maintaining a high standard in these latter days of the nineteenth century as Transylvania held at the close of the eighteenth century.

The exercises of Sunday night are but the beginning of the centennial celebration, which will be continued during commencement week in June. Preparations are already being made for this and it is expected that a very large number of the Alumni, former students and friends of the institution will be present to assist in and enjoy the exercises which will be held then.

Long live Kentucky University, the worthy successor of old Transylvania!

Pacific Slope Items.

We brethren of California are so well fed weekly, both spiritually and intellectually, by the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, that we are probably neglectful of the wishes of our brethren and friends of other parts of the world to hear occasionally of the condition of the work of the church and of the hopes and the prospects of the brotherhood of the Pacific Slope. Our church in common with all others has felt very sensibly the effect of the "hard times" resultant from the shortness of crops of the past season.

It has on that account been impossible for many of our churches to maintain a preacher, and for that reason conversions have been correspondingly few, for "how shall they believe in him of whom they have not learned, and how shall they hear without a preacher?" We feel cast down, but not in despair. Lately some of our churches that have for a long time past been without a preacher, have engaged one and hope soon to see the time when we shall not have a preacherless church nor a churchless preacher.

The churches of San Jose, the First and the Central, are both in fairly good condition. The First Church has Bro. B. B. Burton for its pastor. He is now serving it the third year and it has flourished under his able and efficient preaching of the Word and direction of its business affairs. The Central Church is at present without a regular preacher and pastor, Bro. J. H. Hughes, who for four years was pastor thereof having recently taken charge of the church at Chico, Cal.

But ad interim, whilst we are negotiating for some one to take permanent charge of the work, we are fortunate in having Bro. F. M. Kirkham, the editor of the Pacific Christian, who but lately came to this coast to preach for us each Lord's day. Bro. Kirkham is both an able preacher and writer and the churches of this coast are fortunate in his having cast his lot among them.

The Central Christian Church of this place recently extended a unanimous call to Bro. George W. Sweeney, of Oakland, to become its pastor, but because of the illness of Sister Sweeney he was compelled to reluctantly decline to accept the call. Bro. Sweeney preached eight or nine years for the First Christian Church of Oakland, Cal., and is greatly beloved by the brotherhood there. He and his good wife give liberally of their wealth to all good works.

Bro. W. A. Gardner, who by reason of sickness has been unable to fill his pulpit for several months until of late, is recovering again, and we hope and pray that he may be spared for many more years of usefulness in the Master's vineyard. He has wrought a good work in the cause of the Master in this state and is much beloved by all of the brethren for his work's sake. O. O. FELKNER.

The Power of Truth.

I have recently had a practical illustration of the power which the plain truth has over a sincere heart. Permit me to give it for the pleasure of all and for the profit of those who may profit by it.

A few weeks ago a young man chanced to be spending his evenings in my home. He proved himself to be a model young man, clean, courteous, industrious and religious, being a zealous member of the M. E. Church. He desired to read good books. I selected for him as I learned his taste and need. A spirit of inquiry was soon aroused and I responded willingly to his call for assistance. One evening we made a diagram of the cases of conversion recorded in Acts and also one on the form of baptism. He did the reading while I did the writing. When I saw a point well taken I did not fail to clinch it. We found a marked absence of much now common in revival meetings. Baptism was not put off for weeks and months, but was performed the same day. The only form of baptism that can possibly meet the Scripture demands is immersion. My inquirer was convinced. The next morning, after being assured that we would gladly assist him to obey the Lord more fully, he decided to be immersed at once. As soon as a few brethren could be assembled and the ice cut away I baptized him, "and he went on his way rejoicing."

There was no persuading nor excitement in this case; simply Scripture answers given to all questions. Each point was followed up until the disobedience was evident and the way to obey apparent. There are, no doubt, many such instances. There should be many more. Every church member should be able to conduct such an inquirer safely to obedience. The power is in the Word. Direct the reader and he will read himself into obedience. If more personal attention were given to individuals, probably more honest seekers would be found. J. M. MCKAY.

A Plea for the Homeless.

The time has come when something adequate should be done for the great mass of the poor. The fact is, they have long been wronged, which causes their present helpless distress. When the Creator gave to each human being a natural right to life, he made life dependent upon the products of the earth, so that it could not be made good without sufficient of them to sustain it. The right to life thus involves a right (possessed by every man) to all indispensable to life. This is generally comprehended in the use of land and ability to cultivate it. Producing from it is the most profitable of the various kinds of work we call necessary to life. If necessities are once brought into existence we can, in case of emergency, ourselves prepare them sufficiently for use to prevent death from want, but preparing and distributing them cannot be done if they do not exist. Their production is indispensable to our life.

If every family has its little farm but few persons need be poor. Now, however obtained, the wealthy few control all the land and capital or productions of land, while the rest are generally deprived of it, though having precisely the same right to enough to support them as the wealthy.

The United States Government controls so many millions of acres of vacant land in the Union, and so much ability to enable the great mass of the unemployed and others of poor to get a start in procuring independent living upon it, that it seems as if it ought to do so, supplying as much training and managing at first as necessary.

As soon as the poor had worked awhile under government auspices, each able to farm, could procure a farm, under homestead laws and rise into comfort.

There are many reasons for favoring the United States Government, having an extensive plantation, or more than one, always in its own hands, upon which to admit temporarily all able to do any kind of work steadily of the unoccupied poor, teaching them to raise and make by hand all the necessities of life.

If it would also enable all leaving the plantation to find always market for necessities on the plantation in exchange for other necessities, produced either there or by workmen having been discharged from there, they would be independent of outside market. It is for the advantage of the people that the poor be benefited physically, mentally and morally, as this scheme would benefit them.

ANNA FORBES GOODYEAR.

[The author of the foregoing article is founding a mission for the moral, spiritual, intellectual and physical benefit of the poor in North Boston, somewhat on the plan of the Salvation Army, but quieter, and intended to be duplicated in other cities. Why Boys Don't Go to Church.

The problem of the day is, How to catch and hold the boy in the church while he is passing through the perilous period of his life, the period of adolescense.

One evening I sat in a beautiful church, before me sat three boys whom I judged to be about ten, twelve and thirteen years old. Very heroically they listened, or tried to listen, to a sermon that had in it not one word for boys, a sermon that was not calculated to catch, hold or inspire any one. Sad, but true. The boys surprised me in their behavior. At the close of the sermon, as the congregation arose to sing, one boy gave his neighbor a hymnbook, opened, back side front and up side down. It was a jolly little prank that caused the other boys to smile. A deacon saw that smile and turning to the boys growled a fierce, hoarse, diabolic growl which he accompanied with a frown, an awful, intellectual, aristocratic, cultivated, sanctified frown.

The boys heard the growl and saw the frown, and I think, appreciated the deacon's religion, as he sang:

"So tender so precious,
My Savior to me."

I thought to help the boys out, and gave them a bit of candy. I supposed he would take the hint, but he did not. He was to be excused, however, for he was just coming out of an hour's freezing in a religious refrigerator. He was not at his best. I should have thought of this and have given the candy directly to the deacon. It was he who needed sweetening. Those boys are not half as bright as I take them to be, if they return to that church and sit by that deacon again.

I know boys who, after such a reception, could never be made to return to like surroundings only by the aid of the army and navy. And still people wonder and frown and growl because the bright, happy, fun-loving boys do not go to church! Brethren, sweeten up and study the nature of boys, if you can win and hold them. Salt draws sheep. Kindness wins boys.

"Our Church Register."

The Christian Church of this place was organized in 1842. During the past fifty-seven years the record of its work has been kept in many books, by many men, in many ways. As a result we have a pile of records that tell us little as they ought to tell. The disposition of members who are no longer here, the dates of their uniting with the church, the dates of their disposition, the names of the many preachers who have served the church. All of this can now only be conjectured.

We have purchased one of the latest, largest and very best church registers, and by the help of God and a strong committee, we intend to spare no effort to uncover and collect as much data of the past records as possible, and from this time forward we promise ourselves and our posterity a concise and intelligible history of our work. Why do I write this? Simply because the sad history of this church register is the history of two-thirds of the congregations in the United States. What need have we of such a condition? What excuse for such slothfulness? The merchants, county, state and government records are not so kept. Why should our "Father's business?"

Now, brethren, the task will not become easier by longer delay. Let us begin now and show to the world that God's sons can keep books.

Yours for more system,
M. W. YOCOM.

TRADE-MARK. Established 1780. DORCHESTER, MASS.

From the Iowa Secretary.

Hardly a day has passed since my election to the present position that I have not received one or more letters containing congratulations and expressions of confidence in my work for the I. C. C. These letters have come, not only from my personal friends, but from brethren whom I have never met in the flesh. To all of which I take this opportunity of thanking you for your past and present kindness and for the confidence reposed in me for the future. Believe me, beloved, I will serve you to the best of my ability. I cannot hope to succeed in the work that we have planned without the co-operation of every Disciple in Iowa. My worthy predecessors have inspired the Disciples in our beloved state to make such gains as have not been equaled in any state in the Union, and it may seem that we could hardly hope to continue our work at the pace already set, yet the present outlook gives us reason to hope for even better things in the future. The receipts for the first 15 days in December were almost three times as large as they were for the same period of time last year. A letter from a dear brother this morning says: "The little band at this place has never sent a contribution to the state work. I will present the matter and we will do something this year, and I will send you $100 for the permanent fund soon." The apportionment of another church was $5. The pastor presented the I. C. C. work the 4th inst., and the next day sent us a draft for $25 and said that he could have secured more, but thought it best to divide with other mission boards.

While I have felt almost overwhelmed at the thought of taking up the work laid down by our beloved Brother Haggard, such letters as the above cheer our hearts and make us feel hopeful for the future.

I believe that if the brethren are taught their duty they will give as they have never given before. Last year the apportionment for the churches was about $3,700, and of this amount $1,295.25 (or about two and one-half cents per member) of it was paid.

This year the apportionment for the churches amounts to $3,998, or about eight cents per member. May we not reasonably expect this amount? Can we be satisfied with anything less? We shall do everything in our power to secure it.

Beginning with January first we will send to each district secretary the first of every month a list of all unpaid apportionments, and as each is met that church will be placed on the honor roll.

We want to add 5,000 souls to the church, and secure $5,000 for our share in the Jubilee. We are prepared to help you in many ways. If you are without a pastor, or want a protracted meeting, write to me. If you are about to organize a church, build or dedicate a house, write to me. We want every pulpit supplied and every preacher busy. Remember that I am your servant, and I want you to command me.

Yours for service,
B. S. DENNY, Cor. Sec.

Notes and News.

C. L. Jessup, Saratoga, Wyom., thinks that point a good opening to establish a church and would be glad to have some evangelist who can visit the place.

The annual reports of the various departments of the church for 1898 show 93 sermons preached by the pastor during the year; 105 short speeches and miscellaneous addresses on various occasions; 549 pastorial visits made; 20 funerals conducted and nine marriages solemnized; 11 persons were added to the church by confession and baptism and 30 by letter and other commendation, 14 sermons were preachd by visiting ministers and 17 by Grant K Lewis, of Denver, with us as an evangelist. $1,891.73 was raised by the church through its several departments for use at home and $124.11 for missions.

On yesterday, Jan. 1st, eight were added, five of them making the good confession. "One hundred additions in '99" is the motto with which we begin the new year.

From "Egypt" in Illinois.

The work in Southern Illinois C M. C. territory is moving at a canter. Recently Elder Martin, of Indiana, conducted a revival meeting at Fairfield, Bro. S. V. Williams, pastor, and had eleven accessions. Elder Stottler, of Mt. Carmel, held a meeting at Keensburg, with forty-nine accessions, nearly all heads of families. The church at Mt. Carmel has arranged to have Bro. Updyke in a meeting with them in February. At Flora the church is arranging for a meeting in early March, evangelist not yet certainly engaged. Bro. W. R. Carter, pastor at Lawrenceville, has been the Joshua to lead the church across the Jordan of a big debt, and is now having a big jubilee in the form of a revival meeting; three confessions to date, Jan. 6th.

We were with the brethren at Alma and Salem this week. At the former place the citizens and the church are striving to build up a monument that shall abide in the future. At Salem they are without a pastor at present. They hope to secure a suitable man in the near future. Brother Hart, of Bell Flower, Ill., has recently become pastor of the church at Grayville; and Elder Rosenborough has accepted pastoral work at Sandoval and Odin.

We have several vacant pulpits in Southern Illinois, which will afford good preachers excellent opportunities for doing a splendid work. Write us at Flora for further particulars Respectfully,

W Bedall.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The First Church school, Sedalia, has long carried the banner as the largest school in the Missouri brotherhood, while it is one of the most efficient in all the brotherhood of the Disciples of Christ, or any other people for that. The superintendent has two most accomplished assistants who are not elected as ornaments, but asssistants, and who take their turn in the conduct of the school and always have some part in all the opening and closing exercises, just as it should be, but is not in every school session of all our schools. J. W. McClain puts the same rustling energy into his superintendency that he does in his passenger work for the Missouri Pacific System, "the best road on earth, sir," and he uses the Bible-school room, the main auditorium and the fourteen class-rooms to good and effective work. Of the 21 teachers of the school, every one was not only present, ut in good time for having pupils in order for opening song. Good for them and their work. In the recitations of the 21 teachers, 17 used nothing but their Bibles and this without any warning from me, and their teaching shows thorough mastery of their lessons. In the primary department, J. N. Dalby, a prince in Israel, has had charge of this department for twenty-six years. Think of that, you who talk after two and three years of having "been so long the primary teacher." He has seen his department grow from a mere handful to an enrollment of 250, over whom he has such control that they delight to do as he desires. Their room is now inadequate for their numbers and work. To hear them sing, to watch him sing with them, fills the soul with the holiest of impulses and fires the heart for better work in the behalf of such. He has used so many objects for illustrations in the twenty-six years of his work, that he has a regular museum of illustrations, and one I am urging him to box and bring to the Plattsburg Bible-school Convention. He uses domestic, yard wide, for putting his songs before all the tots, and they watch it and watch him and sing like larks; one little tot especially, whose feet lacked inches of touching the floor and with a book upside down, would look at the book, then at the scroll, then at Bro. Dalby and sing like a mocking bird. The classes of the school are apportioned so much for each Sunday, and always report how near they come to reaching it, and I saw immediately its beneficial and instructive effect. Another capital thing and which is growing, the papers were not distributed until just before the school adjourns, while the primaries receive theirs after school closes. Before beginning the East Broadway Church, Sedalia was one of our best friends, and now that it is turned over to the East brethren, the First Church school gave me near $45 and did it so promptly and cheerily that I had every reason to thank God and take courage. My stay in Sedalia was where I always have stopped when in the city, and Bro. Dalby and his devoted helpmeet were kind and hospitable as in the past. The efficient leadership and the skillful executive work of their former pastor is manifest in all the work of the school, so that their present pastor, Melville Putman, will step into one of the best organized congregations of Disciples, and in this field he has a great opening for a mighty work for the children, the people and the Christ.

Bethel, Buchanan, never fails to remit its apportionment sometime during the year and thus save any going to see about it, while Pickering and Farmington do the same. Brethren, wish all our schools would do this, for the apportionments are so small that it does not pay to visit you for the collection.

Bro. W. H. Woods is trying to revive the Bible-school work in some of the more destitute counties and will likely meet some of the opposition that has arrayed against all our workers, but he means to do the people good and if they will permit it, he will do them and their children good. God bless them in their co-operation with him as he works in Ozark and other like counties.

D. R. Berry and the Berry Church school not only met their apportionment for work but more, and now sends word that other offerings are promised and will follow before the year expires in June. Wish I could thank them and Doc especially for this kindly reminder of their love and friendship.

The same people do nearly all the work in the various departments of church and school. At Cowgill, Sister Goodnow and the other ladies that do all the work in the school, in their Aid raised during '98 $105.15, expending $71.10 of it and church work, beginning the new year with $34.05 on hand.

To all our schools and the workers, "Happy and prosperous New Year to you."

H. F. Davis.

Substitutes for Horsford's Acid Phosphates are Dangerous.

Because they cost less, many substitutes are offered, some of which are dangerous, and none of which will produce the same effect as the genuine. Insist upon having "Horsford's" whether buying a bottle of Acid Phosphate, or "phosphate" in a glass of soda.

Bible-schools and Endeavor Societies of Iowa—Rally, Rally, Rally!

It is our desire that every Bible-school and Endeavor Society in Iowa shall have a rally the last Lord's day in January or the first in February. The main object of these shall be for a spiritual uplift among our young people. Also for the enlargement of both the school and the society. We send to you one of Bro. Orr's excellent tracts on, "How to Conduct a Rally." If you will follow it closely your effort will prove a great help to your entire church work. It is our desire to enlarge greatly the work among the young people of Iowa. We have in this state between the ages of five and twenty-one years 727,694 children and young people. In all of our Bible-schools including the Roman Catholics we have only 365,441 pupils. This means that not nearly half of our young people are in attendance at our Bible schools. Truly, brethren, the Lord has placed us in the midst of a great field; are we not permitting much of its golden harvest to waste ungathered for the Master. There are in Iowa 1,332,000 people past ten years of age who make no profession of Christianity. This is more than half of its entire population. As schools and societies we have done but little for the state mission work. We ask but little this year. At our convention last year it was decided to ask our members of the Bible-schools and C. E. Societies for two cents per quarter for state work during the present year. Young people of the Church of Christ in Iowa, shall we have this small amount from you for this work? Surely you could not refuse your Lord this small offering. But remember to do this work if all will give it will mean more than $3,000. If the Bible-schools and Endeavor Societies will show by their offerings that they can maintain a man in the field, there is no doubt but what the convention will elect a man who shall spend his entire time in this work by next year. What we ask in this rally is that you take the two cent offering for the state work and send same to W. W. Williams, 206 West 4th St., Des Moines, Ia. Should your offering exceed two cents per member, send entire amount and receive credit on next quarter. If you can realize the entire amount, which will be eight cents per member, all the better.

Your school needs the rally, do not fail to hold it. Your C. E. needs the rally, divide the time between the two. Give the entire time on the one Lord's day to this work. Let the Bible-school occupy the morning hour and the C. E. the evening.

It is not our desire to interefere with the work of the foreign board, but rather to help them in their great work. Let the Endeavor Societies if they desire send to the state simply their quarterage, which will be small amount and send their entire collection above this to the foreign board. The first Sunday in February will be Endeavor Day. Your collection on that day should go to the foreign work. Shall not Iowa send up from her Endeavorers a splendid offering to the Lord this the last year of the 19th century? Let every society remember the foreign work this year. Do not fail to interest the entire congregation in this rally. Ask your pastor or some other good man to speak briefly upon the Bible-school work in the morning and the Christian Endeavor work in the evening. Remember this is the work of the Lord.

Yours for Christ and the church,

D. A. Wickizer,
State Superintendent.

Church Bells and Other Bells.

The Neptune Hose Company, of Atlantic City, has just been supplied with a bell of 2,000 pounds by the McShane Bell Foundry, of Baltimore, Md , while a peal of bells for the First Reformed Church of Quakertown, Pa., and a church bell of 5,240 pounds are to be placed by them in St. Patrick's R. C. Church, of Whitinsville, Mass.

The artistic catalogue issued by the McShane Bell Foundry is a regular little encyclopædia of information concerning all sorts of bells—finely illustrated and a text given as to raising, ringing and swinging the different varieties. They send it free to any one interested in bells.

Reminiscent.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—Just finished reading your strong, healthy editorial, "Thirty Years an Editor." In all that time we have never missed a single number, and expect to stay with you to the end.

As I read that and "The Year of Jubilee," also "Ebenezer," what memories come trooping through my mind! I remember Bro. B. W. Stone very well. He used to preach in my father's house. In that early day there was neither schoolhouse nor church in this neighborhood (and yet I am not so old—only 66).

As you say, "Our own religous brotherhood has undergone many changes in these thirty years." While not less loyal to our plea, I think the changes are all for the better; we appreciate the truth so far taught by other religious bodies, willing to acknowledge the good in them. Then we are far more spiritual than when every church was against us, and we against every other church. I was personally acquainted with many good men you mention. Many of them seem so near and dear, as I look back over the army. I came into the church when 16 years of age, under the preaching of the "silvery-tongued," D. P. Henderson. He was rightly named, for aside from his goodness and earnestness, I never heard a more musical, rippling voice. He had an easy, flowing manner as well, and sometimes would sweep all before him with his eloquence and musical tones.

This number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is especially rich in all departments, notably in the portraits. How I would like to see the editor again face to face, and hear him talk once more! This world is too big to be very sociable. KATE A. S. JUDY.

Bethany.

Recently a valuable tract of 1,500 acres of land has been given to Bethany College. This furnishes a text for a brief preachment.

(1) It was given willingly by our good friend and most thankfully received. "God loves a cheerful giver."

(2) Anything is acceptable, from a toothpick to a tanyard, that will help endow this worthy old institution. If you have not the cold cash we are not particular—houses, lands, boats, bonds, life insurance, policies, railroads or any kind of property convertible into money. "Despise not the day of small things."

(3) Some one offered the excuse that they were land-poor and for that reason could not give. It was suggested that to deed part of their property to Bethany College might enrich both parties. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth," etc.

(4) If you have nothing else to give, bestow your note; a promise to pay is better than nothing. One person who could do no better than this had his life insured to secure its payment. "Go thou and do likewise."

Dedication at Greenville, Ohio.

The church at Greenville, the county-seat of Darke Co., Ohio, opened and dedicated their new house of worship New Year's day. It is less than one year since Bro. Perry O. Updike preached the first sermon there. They organized in a hall, and met there until the dedication of their house last Lord's day. It was a great pleasure for us to be with them, and preach the opening sermon, raise their money and dedicate their house. It was a most happy New Year's for the faithful band of Disciples there. God bless them.

Wabash, Ind. L. L. CARPENTER.

Please report two more additions to the church at this place. On Tuesday evening I delivered a lecture for the church at Pawnee Rock on "The Life and Work of Alexander Campbell." The Juniors recently surprised Mrs. Hilton. They came in a body and presented her with a nice lamp. We have a band of about 40 here; 29 have joined since we came here. C. H. HILTON.

Supplies for the March Offering.

The annual offering for Foreign Missions is the first Sunday in March. The following supplies will be furnished free of charge to the churches preparing for the offering.

1. March Offering Envelopes. An envelope should be placed in the hands of each member of the church.

2. March Offering Number of the Missionary Voice. This is without question the most interesting number we have ever published. One copy should be placed in each family represented in the church. It is loaded with missionary instruction.

3. Pastoral Letters. These are for preachers only who will sign their names and mail to the members of their churches.

All this means careful preparation. Preparation is the word to emphasize now.

Order these supplies at once and begin an active campaign. Address,

A GOOD PRACTICE.

If You Want a Good Appetite and Perfect Digestion.

After each meal dissolve one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in the mouth and, mingling with the food, they constitute a perfect digestive, absolutely safe for the most sensitive stomach.

They digest the food before it has time to ferment, thus preventing the formation of gas and keeping the blood pure and free from the poisonous products of fermented, half-digested food.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets make the complexion clear by keeping the blood pure.

They increase flesh by digesting flesh-forming foods.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the only remedy designed especially for the cure of stomach troubles and nothing else.

One disease, one remedy, the successful physician of today is the specialist, the successful medicine is the medicine prepared especially for one disease.

A whole package taken at one time would not hurt you, but would simply be a waste of good material.

Over six thousand men and women in the state of Michigan alone have been cured of indigestion and dyspesia by the use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Sold by all druggists at 50 cents per package.

Send for Free Book on stomach diseases to F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

Have you ever used a porous plaster?

Perhaps you have and it hasn't benefitted you—or perhaps it has spread on your skin and stuck to your underclothing and made itself generally nasty.

Allcock's

never do this, but the imitations generally do.

Insist upon having Allcock's and you will get the best and original and the one on the reputation of which the others trade.

Don't be fooled. Allcock's always give satisfaction and none of the imitations do.

State Mission Notes.

I am writing this from a sickbed and this accouts for my failure to appear for sometime. I came here, to Carthage, to help Bro. Oldham to raise the old church debt and was taken down with LaGrippe and Pneumonia and for a week I have not been able to be out of bed. My physician says, "in a day or two now," but he is an awful procrastiuator.

We had a most delightful meeting at Charleston; that is, we would have had but for the weather. It was just as bad as it could be, it rained all day. Yet we had a good audience in the morning, and such a happy people over the clearing of their house from debt! It has been a burden upon them for years and to see it lifted and rolled away was a perfeet joy to them all. Too much praise cannot be given to Bro. A. F. Holden and his devoted Christian wife for this great accomplishment, for to them their zeal, their consecration and self-sacrifice does the credit belong. They have gone to West Plains, Mo., now, and the prayers of all the Charleston people go with them.

At night we had another good audience considering the weather, and just as I had given out the text for the discourse the fire-bells began to ring and my audience left, without the formality of a benediction, a few came back and we preached, but—well I wish they wouldn't do such things.

I am just in receipt of a note from W. A. Fite, pastor of the church at Harrisonville, and he tells me that they have just taken up their state mission collection, and they have far excelled their apportionment. This is good news. God bless the men who thus make glad the hearts of the state secretary, and help on the good work of God.

I have recently sent out notices to life and annual members whose payments are now due as also the notices of the second quarter of the apportionment. We have sent them out with a prayer that as they come to you in these, the opening days of the Year of Jubilee they may catch a response from you and bring it back to us that we may the more forcefully and widely "proclaim this Year of the Lord." We crave your help, we need your assistance. The doctor says "you must not work so hard, you are breaking down again." I can't help it. The work must be done. If you will help, it will lighten the burden that much. Will you? You gave Christmas and New Year's gifts to your friends? Why? Because you loved them. How many or how much did you give to Jesus? Happy New Year to all!

Yours in His Name, T. A. ABBOTT.

What They Say About the Apportionment.

We will try to raise the amount asked of us. LENA GILBERT, Rushville, Ind.

Our Juniors accept the apportionment of two shares.—MRS. W. H. COWDERY, Ashtabula, O.

Our Juniors will take one share—more if possible.—MRS. EDITH M. STIVERS, Missoula, Mont.

We will pledge one share besides supporting an orphan child.—LOUIE POMEROY, Pueblo, Col.

I trust we can raise our apportionment ($15) next year.—MRS. H. MCDONALD, Burlington, Ind.

We gladly pledge ourselves to pay the share apportioned us and hope to be able to pay more.—SUE SMITH, Huntsville, Tex.

Our Junior Society will accept the apportionment and a half share more.—MRS. J. M VAWTER, Liberty, Mo.

The Juniors will cheerfully accept their apportionment and strive to double it.—NELLIE E. WILLIAMS, Flemingsburg, Ky.

Our Juniors accept their apportionment; they are very anxious to help all they can.—EVA GRANGER, Frankton, Ind.

We will accept our apportionment. I hope we may be able to give more.—MISS L. F. JONES, Lebanon Church, Va.

At our meeting Dec. 11th, we voted to take two shares in the Builders' Fund.—MRS. DR. PARKER, Mt. Sterling, Ill.

Our mission band of twenty members organized last October will gladly accept the apportionment of $10.—LENA YOWELL, Hustonville, Ky.

We accept our apportionment ($10) and will gladly do more if we possibly can.—CARRIE L. POCKER, Swampscott, Mass.

Our Juniors gladly accept their apportionment and will raise it as early as possible.—MRS. M. S. BERRY, Benjamin, Tex.

The Junior Society of the First Church accepts its apportionment and will take one share besides.—MRS. LISSIE LOUTHAIN, Muncie, Ind.

We have decided to take one share and will raise the money as soon as possible; we hope to do more in the future.—CARRIE FRY, Vacaville, Cal.

Our Juniors at this place very enthusiastically accepted their apportionment of $10. They proposed this themselves when your letter was read to them.—MELISSA CARTER, Plainfield, Ind.

We take one share; I cannot promise more as our society is a small one, having only twelve members.—MRS. NORA BLACKERBY, Versailles, Ky.

We accept the apportionment made us, and although it seems large, can raise it. We will go to work at once.—LURA EDNA FORSYTHE, Nineveh, Ind.

We have decided to accept our apportionment of three shares or $30 for the Builders' Fund and of course will do more during the year if we can.—EMMA HORNE, Washington, Penn.

Our Society will be glad to take one share of $10 in the Builders' Fund and we will do more if we can.—MRS. JESSIE C. LOY, Los Angeles, First Church, Cal.

We accept our apportionment ($15) and although we feel it to be quite an undertaking, with God's help we will raise it.—ADDIE WOOD, St. Louis, Mich.

The above are a few of the many words of approval that have been sent us about the apportionment of shares in the Builders' Fund made to the Societies and Bands in the Young People's Department of the C. W. B. M. The watchword for this department this year is, "Nine thousand in '99 in the Builders' Fund."

Algonac, Jan. 3.—I closed up my work at this place Dec. 25. Have accepted a call from the church at St. Louis, Mich. Will begin Jan. 8th.—J. L. SMITH.

MISSOURI.

At Log Church, one addition; New Market; two reclaimed; at Grayson, two added by letter.—WM. C. THOMPSON.

MISSISSIPPI.

New Albany, Jan. 5.—An eight days' meeting nine sermons in Ellzey and four at Pine Ridge, Calhoun county, Miss., resulted in six additions; five confessions, and all baptized on closing day — Christmas. — H. R. COLESON, evangelist.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, Jan. 2.—There were four additions to the North Park Church of this city on yesterday.—J. M. CANFIELD.

Valpariaso, Jan. 4.—One confession at Hammond Sunday night. We expect to do our part towards the 100,000 souls for Christ this year.—WALTER L. ROSS.

ENGLAND.

Chester, Dec. 22.—Our work moves along successfully here with 46 responding to the invitation; 45 by confession. We begin at Liverpool on Jan. 7, '99, D. V., and my address will be 47 Lidderdale Road, Sefton Park, Liverpool, England.—J. A. L. ROMIG.

KENTUCKY.

There have been 37 additions to Parkland Church, Louisville, in last nine months.—S. M. BERNARD.

Union Star.—Eld. A. F. Beare recently closed a successful meeting at Stephensport, four miles from this place. We now have a membership there of 53. Hope to build a church before spring. Also hope to organize a Sunday-school.—(MISS) SUE A. BRASHEAR.

OHIO.

Youngstown, Jan. 2.—Began at the Central Church here yesterday; seven added first day and two more to-night. Lincoln Davis has been pastor of this church from its organization and is a thoroughly consecrated, spiritual man. The church seems to be alive to its opportunities. Our total for 1898 at Dec 31st was 1,253 additions.—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

ARKANSAS.

Eureka Springs, Jan. 3.—Please report 40 additions for us; 29 of these were converts. Let these be counted among the 100,000 for '99. Bro. Morgan Morgans is a clear, forcible preacher; his daughter a good leader of singing. On Thursday night, Bro. M. gave a lecture on his travels in Palestine. It was excellent and well received. Bro. M. is a good lecturer, his statements are clear and his descriptions life-like and vivid.—DANIEL TRUNDLE.

IOWA.

Closed a short meeting at Freemont, Dec. 28, 1898, with eight baptisms and one by letter. Had a good hearing during the meeting.—G. F. DEVOL.

Mt Pleasant, Jan. 2.—We have just closed a meeting with nine additions, one by letter, one by statement and seven by baptism, one from the Methodists.—H. T. CLARK.

Elliott, Dec. 31.—M. C. Johnson has closed a meeting of 32 days' at this place with 30 additions to the church; 24 by baptism.—T. J. REZNOR, pastor.

TEXAS.

Galveston, Jan. 1.—Two added to-day.—JESSE B. HASTON.

Manor, Dec. 29.—I held a short meeting at Buda. One added.—C. E. SMOOTZ.

Austin, Jan. 3.—There were 16 persons added to the church during the past quarter. We now meet in Y. M. C. A. rooms, but hope to dedicate our new church building in March.—J. W. LOWBER.

ILLINOIS.

Washington, Dec. 30.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Mt. Zion, north of Eureka, with six additions; four baptisms.—J. T. ALSUP.

Rantoul, Dec. 29.—Two additions at Rantoul since last report. We begin a meeting here next Lord's day.—H. H. PETERS.

Murphysboro, Dec. 27.—Three additions on last Lord's day by letter, and one reclaimed. Splendid outlook in the future. Our Endeavor Society made its report last Sunday evening, for the last quarter, with over 100 new names added to its membership. Pray for us.—W. H. WILLYARD, pastor.

Cantrall, Dec. 31.—Closed our meeting at Cantrall last night. One added by confession. The storm, the bad roads, and much sickness hindered our work severely. Bro. Hieronymus, their pastor, has a warm place in the hearts of his people. We are now at Mechanicsburg for a few days.—W. A. MELOAN.

Watseka, Jan. 2.—One added here New Year's day by letter. Closed a few days' meeting at Pitwood, Dec. 29, where Bro. King holds forth. One of our deacons (Bro. Trotter) assisted the pastor and me whenever he could get away from his work in the furniture store. Fourteen were added to the Pitwood congregation, the majority of whom were baptized here on our last prayer-meeting night.—B. S. FERRALL.

West Salem, Jan. 4.—Our meeting here with Bro. Anthony is growing in interest. House packed and will not begin to hold the people. We expect a grand meeting. If you want a good meeting write us. Either or both of us can be had when done here.—C. M. HUGHES, singing evangelist.

Mt. Carmel, Dec. 30.—Closed meeting at Keensburg, Dec. 27th with 49 added; all adults and mostly heads of families. W. C. Swartz preached the last Sunday and made a good impression. They will probably employ him for half time next year. Our work here is prospering; have put a new steam heater in the church and am now planning a great campaign for '99. J. V. Updike will be with us in February and we expect great results.—J. H. STOTLER.

New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. Free to our Readers.

Our readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, from the wonderful Kava-Kava shrub has proved an assured cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disordered action of the Kidneys or Bladder. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys and is a true specific just as quinine is in malaria. We have the strongest testimony of many ministers of the gospel, well known doctors and business men cured by Alkavis, when all other remedies had failed.

THE KAVA-KAVA SHRUB
(Piper Methysticum.)

In the New York Weekly World of Sept. 10th, the testimony of Rev. W. B. Moore, D. D., of Washington, D. C., was given, describing his years of suffering from Kidney disease and Rheumatism, and his rapid cure by Alkavis. Rev. John H. Watson, of Sunset, Texas, a minister of the gospel of thirty years' service, was struck down at his post of duty by Kidney disease. After hovering between life and death for two months, and all his doctors having failed, he took Alkavis, and was completely restored to health and strength, and is fulfilling his duties as minister of the gospel. Mr. R. C. Wood, a prominent attorney of Lowell, Indiana, was cured of Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder disease of ten years standing, by Alkavis. Mr. Wood describes himself as being in constant misery, often compelled to rise ten times during the night on account of weakness of the bladder. He was treated by all his home physicians without the least benefit, and finally completely cured in a few weeks by Alkavis. The testimony is undoubted and really wonderful. Mrs. James Young, of Kent, Ohio, writes that she had tried six doctors in vain, that she was about to give up in despair, when she found Alkavis and was promptly cured of kidney disease and restored to health. Many other ladies also testify to the wonderful curative powers of Alkavis in the various disorders peculiar to womanhood.

So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 420 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, difficult or too frequent passing water, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative powers.

A Short Sermon.

BY ALICE CARY.

Children who read my lay,
This much I have to say:
Each day and every day
Do what is right!
Right things in great and small,
Then though the sky should fall,
Sun, moon and stars, and all,
You shall have light!

This further I would say:
Be you tempted as you may,
Each day and every day,
Speak what is true!
True things in great and small;
then though the sky should fall,
Sun, moon and stars, and all,
Heaven would show through!

Figs as you see and know,
Do not out of thistles grow;
And though the blossoms blow
White on the tree,
Grapes never, never yet
On the limbs of thorns were set;
So if you a good would get,
Good you must be!

Life's journey through and through,
Speaking what is just and true;
Doing what is right to do
Unto one and all,
When you work and when you play,
Each day and every day;
Then peace shall gild your way,
Though the sky should fall.

MRS BELLAMY: THE ONE THE WORLD KNOWS.

"We call him great who does some deed
That echo bears from shore to shore—
Does that and then does nothing more;
Yet would his work earn richer meed
When brought before the King of kings
Were he but great in little things."

Mrs. Grace Carter-Bellamy. Sounds dignified, doesn't it? That's the way she writes it now. There was a time when it was plain Mrs. James Bellamy, but that was before the palmy days, before she discovered the grand possibilities within herself. All at once she seemed to realize that her talents were being wasted in the narrow sphere of her home ministering to her plain, matter-of-fact husband, and the five small Bellamys. She had a message for her sisters, and she firmly believed it was her duty to deliver it. So, leaving her husband and children to scramble along as best they could, she went out into this old sin-sick world of ours to try to lift it up to a higher plane. She held vast audiences spell-bound by her eloquence. As they listened to the words that fell from her lips, they longed to do better, to live as near the Divine as the one who plead so earnestly with them to seek the better things. Time passed on, and Mrs. Bellamy became a great lady. Each year added a spray to the laurel wreath that twined her brow. As her star rose higher and higher toward its zenith, our little village became noted as the home of this famous lecturer.

There was a time when we trembled for the reputation of Glendale, lest she might never be known beyond the county borders. You see, none of our people had ever achieved fame or fortune. True, some of our boys dabbled in politics, and we immediately placed them in the Senate, or at the very least in the Hall of Representatives. But they missed connections with a seat in Congress somewhere, and our hopes went glimmering. We had our poets, but somehow they never touched their lyres in a way that startled the world; consequently, their productions never got further than the county papers. So with nothing to boast our village, it was very humiliating after we reluctantly admitted that we were from Glendale to have people confess they never heard of the place, and ask if anybody that was anybody lived there.

But times will change. Now, when it is known we are from Glendale, we are immediately asked if we know Mrs. Bellamy, state secretary of the Temperance Union, president of the Foreign Missionary Society, etc., etc. We say that we know the great lady; we meet her in the daily walks of life; we see her sweep down our church aisles of a Sunday morning; and more than all, we have been in her beautiful home. Then, they begin to enumerate the virtues of this sweet-spirited woman. They talk of her purity of character, of her devotion to the Master's cause, of the sacrifices she is making, until we wonder if we really do know Mrs. Bellamy. Wherever she has visited, there her fame as a worker at home has gone. In fact, we can't tell people anything about her that they don't know.

She has managed in an indirect way to give them a very fair idea of the amount of work that is shifted upon her shoulders. They have been almost moved to tears by her telling how, when she comes home from a long lecturing tour, worn out in mind and body, instead of the rest she so much needs, there are a hundred and one duties awaiting her in the various church and social organizations of the town. To-day she must make an address on Social Purity at the Mother's Meeting, to-morrow she must talk to the Woman's Missionary Society on Women and Missions.

And so it goes, and they think it little short of a miracle that one woman can accomplish so much. (Innocent dears! They don't know that these talks that take so much of her time and mind are the pet phrases, or in other words, simply a rehash of the lectures she has been giving for the last half dozen years.) Then the church work! It seems almost beyond reason that one in public life should stoop to soliciting a quarter's worth of sugar for an ice cream social, or teaching a class of unruly boys in Sunday-school. But it's her loyalty to the church, and then she'd do anything for our tired, overworked minister, "dear Brother Br-own," pronouncing his name as though it were hinged in the middle. They think it remarkable that Mrs. Bellamy and Brother Brown can be so congenial, for you know prominent people are not always the most desirable church members. Somehow they have an ugly little habit of wanting things their own way.

But not so with Mrs. Bellamy, or at least that's what the world tells us. Haven't they seen time and again in the sketches of this gifted woman that humility is a very marked attribute of her character?

As she is the wealthiest woman in our town, her name is found among the foremost donors to all public institutions and local charities. But aside from these, there are countless little acts of kindness that are not supposed to get into the newspapers, but somehow they do. When we pick up our village paper, we are very likely to see an article headed, "For Sweet Charity's Sake." We learn that our noted townswoman, Mrs. Grace Carter-Bellamy has paid off a month's rent for Widow Maguire, or hired a nurse for little Tommy Green, who is sick with scarlet fever. And then it invariably adds, "We are all willing to be charitable when the eyes of the world are upon us." That sounds very pretty, and may be other people don't think about it, but I've always wondered why she's so anxious for mortals to find out about her doings. Of course the world can explain it. They know all about how carefully she guards these stories of her secret charities, and when they finally leak out, it almost causes nervous prostration. If we cared to enlighten them, we might tell just how they find their way into the newspapers, but we only smile to ourselves and say, "Where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise."

Mrs. Bellamy hates publicity. She has more than once, so the story goes, hired reporters to not write up extended accounts of her lecturing tours. She trembles lest, as St. Paul puts it, "she will be puffed up beyond measure."

Such is Mrs. Grace Carter-Bellamy as the world knows her. We humble village folks do not know her in exactly the same way, but as yet we've never spoken our minds, for we do not care te detract from her worldly glory. She adds a prestige to our town that it would not otherwise have. Her home is the rendezvous of all the noted men and women in her line of work. She can entertain you by the hour, giving reminiscenses of her association with these dignitaries. But she brings in so much about "what I've suffered for the cause," "what I've done" and "what they've said about it," that one gets the impression that they've been honored in meeting her rather than the reverse. "Ah yes," we say as we make our bow along with the rest of the world, "great is Mrs. Bellamy."

A Song of Praises.

AN UNPUBLISHED POEM.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

[I have found these lines on the back of a note received by Mr. Whittier in March, 1890, and they were probably composed at about that time. The poem was never finished or printed, and the manuscript is in the almost illegible style of his first rough drafts, and I have been compelled to guess at one or two of the words. SAMUEL T. PICKARD.
Boston, Mass.]

For the land that gave me birth;
For my native home and hearth;
For the change and overturning
Of the time of my sojourning;
For the world-step forward taken;
For an evil way forsaken;
For the cruel law abolished;
For idol shrines demolished;

For the tools of peaceful labor,
Wrought from broken gun and saber;
For the slave-chain rent asunder,
And by free feet trodden under;
For the truth defeating error;
For the love that casts out terror;
For the truer, clearer vision
Of Humanity's great mission—
For all that man upraises,
I sing this song of praises.

A Christmas Prayer.

ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

Lord, for the lonely heart pray apart:
Now, for the son of sorrow
Whom this to-morrow
Rejoiceth not, O Lord,
Hear my weak word!

For lives too bitter to be borne,
For the tempted and the torn,
For the prisoner in the cell,
For the shame lip doth not tell,
For the haggard suicide,
Peace, peace, this Christmastide!

nto the desert trod
the long sick, O God!
Into the patient gloom
Of that small room
Where lies the child of pain—
Of all neglected most—be fain
To enter, healing, and remain.

Now, at the fall of day,
I bow and pray;
For those who cannot sleep
A watch I keep;
O, let the starving brain
Be fed, and fed again;
At thy behest
The tortured nerve find rest.

I see the vacant chair—
Father of souls, prepare
My poor thought's feeble power
To plead this hour
For the empty, aching home
Where the silent footsteps come,
Where the unseen face looks on,
Where the hand-clasp is not felt,
Where the dearest eyes are gone,
Where the portrait on the wall
Stirs and struggles as if to speak;
Where the light breath from the hall
Calls the color to the cheek;
Where the voice breaks in the hymn,
When the sunset burneth dim;
Where the late, large tear will start,
Frozen by the broken heart;
Where the lesson is to learn
How to live, to grieve, to yearn,
How to bear, and how to bow—
O, the Christmas that is fled!—
Lord of living and of dead,
Comfort thou!

Christmas Holidays.

BY DE WITT C. WING.

The Christmas holidays have past; they are gone. Some people are better as a consequence; some are worse. Why should this latter be true? The solemnity and sacredness which attach to Christmas day and other days which follow in its wake and bear close relation thereto are not appreciated by many professed Christians even. Instead of hilarious behavior and unthoughtful, giddy conduct, we should have a proper degree of solemnity and concern at such a time. Custom has it that Christ was born on the 25th of December. This may be true; it may not be true. There is but little if any Scripture to support either conclusion, yet we celebrate the 25th of December every year as the time of Christ's birth. And how do some of us celebrate it?

I spent several hours on last Christmas day in a large railway station, and there were numerous answers to the question above asked. They were very conclusive replies. A dozen or more intoxicated men, young and old, staggered about the wide waiting room, their faces red and eyes inflamed. On being seated two of them began talking of their journey from a distant city, one declaring he was going to stay on a "good drunk until New Year's." With such brilliant declarations were mingled numerous oaths, thus desecrating the glorious day on which the Light of the World is supposed to have been born. It seemed heartless and savage-like to me. It occurred to me that these unfortunates thought themselves in possession of the proper ideas regarding the celebration of the sunny day, and having seen so many professed Christians celebrating pretty much the same way, concluded they were simply a few notches lower and the sin would be less in proportion. Do Christian people shine as the religion of Jesus Christ warrants? Verily, nay!

Christmas holidays should be made days of rest instead of seasons of excessive indulgence in frivolity. Mind and body should be given a rest. The heart should flow out in thanks for the privileges afforded. There should be innocent merriment and hearts full of love and gladness that a Savior's love and death have made it possible for such a feast to be enjoyed by the people.

All should have pleasant memories of the Christmas holidays. Some haven't any because their minds were lost in intoxication at the time.

What is Heaven Like?

Ten thousand times ten thousand have been the conjectures as to what heaven is like. It has been pictured out by the human imagination in ten thousands of views. Every one that is on the road to that blessed abode has painted a picture in his own fancy of heaven. Very many of these views of heaven have been false, for all could not be true. Many have relied more on their imagination in the matter than upon sure and reliable facts that God has made very plain, and which have entered scarcely at all into their thought of heaven. A heart free from sin is heaven-like. This is the atmosphere of heaven. A heart free from sin has heaven within already. For there God dwells. The heart is his favorite dwelling-place, although he inhabits eternity. God rules in heaven with nothing antagonistic to his nature or in opposition to his will, and wherever he finds a heart that consents, he makes it a little heaven by removing all that is hostile to his will and dwelling there in his fullness. We say a little heaven, but it is all a little heart can contain. It is great and infinite to that heart. In eternity we cannot enjoy more of God only as he enlarges our soul-capacity. A soul filled with the Holy Spirit knows what heaven is like. And when he is removed from the mixture with sinners in this world and is freed from a crumbling body, he has come to know what heaven is. Therefore, when we want to know what heaven is like, we know it means full salvation with all external hindrances removed. Are you now in heaven?—Christian Witness.

Be Up and Doing.

The Christian life is not a mere refraining from wrong-doing. It is that of course, or it would not be Christian. But its chief characteristic is activity in right doing. It is a positive life, a progressive, aggressive, earnest endeavor to reach a higher plane of experience, a holier development of character. Our Lord, in all his ministry, taught constantly that doctrine, to be of any value, must be translated into doing. In Paul's view the Christian life is a race, a warfare. This is, indeed, the natural law of development. A man can not become an athlete by refraining from enervating vices. No one can grow to be a strong Christian whose life is a bare negation. Indeed, a man whose sole idea of Christian living is simply not to do, and whose whole effort is to guard himself against falling into temptation, is dangerously open to the very perils that he fears. It is essential that the Christian be diligently occupied with right-doing, or the devil will find him an easy prey to his evil enticements. Every Christian, and especially every young Christian, should constantly bear in mind the thought that activity is the price of growth, and that growth is an essential mark of all true life.—The Examiner, New York.

The Family Missionary Society.

Why not organize a missionary society in the home? Elect a president, secretary and treasurer. At least once a week have family worship; read a missionary Scripture lesson; sing a missionary hymn; request a member of the family to read a three-minute paper concerning world-wide missions; study the Annual Report of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society; take a collection. Such a service in the home circle will be full of interest. Questions could be asked, information imparted, zeal quickened. Fifty-two such services in one year, in a home, would give the family broad views of the purpose of our holy religion, and present the highest ideals of character and living. We would be pleased to hear from many homes adopting this suggestion.—The Missionary Voice.

A Prayer.

(Dedicated to the "Advance Society.")

MRS. MATTIE DOAK DEVER.

Holy Savior, our own dear King,
Our young lives to thee we bring;
We thank thee for thy presence dear,
God bless our friends both far and near;
'Tis sweet to look, and trust and pray,
To thee, our Savior, every day.
Keep us good and pure within,
Free from every strife and sin;
May we Advance in all things good,
And "add to our faith" as Christians should;
Help us each day some good to do,
We would be noble, kind and true;
Help us all to grow in grace,
That we may see thy holy face;
Grant to each a starry crown
When we lay this earth-life down.

Woman's Sphere.

At the National W. C. T. U. Convention, St. Paul, Minn., in a "a telling collection speech," Mrs. Burger, of Missouri, said: "Our women are advancing; their sphere is broadening and deepening all over the land.

You talk of woman's sphere,
As though it had a limit;
There's not a joy, a weal or woe,
There's not a whisper, yes or no,
There's not a life, a death or birth,
That has a feather's weight of worth,
Without a woman in it."

The Bible.

Salmon P. Chase, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, appointed by President Lincoln, will take the witness stand. "Chief Justice Chase, please to state what you have to say about the book commonly called the Bible." The witness replies: "There came a time in my life when I doubted the divinity of the Scriptures, and I resolved as a lawyer and judge I would try the book as I would try anything in the courtroom, taking evidence for and against. It was a long, serious and profound study, and using the same principles of evidence in this religious matter as I always do in secular matters, I have come to the conclusion that the Bible is a supernatural book, that it has come from God, and that the only safety for the human race is to follow its teachings." "Judge, that will do. Go back again to your pillow of dust on the banks of the Ohio." Next I put upon the witness stand a President of the United States—John Quincy Adams. "President Adams, what have you to say about the Bible and Christianity?" The President replies: "I have for many years made it a practice to read through the Bible once a year. My custom is to read four or five chapters every morning immediately after rising from my bed. It employs about an hour of my time, and seems to be the most suitable manner of beginning the day. In what light soever we regard the Bible, whether with reference to revelation, to history, or to mortality, it is an invaluable and inexhaustible mine of knowledge and virtue." "Chancellor Kent, what do you think of the Bible?" Answer: "No other book ever addressed itself so authoritatively and so pathetically to the judgment and moral sense of mankind." "Edmund Burke, what do you think of the Bible?" Answer: "I have read the Bible morning, noon and night, and have ever since been the happier and the better man for such reading."—Herald and Presbyter.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis, Mo.

A nice-mannered, respectable woman was on the witness stand. She kept a clean boarding house, and it was the desire of one of her guests to be dishonest that had brought her to the court to make him pay his board.

The witness was patient, but her temper was not improved under the strain.

"Isn't $5 an extravagant price to pay for board in that locality, madam?" inquired the attorney, severely.

"He didn't pay it, sir," answered the worm, beginning to turn.

The lawyer gave a little start of surprise; then he became indignant.

"Now, madam, I ask you, in all earnestness, if you mean to tell this court that your prices are moderate, and that if I should come to your house to board you would charge me five dollars a week? Answer directly, madam," and the attorney sat back in his chair and assumed an imperial manner.

The witness was not at all abashed.

"No, sir," she said simply. "I would"—

"I thought not, I thought not," interrupted the attorney, rubbing his hands.

"No, sir," continued the witness, "I would make you pay in advance."

Then the court forgot its dignity and everybody laughed except the attorney. —Selected.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

Jennie the Conqueror.

When Jennie Watson took her schoolbooks home, her brother overtook her in the yard. She asked him if he had gotten anybody to join the Advance Society. "Jim Dancy has promised," said George, "if my plan works with his father and mother, so they won't sit all day long with their noses in novels. But Jennie, just look! There goes Mrs. Dancy with her head tied up and a broom in her hand. It's going to work! If she comes to sewing on buttons, the thing's done!"

Jennie went in the house and asked her mother if she could go to spend an hour with Tattie Marsh. Mrs. Watson looked at her in surprise. "I didn't know Tattie was your friend," she said.

"She hasn't any," said Jennie. "That is why I want to go. I feel sorry for her, she always looks so lonesome and sad. She will never play with the other girls. I think it is because she is so homely, and has to dress so poor."

"She will never have friends as long as she keeps off by herself," said her mother. "If you want friends you have to go after them, and get them. I have known girls whose faces were quite homely, who made themselves the center of any crowd they might be in, by the brightness of their spirits, and the goodness of their hearts. And you, yourself, must have known very pretty girls who were intolerably dull and lifeless in their conversation. Tattie is very foolish to keep apart from her schoolmates because her dresses are not fine. A girl has no credit for the nice clothes she wears on her back, since they are given her; it is the expression she wears on her face that is all her own."

"But Tattie doesn't understand these things," said Jennie, "and I believe I can help her. At least I want to try. The teacher said to-day that every soul is a world to conquer. I want to know how it feels to conquer a world."

"Hello, Alexander the Great!" cried George who had overheard this remark. Mrs. Watson, of course, consented, and Jennie put a box under her arm and started forth to conquer.

Mr. Marsh was a carpenter, in a small way, and he had associated with boss carpenters just enough to learn how to put off a job as long as possible. In fact, he did not like the business; but since there was no other work that he liked as well, he kept at his trade, and earned a very scanty living for his wife and daughter. He was generally down town. Mrs. Marsh was delicate, and hard worked. When Jennie came in sight of the little cottage, she saw Tattie Marsh moping on the gatepost. This is the way she moped: she stood with her hands on the top of the post and her chin on her hands, while she stared across the road where Linnie Beezely lived. The Beezelys were rich, and they lived in a beautiful house. Tattie often saw Linnie with a bright crowd of girls go in the front door. She could hear their laughter. All this made her very sad. In the meantime, her mother was ironing the clothes.

"Good evening, Tattie," said Jennie.

Tattie looked at her as much as to say, "What are you smiling at?" She said, "Evening," through her nose, and looked very sour.

"I have come to see you," said Jennie; "mamma says I can stay an hour." Tattie slowly opened the gate, while she said, without encouragement, "I saw you in school all day. But come in. Do you want to go in the house, or do you want to stay out here?"

"I will go wherever you would rather entertain me, said Jennie, thinking she had a pretty hard world to conquer.

"I don't know how to entertain you," said Tattie. "I don't know what you like to do. If you like yards, here we are, in one. And if you like houses, there's ours, but I don't expect you ever visit such small ones."

"Let's go in the house," said Jennie. Tattie took a last mournful look at the Beezely mansion, then slowly led the way to the front room, which was a combination of parlor, bedroom and sitting room, and in which Mrs. Marsh was at present ironing her clothes. "I am real glad to see you Jennie," said Mrs. Marsh, pausing to wipe her heated forehead. "This was very kind of you, to come to see Tattie. I often try to get her to go to see the girls, but she won't. Tattie is a very peculiar child."

And Mrs. Marsh looked at her daughter as if she were a new geological specimen that had never been classified.

Jennie longed to take a hand at the ironing, but she feared Tattie might consider the offer as an insult. So she seated herself, while Tattie drummed on the windowsill with her fingers. There was a little silence, then Mrs. Marsh repeated, "Yes, Tattie is a very peculiar child!"

"I brought a book with me," observed Jennie, "thinking I would read it aloud, if Tattie cared to listen."

"I don't like reading," said Tattie.

"Tattie isn't like any other girls," Mrs. Marsh explained, as she hit her iron with a moistened finger, to see what it would do.

"I believe you would like this book," persisted the Conqueror. "Let me read some of it, and if you get tired, you can stop me."

"I guess we might as well do that as anything," said Tattie, whose voice suggested that they had reached their last resource. So Jennie opened her book and began, feeling low-spirited. The book was "Little Women." At first Tattie moped, because the characters were named Marsh, and she thought Jennie had selected the book on that account, as a personal matter. But she soon forgot this suspicion, as she entered more and more into the companionship of Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy. Poor little discontented Tattie had suddenly entered a strange world; a world of brightness and sweetness, of smiles, and not too bitter tears. She seemed to see all around her the castles she had so often reared in the air. But how different the castles, how warm with sympathy for others, how echoing to fresh voices, untainted by envy! The persons in the book were realities. There was Jo, looking at her boots in a gentlemanly way, lying on rugs instead of sitting in chairs; and Beth, the peacemaker; and Amy, so airy and proud; and Meg, with her sisterly lectures. And all dear and so human because they were poor, and must plan to "make ends meet," and must work as well as play—but how sweet the play between whiles! And in a vague, misty way thoughts began to stir Tattie's mind, whispering that she also might be happy, though poor, and that if she worked, play would be sweet. She looked at her mother with her tired face, steadily ironing the clothes she so thanklessly wore. And a blur of tears came to her eyes, through which she smiled at Jennie as she said, "Good-by."

"If you like it," said Jennie, "and if you will come to my house to-morrow after school, I will read to you some more.

"I will come," said Tattie, who longed to add more, but did not know how. "I am afraid you are tired," she told her mother, when Jennie had left. Mrs. Marsh lost half of her weariness at this unexpected interest, and quite lost the other half when Tattie swooped down upon the iron, and began to brandish it as if it had been a tomahawk. "Run!" cried Tattie. "Run from this wild Indian, and go and rest!" And she finished the clothes, feeling all the time as if she had become a new kind of girl.

Next week, more of this continued story. In two weeks, a lot of letters from our members, with an announcement of the books they like best. In the meantime, the society grows.

A NIGHT INTERVIEW.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

A ministry as conspicuous as that of Jesus, even in its earliest stages, could not fail to attract the attention of those persons among the Jews who were interested in current affairs and especially in the hopes which were filling the hearts of the people. John the Baptist had been the lion of the hour, and was such indeed yet. He had attracted the largest possible attention and his preaching had been listened to by thousands from all parts of the country, including Jerusalem. When he called attention to Jesus in the public manner which sent even his own disciples to become followers of the Galilean, it was hardly possible that his words should fail to interest those religious circles in Jerusalem in which the Messianic hope was so important a theme. Among such men Nicodemus had his place. He was a member of the Sanhedrin and evidently a man of impartial and honest character who was a sincere seeker after truth, and unwilling to be a mere careless listener either to evil or good reports of another man's work (John 7:50-55; 19:39). An interview between such a man and Jesus could not fail to be of deep interest.

After the wedding at Cana, Jesus went with his mother and brothers for a visit in Capernaum, where the family probably had a circle of relatives. The disciples went with him. Shortly afterward Jesus left Galilee and came to Judea again. It was his purpose to begin his ministry near the center of Jewish life at the capital. He would give his people in their highest circles the opportunity to accept his message. He was probably fully aware that he would be compelled to withdraw into the remoter districts, both by reason of the opposition of the Scribes and Pharisees, and because of the danger from the rule of so unscrupulous a king as Herod Antipas, to which John the Baptist soon fell a victim. But it was the purpose of Jesus to give the opportunity and spread the message as far as it was possible in the very beginning of his ministry; and the occasion chosen for this was a passover to which Jesus as a Jew had the right and privilege to go with the rest of the people. In John 2:13-22 there is the record of the cleansing of the temple. In the Synoptic Gospels this episode is placed in the closing week of Jesus' ministry. Since John's record is not arranged chronologically it is the opinion of many Bible scholars that the cleansing of the temple narrated by John is identical with that record in the other Gospels and not an earlier one. At any event Jesus attended the passover and attracted wide notice by his miracles, though he did not place any large value on the faith of those who came for such reasons (John 11:23-25).

It was during this time that Nicodemus sought the Master. Through the day he was busy teaching and healing, and there was little opportunity for approach. Night was therefore the season of leisure, and the ruler used this opportunity. It is scarcely probable that the motive of prudence or fear of criticism was the ruling cause of the night interview. The conversation that followed is only given in fragments. It is easy to see that it is not a close record of all that was said, but rather notes and questions from the conversation, or perhaps better still, John's recollection of the most important features of the interview. The presence of the disciples with Jesus is not mentioned, but probably some of them were there, and none would be more likely to remember such a conversation than John, especially in the light of his latter experiences.

The ruler began by referring to the recent miracles of Jesus, or "signs" as they are always called in John's Gospel, as proofs that he was a divine teacher. He was evidently interested in the work of Jesus, and believing him to be a prophet, "a teacher come from God," he was anxious to learn something of the kingdom of God which was in the mind of the whole Jewish nation the uppermost theme of the time. No doubt he shared the common belief that it was to be a temporal and political power. Perhaps he was even willing to believe that Jesus was preparing for the kingdom in a truer sense than was realized by the nation. It may even have been the case that Nicodemus was anxious to be a disciple of Jesus, though fearful of taking the step openly lest he should compromise his position. But there was certainly still lurking in his mind the thought that the position of a Jew as a child of Abraham was sufficiently important to entitle him to recognition in the kingdom, whatever its external phase should be. It is to this point that Jesus addresses himself by saying that a man cannot see the kingdom, or enjoy its benefits, until he is born anew or from above; that is, until he is made a new creatnre Citizenship therefore does not depend upon Jewish birth. Nicodemus could not understand this figure of speech. He took it literally, and Jesus hastened to assure him that the birth of water and of the Spirit, the new creation by the Spirit in the heart, the genesis of faith through the testimony given by the Spirit to the character and ministry of Jesus, issuing in an open declaration, a baptism in water, the outward sign and consummating act of the creative process—these two elements were necessary to entrance into the kingdom. The birth of flesh could bring only into a fleshy relation; the birth of the Spirit is after its own kind.

To the mind of the listener this was a teaching new and startling. Natural birth could be understood, but this of which Jesus spoke was too unreal, too mysterious to be comprehended. Jesus meets this point by saying that after all it is not so strange. There are many things in nature whose presence and power we feel and yet whose methods and origin we do not understand. Their reality is not disproved by their mystery. In this respect the child of the kingdom and his birth are as mysterious as the moving of the wind, but the wind is a reality and no one can fail to realize its presence and power.

The attempt has been made by some Bible scholars to show that the word here translated "wind" should be translated "Spirit," and at first sight the claim seems reasonable when the use of the same word in other portions of the passage is noted. But the difficulties in the way of this rendering seems greater than the arguments in its favor, and the great majority of the best biblical scholars, while acknowledging that the passage is not without its difficulties, agree upon the rendering here given. The point aimed at by those who prefer the word "Spirit" is legitimate. It is certainly true that the Christian is born of the Spirit when he hears the word that the Spirit speaks through the Word of God, and is thus the recipient of faith; but this does not seem to be the point of Jesus' discourse here. It is rather that the strangeness of spiritual birth to a man who had all his life thought only of the natural birth is no proof of its unreality.

The ruler was still perplexed, and Jesus proceeded to show him that all the training of Israel should have prepared him to understand, and that these things were after all only the rudiments of that spiritual dominion which he was establishing. If he could not understand them how could he understand the deeper mysteries of the kingdom? And then in words which may be the continuation of Jesus' discourse, or the comment of the evangelist, the lifting up of the Son of Man is shown to have been foreshadowed by the lifting up of the serpent, an incident in that educational process which might have prepared just such Jews as Nicodmus to understand the ministry of Christ. The lesson closes with that wonderfully pregnant verse which Luther called "the Little Bible," which, like the Bible, begins in heaven, makes the whole circuit of the redemptive work of Jesus for the world, and carries redeemed humanity up to the bosom of God.

From the Pacific Coast. Mr. H. L. Howard, Loomis, California, reports the following incident: "I was sick the past five years, off and on, with malarial fever, catarrh and neuralgia, and was generally run down. I got tired dosing my system with quinine and other drugs and was so discouraged that I felt ready to die. I happened to read an article in the National Tribune, which seemed to fit my case exactly. I sent for a trial box of the Blood Vitalizer from Dr. Peter Fahrney, of Chicago, Ill., and after commencing to use it, I began to feel better. I have about used up the contents of the trial box and have not enjoyed such good health for many years. I am almost 84 years old. My neighbors tell me that if I keep on taking the Blood Vitalizer, I will have to turn the figures and call it 48 instead of 84."

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer has an unbroken record as a blood purifying and health-giving medicine, extending over one hundred years. Sold to the people direct through local agents by the proprietors, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 22.

A STUDENT'S PRAYER.

(Ps. 119:57-64.)

DAY OF PRAYER FOR COLLEGES.

A professor in Harvard College once said in conversation, "In University life, one must fight to keep his soul alive." This is true, not because universities are necessarily evil places, but because the intellect is so active and so much appealed to that the other sides of our nature may be left undeveloped.

There is nothing in knowledge incompatible with the spiritual life. Indeed, knowledge should only deepen and enlarge our souls. Cardinal Newman in his "Idea of a University," declared that the culture of college life contributes to morals by centering attention on high and noble things. Pres. Thwing in his new book on "The College in American Life," holds that colleges are not to impart knowledge; but to contribute to life.

Life is made up of many phases. No one of its many sides must be neglected. It is like a gem with facets. If one facet is unpolished, the whole is vitiated. No student can afford to sacrifice the upper side of his nature, that side which is toward God.

"Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell,
That mind and soul, according well,
May make one music as before,
But vaster."

A little knowledge is a dangerous thing, but not a great deal. The more one learns the more he will approach the center of all knowledge.

Philosophers now agree that we could not think at all without God. We must first postulate God, then can we, departing from that centre, tread the farthest fields of thought. Yet we shall always find him the final goal of all our thinking. When we have reached the farthest possible point of our power to walk alone, when we reel and stagger on the precipice of the unattainable, we must rest ourselves at last on him.

As in the city of Washington, when you walk in the remotest suburbs toward the downtown, you will find yourself gradually led into those great diagonal avenues that lead eventually to the great dome of the capitol, so in the walks of the mind, begin where you will, if your soul is sincere and you keep steadily on, you will be led into the wide, long-trodden ways that lead to the great white dome of the throne of God.

Toward the golden milestone in the Roman forum, roads led from all directions, even the remotest corners of the world. So all roads, they said, led to Rome. That was not more true than that all roads of the mind and soul lead to God. Pursue knowledge far enough and it does not hinder, but helps religion.

If college life calls for a fight to keep the soul alive, it is also true that college life opens the greatest reaches for reverence. Few can look through the open windows, even in passing, into the long vistas of great books in the library stock, or upon the rows of sculptured or painted beauty which genius has produced, or few can walk at night beneath the great, silent, solemn domes of the observatory, where far-seeing eyes peer into the distant heavens, without a hush of awe and reverence.

Those who have never seen and never will, the inside of college walls, should join to-day in prayer that these great engines of God's power should never weaken, but only strengthen the young men and women, whom we send there and who will come from there, God willing, to do the world good. Pray for the colleges, endeavorers, work for them, lend them your strong support; for they are pillars of power in God's kingdom.

Our Pioneers.

By F. D. Power, Director.

Among the prominent men in our movement in the state of Pennsylvania, not named in the handbook, was Nathan J. Mitchell. He was born in a log cabin in Washington county, March 2, 1808, of Calvinistic stock on the father's side, and Quaker extraction on that of the mother. His parents, however, united with the Methodist Church, and in this communion he received his first religious instructions. That men might "get religion" in those days he tells us "preachers with stentorian voices would depict the writhings of the damned in the flames of an oven. Burning and literal hell, the devel and his imps with redhot pitchforks, tossing into the interior of the horrible pit those who had reached the walls and were endeavoring to escape. The power of the Holy Ghost to come down to convict and convert the sinner, and save him from the tortures of this fearful hell would be proclaimed with great vehemence, until terrified sinners came to look upon the Spirit as the real Savior, and lost sight of the Lamb of God who taketh away sin. Under such preaching, the more timid and impressible would become greatly excited, and an invitation to mourners to come to the altar of prayer would be followed with a rush, and the object of the prayers seemed to be to induce God to become reconciled to the mourners, such sentences occurring as, "O Lord come down just now among us!" "Kill and make alive!" "Baptize the people with the Holy Ghost and with fire!" etc.

Long years of gloom and fear and fruitless effort went by, darkening his otherwise joyous youth with a shadow worse than death before he found the light. He read such books as "Young's Night Thoughts," Pope's "Essay on Man," Hervey's "Meditations," Fletcher's "Checks to Autinomianism," and the Scriptures, over and over again, but the system of theology under which he was reared, misrepresented God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, man, the atonement, and he found no comfort. The death of a playmate who had failed to "get religion," especially impressed him with his own need. Finally he heard the "New Lights" about 1825, and listened to John Secrest in 1827, in Belmont county, O., preaching faith in Christ, repentance unto life and immersion by the authority of Christ, into the name of Father, Son and Holy Spirit in order to the remissions of sins. Light from the oracles of God broke upon his vision and his soul rejoiced in anticipation of becoming a Christian. He accepted the simple gospel and began on the next Lord's day after his baptism to preach it to others. His labors were constant and greatly blessed from the start. His first tour was in company with John Secrest. He preached in Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia and Pennsylvania. The pioneers were opposed, slandered, threatened in every way. One man waited for him with his gun, and another with a horsewhip. One reported that he saw his brother, James P. Mitchell, baptize a drunken man, and when he took him out of the water he simply hauled him on the bench, remarking, "Lie there, brother, you are so drunk that perhaps you will not receive the Holy Spirit for two or three days!" The people baptized by him were variously styled, "Mitchellites," "heretics," "infidls," "water-dabblers."

At a short meeting held by him in Pittsburg in 1832, two lads responded, Isaac and Joseph Errett. About this time he located in central Pennsylvania. He was here associated with Dr. S. E. Shepherd. He gives an incident in a debate between Dr. Shepherd and a Presbyterian minister named Harrower, which occurred at Troy, Bradford county. The Presbyterian brother, a Scotchman, was plainly worsted, and on the second day of the discussion arose and said, "Mr. President, the gentleman has complimented me a number of times since the discussion began, as a man of learning, but if what he says of my arguments be true, I am anything but a learned man. He says they are a tissue of sophistry, from beginning to end. Now, Mr. President, I am willing to submit my manuscript to any competent theological seminary, that they may judge of the matter. If I were to stand here and argue for seven years, Mr. President, I should be unable to convince that gentleman. Therefore, Mr. President, I abandon the field and claim the victory." So ended the debate. "He that fights and runs away," etc.

The cause of primitive Christianity made successful progress at this time in Western Pennsylvania. A popular Baptist minister, stopping with Judge Lobingier, of Westmoreland county, remarked to him, "Judge, I don't know what we are to do with these Campbellites. I believe in my heart they will take the country unless they are checked. What can we do to stop their progress?" "Well, Doctor," was the quiet reply, "I believe they are making considerable progress, and I don't know how we can manage to stop them until we first get the Bible away from them."

Nathan J. Mitchell could not take care of his family by preaching, and so had to resort to the practice of law and to surveying, as a means of livelihood. He had two sons who became ministers of the gospel, John P. and J. J. Mitchell, both of whom were useful men, and now rest from their labors.

ECZEMA

HENDERSON.

Letta Jackson was born in North Carolina, Sept. 1, 1819, and was married to Robert Henderson Jan. 4, 1828. She gave her heart and life to the Lord three years later and was baptized by Elder Thomas Lockhart in Morgan county, Ind. Without herald or warning the death-angel called and she passed from earth Sept. 13, 1898, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. F. P. Mitchell, in Lake City, Ia. Funeral services were held by J. A. Walters, and she was laid to rest in the cemetery at Dallas Center, Ia., aged 79 years and 12 days.

HIGH.

Wm. High was born near Buffalo, New York, Dec. 26, 1868, and died at his home in Boulder, Colorado, Dec. 4, 1898, aged 29 years, 11 moths and 28 days. He was married to Hattie Preston March 15, 1897, who remains to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate husband. The remains were brought to Bigelow, Mo., for interment where the writer conducted the funeral services. F. E. BLANCHARD.

SILCOTT.

A J. Silcott was born in Louden County, Va., May 30, 1820, died Dec. 27, 1898. Bro. Silcott and his wife united with the Ripley Church of Christ, Holmes County, O., in 1846, and were both faithful to the Master. His wife preceded him to the "Better Land" just a few weeks. They leave two daughters and a host of warm friends to mourn their loss. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." M. GORSUCH.

SMITH.

Died, at his farm home, five miles west of Kokomo, Ind., Dec. 20, 1898, Henry Washington Smith, aged 81 years. One more of the old sturdy pioneers of Howard county has passed away, leaving a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his loss. He was born in Madison county, Va., Oct. 19, 1817, moved to Kentucky when a young man and settled near Louisville, where he was married in 1840 to Permelia Margaret Garr. To this union 10 children were born, seven of whom are now living. In 1853 the family moved to Howard county and settled on the farm which has continued to be his home until his death. Jan. 24, 1884, he sustained the loss of his wife, a true companion, a good and noble woman. Though quiet and unostentatious, Henry Smith was no ordinary citizen. He possessed in a large measure those characteristics which make up the ideal man. Beneath his rugged exterior beat a kindly heart, and those who knew him best loved him best. He had been a member of the Christian Church for 60 years, and while never prominent in religious affairs, yet in his daily life exemplified the precepts of the Great Teacher. His home was given to hospitality, and the orphan or homeless could yet find room in the full household. His liberality was methodical, his benevolence well timed, and many were the acts of charity known only to the recipients. By industry and thrift he gained a competence in early life, and for many years has been known as one of Howard county's most substantial and progressive farmers. J. O. GARR.

WASHAM.

L. N. Washam was born Jan. 15, 1836, in Pike County, Mo., died Dec. 22, 1898, at El Dara, Ill., and was interred in the Taylor cemetery Dec. 24. In 1854 he crossed the plains to California and returned to Pike Co., in 1857, where he lived till his death. In 1862 he married Miss Cyntha Williams and four children came to gladden their home, three of these preceded him, leaving only Miss Laura to comfort their mother in this sad hour. He leaves many friends in El Dara, and a host of relatives in Missouri, and on the Pacific Coast, who feel deeply their loss. In 1875 he united with the Christian Church and was one of the largest contributors in building the house. His was the home of the minister and his hands ever open to the poor. J. D. DABNEY.

Literature.

THE DAY'S WORK. By Rudyard Kipling. Doubleday & McClure, New York. $1.50.

Confirmed and habitual readers of Kipling will find in this volume of twelve stories many old friends and many of the pieces which moved them to become Kiplingites. Those who are so unfortunate as never yet to have made any extensive acquaintance with Mr. Kipling's prose will find here the best possible opportunity to remedy that defect in their literary education. The twelve stories which make up the volume have all been published before. As here collected they not only embody the author's most mature and satisfactory prose work, but present characteristic specimens of the various types of stories which he has written. Most prominent among these types is that devoted to the glorification of mechanical achievement, the "song of steam" done into vigorous prose. "The Bridge Builders," "The Ship that Found Herself" and "The Devil and the Deep Sea" are examples of this class—fairly reeking with the technical minutiæ of bridges, engines and ships, but withal pulsating with life and energy. It is this theme which has suggested the title of the volume. Military and official life in India is represented by two stories, "The Tomb of His Ancestors" and "William the Conqueror." The relations between man and domestic animals, as viewed from the standpoint of the animals, find exposition in "A Walking Delegate" (which was a horse) and "The Maltese Cat" (which was a polo pony). The volume is remarkable for the diversity of its contents as it is for the high degree of merit of the individual stories.

MAGAZINES.

"Grant as a Father," by the great soldier's son, Gen. Frederick Dent Grant, will be the leading feature of the Youth's Companion for the week of January 19. The article describes how General Grant showed his affection for his children even at the most trying times, and relates some striking anecdotes of his coolness in battle.

The January number of Pall Mall contains a very interesting account of the fall of Khartoum, by one of General Kitchener's officers. The clockwork movements of the Sirdar's troops made the task both easy and brilliant.

The much-talked-of recent visit of Mr. W. T. Stead to the Czar of Russia is described in full for the first time in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for January, by Mr. Stead himself. The significance of the interview with the young "Emperor of Peace" will be appreciated by all who have followed the discussion of the disarmament proposition. Mr. Stead's article has also a distinctly personal interest, which is heightened by the new portraits of the Czar, the Czarina and their children, which compose the illustrations.

Sidney H. Short, an electrical engineer of national prominence, has an interesting article in the Cosmopolitan on the coming electric railroads, in which he predicts the change from steam to electricity as a motor on all leading trunk-line railways in the near future, and passenger trains traveling at a speed of one hundred and fifty miles per hour. The article is decidedly interesting in many ways and seems to rest on solid ground. There are other equally interesting articles in this number of the Cosmopolitan, especially the one on "Electing a Governor," and the "Jews in Jerusalem." Most of the articles are finely illustrated. The poems are good and the variety of things treated are pleasing to the reader.

Among the numerous exceptionally strong and interesting articles in the North American Review for January is one, the leader, by Andrew Carnegie, on "Americanism Versus Imperialism." Mr. Carnegie, as is known, is strongly opposed to the annexation of the Philippine Islands, as he says, "for many grave reasons." His article treats of but one reason, chiefly, and that is the present physical inability of the United States to successfully enter upon and maintain the imperial policy. He thinks that within twenty years we could have an army and navy sufficient for such a course, but European conditions and dan ers might not wait for our desired development. The attempt to hold these islands, as things now stand, he says, is to "court defeat;" "is not good sense."

While the Century can always be depended on for timely articles written by competent and popular men, a glance at its table of contents always surprises the eye and excites the literary appetite of the reader. This is especially true of the Century for January. There are so many subjects of interest presented at first glance that the reader hesitates which article to read first. There is Hobson's account of the sinking of the Merrimac, Sigsbee's account of the sinking of the Maine, Carlyle in Scotland, "An American in Madrid During the War," "Rome in the 12th Century," "Alexander's First Victory in Asia," and many other equally inviting themes.

Osborn W. Deignan's account of the sinking of the Merrimac in the neck of Santiago Harbor in Frank Leslie's for January, does not fail of interest because of any former account of the affair by Lieut. Hobson and others. It was a daring piece of work, and will long be read with thrilling interest, especially when related by one of the men who passed through that fiery ordeal. Joaquin's "Winter Sunrise in the Klondike," is another of the excellent articles in this number of this popular magazine.

Among the entertaining articles in the January Chautauquan is one on "The Yukon Country," written by the Rt. Rev. P. T. Rowe, Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Alaska. Bishop Rowe has traversed the region very thoroughly, and his intimate knowledge of the gold fields, the routes of travel, the difficulties to be encountered and the prizes to be won, give an added interest to his statements. Of much interest, also, is an account by Jules Henrivaux of the use of glass in architecture, and a description of the Luminous Palace under construction for the Paris Exposition.

St. Nicholas for January will interest almost anybody from the "little tot" to the tottering old man. The variety, vein of humor, attractive illustrations and fascinating stories of this number make it one of the best in its history and one of the happiest home journals of the season. It is full of sunshine and will brighten any heart or home into which its pleasantries may come.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Calendar for 1899 is as pleasing to the eye as anything that has appeared on that line. The ideal American girl with the American flag in the background makes an up-to-date, patriotic calendar, fit for any table.

TRACTS.

Publishers' Notes.

"Plain Talks to Young Men on Vital Issues," Peter Ainslie, editor of the Christian Tribune, Baltimore, Md., is a charming little book, and one which every young man should secure and carefully read.

In clear and forcible language the author denounces in successive short chapters the evils attending Gambling, The Theatre, Dancing, Swearing, Cursing and Lying. The last chapter is entitled "Christian Service," and is alone worth the price of the entire book.—The Youth's Instructor, Chicago, Ill.

This is a beautiful little book, bound in high-colored cloth, and the price is 60 cents, postpaid.

Agents are wanted in each community to sell the publications of the Christian Publishing Co. Write for our catalogue, select from it the books you want to sell and we will give you agents' terms.

You will do good service to your community by placing good literature among its inhabitants and also benefit yourself financially.

The object of the author of "Organic Evolution Considered," as stated in his introduction, is to promote the belief in Theism, and in the existence of a spiritual nature in man, which Theism alone can explain, and to this end he gives, first a general statement of the claims of Evolution as applied to the origin of organic forms, following by a presentation of the various objections which certainly go far to invalidate those claims. While the author, Prof. A. Fairhurst, of Kentucky Univrsity, does not believe that a belief in Evolution necessarily implies disbelief in the Creator of all things, he does believe that Evolution has led many persons into Atheism and his desire is to present an array of facts which shall conclusively prove the agency of a Supreme Creator not only in the creation of the world, and all that is therein, but also that we are to regard its operations as being due to his omnipresence and the perpetual exercise of his power. In his object, he seems to us admirably succeed. The book contains an enormous mass of valuable matter, and the author calls on all branches of his subject to prove the absolute weakness of the claims of Evolution.—The Episcopal Recorder, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Grganic Evolution Considered" is written by Prof. A. Fairhurst who has been a teacher of science for many years in Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky. The book contains 386 pages, bound in handsome cloth, and the price is $1,50, postpaid.

The sympathetic teacher should be in warmest sympathy with the greatest teacher, Jesus. He who would lift up must look up himself, and must win his way to the hearts of those he would lift to a higher level. No teacher could fail of suggestion or inspiration in reading "Jesus as a Teacher," by B. A. Hinsdale, of the University of Michigan, and published by the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis. Prof. Hinsdale finds in Jesus the great Master of ethical method. Teachers should never forget the great superiority of the new education to the old consists mainly in the farther advance that it has made along the path where the Great Teacher pioneered the way.—The Religious Herald, Hartford, Conn.

"Jesus as a Teacher" is a book of 330 pages, 12mo, cloth, and the price is $1.25.

"Mary Ardmore, or a Test of Faith" is a recent production from the pen of J. H. Stark, author of "Hugh Carlin, or Truth's Triumph." "Mary Ardmore" is a religious story, written in beautiful language, into which is woven the fundamental teachings of the New Testament concerning conversion and kindred subjects. The story is so entertaining that the attention of the reader is firmly held from beginning to close.

It is a work of 328 pages, neatly bound in cloth, and the price is $1.00, postpaid.

Expansion.

Let us expand, not forgetting to lay our foundations deep.

We are expanding in order that our friends may feel justified in their efforts to assist us in expanding. The first is necessary in order that the latter be permanent. Examine our columns carefully and you will see that we realize this fact, and are acting accordingly.

The past week has been one of the busiest, if not the busiest in the history of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Verily, our readers are in earnest about this expansion business.

We wish we could go into details, but there is one thing contracted about this journal, and that is the space which we can devote to this subject. We have so much good matter on hand which we think will interest and benefit our readers that we must necessarily be limited in talking about ourselves.

Our new periodical, The Christian Portrait Gallery, the first number of which will be issued about the last of February, is meeting with an enthusiastic reception. Subscriptions are coming in fast, and with them are words of commendation. "Supplying a long-felt want" is no jest in this case. Six states of the Union are already represented in the list: Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky and New York.

To Jno. D. Miller, of Shelbyville, Ill., belongs the honor of being the first subscriber enrolled; H. S. Gilliam, of Hamilton, Mo., being a close second. The Christian Portrait Gallery will be published quarterly at one dollar per year.

Don't forget that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been reduced in price from $1.75 to $1.50. The club rate remains the same, $1.50. We want an agent in every community. Write for terms. Remember also, that we offer the "Life of Alexander Campbell" with a year's subscription to the paper for two dollars, and the Genuine, Self-pronouncing Oxford Teacher's Bible with a year's subscription for two dollars and fifty cents.

JUST A FEW REMARKS.

"The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST becomes better all the time. I am proud of it, and will do all I can to extend its influence."
SUMNER T. MARTN.

Announcements.

The Kansas Christian Ministerial Institute will meet with the Third Christian Church, Topeka, Kansas, early in April. The exact date and full program will be announced later, but the following is an outline of the program: "The Preacher as a Patriot," "The Progress of Thought Among the Disciples," "Modern Socialism and the Teaching of Jesus," "Present Phases and Strength of Infidelity," "The Preaching for the Times and the Men to Do It," "The Atonement in the History of Doctrine." Bro. W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., will occupy one afternoon in conducting an Institute on "Preachers and Preaching," and will also lecture on "The Bible in the Light of Modern Criticism." We would like to see the membership of the Institute largely increased. Send to W. W. Burks, Parsons, Kansas, for a copy of the Constitution.

A Guide to Seed Selection.

BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1899 IS READY FOR DISTRIBUTION.

Burpee's Farm Annual for 1899, advertised in another column, is decidedly the brightest and best catalouge ever published by W. Atlee Burpee & Co., the well-known Philadelphia seedsmen. It is a handsome book of 176 pages, elegantly bound in heavy lithographed covers, the front of which shows a picture of their mommoth new seed warehouse, erected in 1898, surrounded by "red, white and blue" Sweet Peas. On the back is shown birds eye views of their famous Fordhood Farms—the most extensive trials grounds in America.

The directions for culture, while concise, are very complete for every variety of vegetable and flowers. Although such a handsome and expensive book to publish, it is mailed free to every planter upon application.

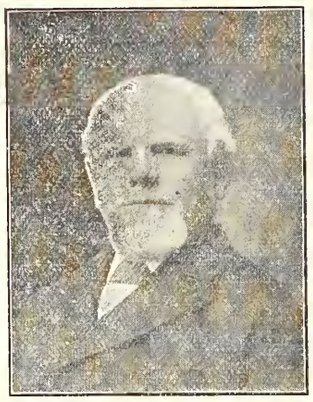
REFORMATIAN OF THE 19TH. CENTURY

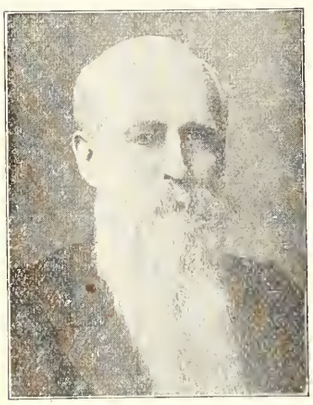
Or NINE DECADES OF HISTORY



A Series of Historical Articles to Run Through the Christian-Evangelist During the Year 1899

I. Introductory Period—1809 to 1819.

By Prof. Charles Louis Loos.



This will include those stirring events which occurred in the formative period of our reformatory movement with which the present generation should be thoroughly familiar.

II. From the Organization of the Christian Missionary Society to the Outbreak of the Civil War—1849 to 1861.

By Dr. B. B. Tyler,
Contributing Editor Christian-Evangelist.

This period of our history, embracing the first decade of operations under the American Christian Missionary Society, with Jerusalem and Jamacia missions, will be full of interest to readers of to-day.

III. The War Period, from the Firing on Sumpter up to the Death of Mr. Campbell—1861 to 1866.

By Dr. W. T. Moore,
Dean of the Missouri Bible College, Columbia.

This is a turbulent period in our country's history, and one that tried most severely the principle we had adopted, of unity in Christ, in spite of differences of opinion. It ends with the death of Mr. Campbell, an event which opponents of the Reformation thought would practically end the movement.

IV. The Period Between the Death of Mr. Campbell and the Organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society—1866 to 1875.

By T. W. Grafton,

Pastor Christian Church, Rock Island, Ill.

This period covers one of those turning-points in our history in which our whole future was involved. The conflict between Christian liberty and strict constructionism, and the conception and trial of the "Louisville Plan" of mission work, enter into this part of our history.

V. The Period from 1875 to the Close of 1899.

1. AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

B. L. Smith, Cor. Sec. A.C.M.S.

2. FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

A. McLean, Cor. Sec. F.C.M.S.

3. CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.

Miss Lois White, Cor Sec. C. W. B. M.

The closing period in our analysis is the period of expansion. Liberty has triumphed in its contest with legalism, and it manifests its power in the formation of new organizations through which to carry on a more aggressive work. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society came to birth, and the old Mother Society through their aid, soon comes to the consciousness of its own mission. The history of these societies will be given by their respective corresponding secretaries.

The whole series will be under the editorial supervision of the editor of the Christian-Evangelist. Series begins in the issue of Jan. 12th. Subscribe at once and secure the entire series.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The past week has witnessed much valuable discussion of the problem of expansion. In the Senate, pending the report of the treaty by the committee, there has been a notable discussion of two resolutions against expansion: one introduced by Senator Vest, denying the power of the Federal Government under the constitution to acquire add govern alien territory, and one by Senator Mason, of Illinois, declaring the unwisdom of expansion as a policy. Mr. Mason's speech in support of his resolution was mostly froth and foam, an eloquent "effort" rather than an argument. Mr. Hoar's speech in support of the Vest resolution, and in reply to a speech by Mr. Platt, deserves more serious consideration, for probably it will be admitted by all to be the ablest argument yet put forth on that side of the question. The six points which follow embrace the substance of Senator Hoar's argument against the policy of territorial expansion as applied to the Philippines: (1) The government of the Filipinos by the United States would not be a government deriving its authority from the consent of the governed. (2) Authority to conquer alien peoples and hold them in subjection is neither explicitly granted to the Federal Government by the constitution, nor is it implied as necessary for the accomplishment of the purposes for which the constitution declares the Union to exist. (3) The proposed government of the Philippines, unlike that of Hawaii, which has been regularly annexed, would be an exercise of sovereignty where the government has no property. The constitution grants no power to exercise sovereignty over territory other than that which the United States owns absolutely; in other words, no control without annexation. (4) The policy of expansion would entail an immediate expense upon this government estimated at $150,000,000 annually. (5) Our acquisition of territory in the Eastern Hemisphere would involve the abrogation of the Monroe doctrine. (6) It involves a departure from our declared plan and purpose in beginning the war.

By all means the most important speech against the resolutions, and in support of the plan of the administration, was that of Senator Foraker. He devoted his attention to the proof of the legal and constitutional right of the government to acquire and govern territory, rather than to showing the desirability of so doing. The following are the most important arguments which he brought forward: (1) A thorough discussion of the Dred Scot decision, to prove that Mr. Vest errs in drawing from it an argument for the unconstitutionality of expansion. (2) The control which it is proposed to exercise over the Philippines is not an enforced and permanent imposition of our government upon an unwilling people. The administration desires to see the Filipinos independent, as soon as they can show themselves capable of maintaining their independence, and it is not intended that our occupation of the islands should be more than temporary. But we have the legal right to hold them permanently if we choose. (3) The constitution, in making the United States a nation, conferred upon it explicitly or implicitly the legal power to do those things which nations do. One of these functions, which is inseparable from the conception of an independent nation, is the acquisition and government of territory. (4) In explicitly granting the power to make war and peace, the constitution implicitly confers the power to assume the responsibilities which flow from the conditions of a treaty of peace, such as that now awaiting ratification. Mr. Foraker did not undertake to answer all the arguments in Mr. Hoar's speech. The question of policy was not brought up. The charge of inconsistency has already been sufficiently refuted by showing that in all the great movements of our history the outcome has been unforeseen, and the most valued result something neither expected nor desired at the beginning. The classic illustration of this is the Revolutionary War, which was begun with a declaration that the colonies had no intention of separating from Great Britain.

The discussions in the Senate so far have been open and the committee in returning the treaty to the Senate recommended that the debate upon it be public. The time-honored custom demands that treaties be considered in secret session. There are some special reasons in this case why it would be desirable to have the treaty considered in open session, and apparently the committee, after a deliberate study of the treaty, sees no special reason why it should be debated in secret. The President has declined for the present to make public the instructions which were given to the peace commissioners before they went to Paris. Senator Hoar has introduced a resolution recognizing the independence of the Philippines and declaring that the United States intends only to aid them in the organization of their government.

The most important post abroad in the gift of this government, the position of Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Great Britain, has been given to Joseph H. Choate, of New York. Mr. Choate is the most eminent member of the New York bar, an upright and cultured gentleman, and in every way a worthy successor of the men who have occupied that place in the past. He has never held office and has not been at all times congenial to the party machine in his state. We had always hoped to see him in the United States Senate; he is the sort of man one thinks of as the ideal senator. A strictly machine deal defeated him for the New York senatorship two years ago. The Russian ambassadorship, made vacant by the resignation of Mr. Hitchcock, who becomes Secretary of the Interior vice Mr. Bliss, has been filled by the transfer of Charlemagne Tower, of Philadelphia, who is now ambassador to Austria-Hungary. To the latter position the President has appointed Addison C. Harris, a graduate of Butler College, Irvington, Ind., and one of the most prominent lawyers in Indiana. It is a pleasure to reflect upon the character of these men who are representing us abroad. They are more than representatives of the American Government; in the eyes of Europe they are representatives of the American people. Our civilization is estimated by the degree in which they meet the requirements as efficient diplomats and cultured gentlemen. We may safely trust our reputation in the hands of such men as Choate, Tower and Harris.

Representatives of the union coal miners to the number of about 700 are sitting in national convention in Pittsburg. The purpose is to prepare their case for presentation to the joint convention of miners and mine owners which meets Jan. 17. The present agreement between the union and the operators expires April 1. The miners remind their employers that the present scale was made when business was not nearly so active as it is now. Prosperity has come to the operators and the miners want their share. That looks reasonable. They ought to have it. Their demands are not yet definitely formulated, for the convention has spent all its time so far in trying to elect officers, but it is understood that these are the points upon which reforms will be demanded: An increase of the mining rates will be insisted upon. An attempt will be made to do away with the "screen," by the use of which miners now receive nothing for coal below a certain size. The eight-hour day must be maintained and enforced more thoroughly than before and when this is fully established steps may be taken to shorten still further the working day, so that the work may be distributed among more men. A protest will be made against the importation of colored miners from the Southern states to work at a rate lower than the scale agreed upon between the union and the operators. The operators have as yet shown no disposition to make concessions on any of these points. Both sides say they are in excellent condition to stand a prolonged strike and, unless an agreement is reached at the joint convention, a strike it will be, begining April 1.

An international exposition will be held in St. Louis in the summer of 1903, in celebration of the centennial of the Louisiana Purchase. This was the decision of the delegates from the states included in the Louisiana territory at their meeting in St. Louis last week. There was unanimous agreement that the occasion ought to be celebrated, that a world's fair is the best method of celebration, and that St. Louis is the place where it ought to be held. This is a generation of world's fairs Perhaps the next generation will devise a new method of celebrating its centennials, but so long as this plan is in favor every succeeding fair must be greater than its predecessors. It is proposed that this one shall be so. A bill has been introduced into Congress for a World's Fair in St. Louis in 1903. Congress will be asked for an appropriation of five million dollars to be supplemented by an equal sum from St. Louis and Missouri, and in all not less than fifteen millions will be expended upon the Louisiana Purchace Exposition.

A bribery scandal of a peculiarly vivid sort has arisen in connection with the Montana senatorial contest. A member of the State Senate rises in the joint assembly and displays thirty crisp one thousand dollar bank notes which he says were given to him by the millionaire, W. A. Clarke, to be used in the purchase of votes for the latter for United States Senator. Mr. Whiteside, who exhibited the bills, says that he accepted Mr. Clarke's advances and became submanager of his campaign, that he might more effectually expose the bribery. A grand jury is investigating the charges. The Clarke senatorial boon collapsed immediately when the sensation was sprung and on the first ballot he received but seven votes. The grand jury has received no results yet, but meanwhile Clarke is gaining strength as indicated by subsequent ballots.

Nelson Dingley, congressman from Maine, died on Saturday, Jan. 14. An attack of grippe, which developed into pneumonia and was complicated with heart failure, proved fatal. Mr. Dingley was at the time of his death chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and floor leader of the Republican majority in the House. His service in Congress began in 1881, after he had been twice governor of Maine, and he was not in that body long before he acquired a national reputation. In the common thought, his name stands for high protective tariff. It is safe to say that there was no man in the country more thoroughly versed in all the ins and outs of the tariff question. The present tariff law which bears his name was enacted at the special session of the Fifty-fifth Congress in March, 1897, at the beginning of President McKinley's administration. Mr. Dingley was not eminent as an orator nor as a lawyer. His service was that of a man who devoted himself diligently to the transaction of the business of the national government. He had a legal training and spent some early years in journalism, but his work was that of a business man attending to the vast business interests which Congress is called upon to guard. He declined the position of Secretary of the Treasury in the McKinley Cabinet, preferring to retain his position at the head of the Ways and Means Committee and as Republican leader in the House.

The reports from Iloilo fall into two classes: first, those through official channels; second, those from Spanish sources. The former represent the situation as presenting certain difficulties, but on the whole, not critical or alarming. The latter picture the natives in a highly enraged condition, determined never to yield to the American authorities and preparing for all sorts of bloody insurrections. As between the two, we put our faith in the former. There are difficulties enough, of course, and it is not to be expected that Aguinaldo's men will submit to American occupation without a considerable amount of persuasion involving some delay. It must be remembered that they have not yet had the advantage of a long series of object-lessons on the beneficent effects of American adminstration as the Cubans have, but with the same amount of teaching there is no reason to suppose that they will prove less receptive to American influence. Admiral Dewey thinks they will be more so. Gen. Miller, who is in charge of the expedition to take Iloilo, has been ordered to avoid a conflict with the Filipinos. The President has decided to send a personal representative to treat with the insurgents. Gen. Greene, who knows fully as much about the Filipinos as any one, says that they can be reasoned with, and that a deliberate and peaceable policy will be sure of success. Gen. Greene himself cannot undertake this mission, as the President wished, but another representative or more probably, a commission, will be sent without delay.

General Miles says that a large quantity of the beef furnished to the soldiers in Porto Rico was unfit for food and caused sickness. Commissary General Eagan says that General Miles is a liar and a base, libelous, malicious liar. When the commanding general gave the Board of Inquiry his criticisms on the army beef, a couple of weeks ago, a sensation was instantly created and a new line of investigation was started. The evidence so far received by the commission has been chiefly from those who made the contracts for the questionable beef and those who filled them, not from those who used it. Consequently the question remains in a very much unsettled condition, awaiting further evidence, and meanwhile the reputation both of the commissary department and of the American packers' houses remains under a cloud. If Gen. Eagan were wise he would know that that suspicion which rests upon his department will not be dispelled by the use of vituperative language. Perhaps he and his colleagues have been wronged. It is even conceivable, though not probable, that they have been the victims of malicious misrepresentation. But the way of escape does not lie through calling the commanding general a dastardly liar and several other kinds of a malefactor besides. Gen. Eagan's statements were made deliberately, read from type-written manuscript in the presence of the Board of Inquiry. We are inclined to agree with his conclusion that either he or Gen. Miles has dishonored his uniform and should be put out of the service.

There have been some important developments in the Dreyfus case during the past week. The case, it will be remembered, is now in the hands of the criminal section of the Court of Cassation, the highest court of appeal. Reports from Paris indicate an almost unanimous opinion that this court is upon the point of declaring the innocence of Dreyfus. As a last desperate resort of the anti-Dreyfusites, an attempt has been made to cast suspicion upon the courts. M. de Beaurepaire, president of the civil section of the court, a fierce anti-Semite and himself not above the suspicion of corruption, has made definite charges against the criminal section. The Minister of Justice, seeing that some of the charges were trivial and the others obviously without foundation, refused to consider them. M. de Beaurepaire's resignation has been accepted. On the following day the Chamber of Deputies met for the beginning of a new session, and it was feared that the anti-Dreyfus sentiment would either cause the administration to waver in its course of sustaining the court and its probable verdict of acquittal or else lead to the overthrow of the Cabinet. The Chamber, however, sustained the administration and the court as against the attacks on the latter, and the course of justicc will proceed unimpeded. The charges brought by M. de Beaurepaire may still be given such an official examination as they may require in order that they may not be used to excite popular suspicion against the court.

It is stated unofficially that the presidency of Yale University, made vacant by the resignation of Timothy Dwight, has been accepted by Hon. William L. Wilson, ex-Congressman from West Virginia, Postmaster-General during the second Cleveland administration and now president of Washington and Lee University.——Chauncey M. Depew has been nominated for United States Senator at the Republican joint caucus of New York Legislature. His party will have a majority in joint session. ——The appropriation for the civil service commission which was stricken out of the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill by a vote of the House in committee of the whole, has been restored in the final passage of the bill. The Civil Service Commission will stand.——The steamship "Oceanic" of the White Star Line, which was launched at Belfast on Saturday of last week, is the greatest ship ever built. Its length, 704 feet, exceeds that of the vast and unwieldy "Great Eastern." Its displacement, 17,000 tons, is less, but its estimated speed, 27 miles an hour, is more than twice as great. The engines represent 45,000 horse power.

The President has selected the following members of the commission to the Philippines: President Schurman, of Cornell University, Prof. Worcester, of the University of Michigan, and Col. Denby, who was former minister to China, under Cleveland and Harrison, for a dozen years. The first and last of these have signified their acceptance of the appointment, and if Prof. Worcester accepts, it is believed the commission will start very early for the Philippines. These men have special qualifications for the work to which they are called. They are, in connection with Admiral Dewey, to be a sort of Cabinet to General Otis, the military governor of the islands. It is believed by the President that the presence of these men as personal representatives from him, meeting in council the leaders among the insurgent forces, will be able to explain to them satisfactorily the purposes of this government and to avoid the necessity of using force in the assertion of our sovereignty in these islands.

AMERICA MISREPRESENTED BY AMERICANS.

In his convocation address at the University of Chicago, as printed in and commended by the Standard of Chicago, Carl Schurz is represented as closing "his memorable appeal by pointing out the moral nobility of extricating ourselves, even now, from the situation by adopting a policy of protection and encouragement of Spain's recent victims, instead of seeking to exploit them for our own advantage."

It is difficult to be patient with this species of political Pharisaism and misrepresentation. The thing is an insult to the great body of American people who see no honorable course open before them but to accept, for the time being, the responsibility of helping the victims of Spain's tyranny to such a form of self-government as they are capable of. That anybody in the United States is seeking to "exploit these islands" for our own selfish gain, regardless of their rights and their welfare, is a charge that one may expect from Spain or from some of the European governments that have been hostile to the United States during the war, but coming from an American it is simply inexcusable. What the President of the United States wishes, as Senator Foraker pointed out a few days since in a speech in the Senate, and what the great body of the American people desire, is to help these people to such a measure of political and religious liberty as they have never before enjoyed. Senator Foraker who, it is generally understood, represents the views of the President, said:

> I do not understand anybody to be proposing to take the Philippine Islands with the idea and view of permanently holding them and denying to the people there the right to have a government of their own, if they are capable of it and want to establish it. I do not understand that anybody wants to do that. I have not heard of anybody who wants to do that. The President of the United States does not, I know, and no senator in this chamber has made such statement.

This shows, what the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has insisted on from the beginning, that these men, who have been opposing "imperialism" and the forcing of a governernment upon the Philippines against their will, and attempting to make them a permanent part of the United States, have been fighting a man of straw, a spectre of heir own imagination. The whole prob , lem of what is best to be done with the Philippine Islands will be open for discussion after the ratification of the Treaty of Peace. The President and Vice-President both express themselves as not having fully determined what will be the best thing to do for the benefit of these people. It will take time to develop that. Opposition, therefore, to the Treaty of Peace on the ground that the United States Government is entering upon a career of conquest seems to us wide of the mark, and is really misrepresenting the American people before the eyes of the world. What the President and people of this country desire is to meet the responsibility of the situation honorably, as becomes a great free people, and with a view to the permanent welfare of the people of these islands. And, no doubt, this is what will be done, and when it is done, orators of the type of Mr. Schurz will probably claim that it is due to their opposition to an "imperial" policy, which never had any existence except in their own excited imaginations.

UTILIZATION OF FORCES.

As soon as the talk of war with Spain became serious, attention was immediately called to our military and naval resources, and to the question of securing the necessary appropriation and the necessary military and naval supplies. In a word, it was recognized at once by every intelligent person that, no matter how superior the United States might be to Spain in her resources of men and money, it was necessary for this government to mobilize and bring into active operation at the points of conflict a sufficient number of trained men and of battleships in order to defeat the enemy. Spain was defeated, not by the seventy million people of the United States and unbounded resources of our nation, but by the actual number of men and amount of material that was utilized in the prosecution of the war.

No one who contemplates the condition and needs of the kingdom of God and his righteousness can fail to be impressed with the fact that the great lack is the proper utilization of the forces that are supposed to be, at least, at our command. What per cent. of the membership of the church militant is actually engaged in the great work of extending the reign of Jesus Christ over the earth? Of course, every Christian will admit that that is what we are here for, and that this is the supreme mission of the church. But in spite of this admission, it must also be admitted that a very small per cent. of each congregation is enlisted actively and aggressively in this great undertaking. Do we need to look any farther for the reason why the heathen world has not long since been evangelized, and why it is that even in Christian lands there are prodigious evils, some of which are sheltered behind legal breastworks, which obstruct the progress of the kingdom of God and prevent the reign of righteousness?

This lack of utilizing our forces may be seen, too, in the number of churches which cannot be reckoned with the aggressive part of the Lord's army, which have to be ministered unto instead of ministering to the world's need. Many of these non-aggressive churches are possessed of sufficient mental, moral and material resources, not only to take care of themselves, but to be enlisted along with sister churches in a united effort to evangelize our own and other lands. But because of the unconsecrated, and hence unutilized strength of these churches, they are encumbrances rather than an element of strength in the enterprise of conquering the world for Christ.

Let any one stop to consider how much wealth there is belonging to church members that is unutilized for the Lord's work, and consider what a mighty impetus could be given to our educational, missionary and benevolent enterprises if this wealth were consecrated to the Lord, and he will appreciate what we mean by the utilization of our forces. Nearly every college we have is crippled in its work in training the men and women needed for leadership in our churchers, not for lack of wealth among us, but because that wealth is not consecrated to the Lord.

Nor is this all. We have in almost every church both men and women of a variety of talents, some adapted to one thing and some to another, which ought to be but which are not utilized for the benefit of the kingdom of God. We have singers who are not singing, at least for the Lord. We have artists whose skill might often be brought into requisition in Sunday-school and church work. We have financiers whose business sense is seldom utilized. We have preachers—men and women capable of telling the simple story of Christ and his love—who are doing nothing of the kind, while all round about them, in adjoining neighborhoods or precincts of the city, there are men and women whom they could reach with the message of love and salvation. Many of them, too, would be glad to go into this service if the way was pointed out for them to do it.

A suggestion of great practical value was made in these columns recently, by the superintendent of Christian Endeavor, as to the practicability of applying the method of University Extension to Christian Endeavor by sending out a number of speakers from various centers to the regions round about to extend the principles of Christian Endeavor and organize new societies. It is easy to see how this could be applied to all departments of religious work. Much valuable evangelistic work can be done in this way by men and women, too, whose talents are rusting for lack of use.

These illustrations could be carried much farther, but this is sufficient to explain what we mean by the utilization of our forces. The fact is, we have gone to war with the powers of darkness, utilizing only a very small per cent. of our talents and our resources. The marvel is that we have accomplished as much as we have with so much dead material and so many unconsecrated resources. In view of this condition of things, the truth of which we think no one will deny, is it not plain what the supreme duty of the hour is? It is not new resources and new recruits which we need to make an invincible army, so much as the consecration of the men and means we have, and the mobilization and discipline of the recruits already enlisted. The carrying out of this reform, too, is the very thing likely to produce the largest permanent increase in the way of recruits.

The supreme task, then, to which God is calling us, at present, is the better use of what he has committed to us, a greater consecration of the material, the intellectual as well as the moral and spiritual resources of our churches. This fact should give tone and character to the preaching from our pulpits, the teaching in our Sunday-schools, the articles in our religious papers, and to our prayers and exhortations at the fireside and in the weekly prayer-meetings. Let us show ourselves faithful in what God has already given us before we expect to receive from him that larger measure of power and of resources.

We do not doubt that God is waiting to put within our hands additional resources and call us to still larger conquests if we will utilize to the best advantage what he has already committed to us. "He that is faithful in a few things shall be ruler over many things." This is the divine law of promotion under God, from which there is no escape, either by preachers, churches or religious movements. If preachers make bad use of a small church he need not expect a larger one. When we show capacity for larger administration the larger sphere will be open to us.

THE PREACHING FOR TO-DAY.

The world needs the gospel now as in the past—no less at present than in the days that are gone. The gospel of the Christ is now "the power of God" to save men singly, and to save communities of men, if only they will receive the message. The multitudinous nostrums of human invention for the ailments of men and society are utterly worthless. They fail to take into consideration the source of the troubles by which men suffer. Men are wrong within. Human nature is astray. The new heart is the great desideratum. The issue of the regenerated heart will be a new character. When the individual men become new creatures in the Christ society will experience a moral transformation suggestive at least of the "new heavens and the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." The gospel alone is able to produce this transformation because it alone is able to produce in the individual a spiritual and moral regeneration. Wherefore, the preaching for to-day is the preaching of the gospel of the Christ—the preaching to which the Son of God referred when in his parting command to the disciples whom he had chosen he bade them herald the good news "to the whole creation."

The question of emphasis in this connection is important. Many of our differences are of this character. The man, as an illustration, who preaches constantly on the second coming of our Lord teaches, let it be granted, what is generally believed by evangelical Christians, but he presents the doctrine out of proportion. The difference between the Advent brother and others who believe in Jesus is, in instances not a few, a question of emphasis—this and nothing more. A true teaching may be so presented as to be, in effect, a perversion of the gospel. Wherefore, the preaching for to-day is the gospel of God fully and harmoniously presented. Omit no part of the divine message. Preach the whole gospel. Put each item of the gospel in its proper place. Give to each its appropriate emphasis. Without emphasis the gospel is a colorless and an unattractive story.

There is such a thing as the alphabet of the gospel. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews speaks of "the first principles of Christ," and of "the first principles of the oracles of God;" and Paul speaks of "milk" and "meat" in a reminiscence of his work as a preacher in Corinth. As a preacher he adapted his teachings to the mental, moral and spiritual capacities of his hearers. Jesus did the same. He said to his disciples: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." There are babes in Christ as well as men and women. "Milk" for babes; "meat," or "solid food for full-grown men, when those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern good and evil." Paul was a man of common sense. He knew better than to give "meat" to babes.

There is great need at the present time for the alphabet. This need will always exist. The race is augmented by a multitude of births every day. While babes continue to be born "milk" will be in demand. There are boys and girls, young men and maidens, in our congregations. First principles should be presented to them. But there are grown-up men and women whose moral and spiritual education has been neglected. These also need to be taught "the first principles of the oracles of God." They are, comparatively, ignorant of the doctrine of the Christ. The preaching for to-day requires the careful instruction of all such persons in "the first principles of Christ."

The New Testament must be the preacher's guide. If the question arises: "What are the first principles of Christ?" for an answer, study the preaching of the holy apostles or missionaries of the Christ, as their work is described by Luke in the book of Acts. They preached to persons who were ignorant of the gospel. They addressed men who were not Christians. In their discourses they sought to persuade men to become disciples of Jesus. They would save men. Their preaching was for this purpose. For our instruction a faithful account of their work as ministers of the Word has been placed in our hands. In turning men from Satan to God they were successful. As the present-day preacher imitates them, success will attend his efforts. Wherefore, the preaching for to-day must be, in large part, a proclamation of those things that pertain to the beginning of the Christian life.

But these topics should be presented, not in an iconoclastic, but in an irenic spirit. Christ sent his disciples into the world to preach, not to debate. To build up, and not, primarily, to pull down, should be the aim of the present-day preacher. Some things ought to be destroyed. Preach the gospel fully, clearly, harmoniously, and it will put to death the things that ought not to live. Exalt the Christ, and he will put down the things that ought to be abased. Believe in the Christ. Have faith in the power of his gospel. Jesus is "the light of the world." Hold him up and he will expel the darkness.

The people are, apparently, ready as at no previous time to have the gospel so preached as to fit closely to their daily lives. There is a demand for practical preaching. Much of what is called practical preaching is slush. Sometimes there is no gospel of salvation in it. All such preaching is to be avoided. The gospel of the Christ can be so presented, and it ought to be so presented, as to apply to life—life in the soul, life in the home, life in business, life in science, art, literature, life in politics, life under every condition. The gospel is intended to touch and influence men for good at every point. The preaching for to-day will present the gospel in such a manner as to do this. Every man, whatever his business, vocation or station in life, will feel: "That preacher knows me, and his discourse was to me." "Thou art the man," said Nathan to David. Omitting this form of words, if you will, the preaching for to-day ought to reach this end.

God has committed to men no greater work, no higher honor than the preaching of the Gospel of Christ. The man who, under the impulse of the divine Spirit, gives himself to this holy work ought to be an exemplification of the Gospel he proclaims. His life ought to "adorn the doctrine of God our Savior." Men should better understand the message he delivers by considering the life and character of the messenger. He should be a pattern in all things to believers, and should be able to say with Paul: "Follow me as I follow Christ."

Hour of Prayer.

HEAVEN.

(Jno. 14:1-6; Rev. 22:1-5.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic Jan. 25th, 1899.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: To be like Christ is the way to heaven; to be with Him is heaven. Its glories are inconceivable by finite minds.

The one dream that visits most persons, either sleeping or waking, is the dream of heaven, the home of the soul. It floats before us like a beautiful picture in visions of the night, and often when we are alone, meditating upon the past and trying to scan the future, there arise before our imagination the outlines of the city fairer than earth has ever seen. It cannot but be helpful, in the stress of life's storms and trials, to comfort and strengthen our hearts with those features of that future abode which are given to us in the inspired Word. When "Christian" in Pilgrim's Progress caught a vision of the glorious city from the summit of the Delectable Mountains, he received a reinforcement that went with him in all the subsequent conflicts through which he was called to pass.

In the Scriptures cited above we have, first, a few comforting words from the Master, and then a glowing picture which was shown to the seer of Patmos during his exile on that lonely island. Let us consider, first, the words of the Master.

Notice that they are words to comfort troubled hearts: "Let not your heart be troubled." But this comfort must come through faith in Jesus: "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." If we believe in Jesus Christ he has something to tell us in reference to the future: "In my Father's house are many mansions" (v. 2). Do not think that this world is the only room in God's house. This is only one of the abiding-places. In leaving you I am not going out into non-existence; I am simply entering another room or mansion in my Father's house. It will be so with you; when you leave this abiding-place it will be to go to another.

But, dear Master, how are we to know that this glorious promise will be a reality? "If it were not so I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you" (v. 2). Only one thing more, Master: will it be our privilege to be in the same place with you in that future life? "And if I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and will receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also" (v. 3). Enough, dear Lord, enough. If only we may be with thee and share in thy glory and dwell in Thy presence forever, that will be heaven enough for us. How may we get there? "How can we know the way?" "I am the way and the truth and the life; no one cometh unto the Father but by me" (v. 6).

What, then, do we learn concerning heaven in these words of the Master?

1. The absolute certainty of a future life based on the veracity of Jesus Christ.

2. That Jesus himself has gone to prepare a place for His disciples and that it will, therefore, be perfectly adapted to all their needs, which He understands so well, and that He will be there with His disciples.

3. The way to heaven and to the Father is to follow Christ, believing on Him and walking in His footsteps, attaining like-mindedness with Him and having His Spirit

The rest is a symbolic representation of the glory and beauty of that place as it came to John in a vision of Patmos. In this vision it is represented as a beautiful city lighted up with the glory of the Lord; its gates of pearl wide open continually, and through it was running "a river of water of life, bright as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb" (Rev. 22:1). Here, then, is the realization of the Master's promise "that ye might have life and have it abundantly" (Jno. 10:10). Here, now, is a "river of water of life," of which we may drink to our fullest satisfaction.

Not only so, but on either side of this river of life, from whose crystal stream every thirst of the soul may be quenched, grows the tree of life, bearing twelve manner of fruit and yielding its fruit every month, and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations. No flaming cherubim now guard this tree of life, but every hungry-hearted saint may eat, each of that particular variety of fruit that suits his taste, for there is to be no monotony in heavy.

"And there shall be no curse any more" (v. 3). The curse that rested upon the earth on account of sin is removed. "And the throne of God and the Lamb shall be therein, and they shall see His face and His name shall be on their foreheads" (v. 4). Can the soul desire more? Compannioship with God, the vision of God, and His name, that is His character and His glory, written upon the foreheads of the redeemed and shining in their countenances! No wonder it is said: "And there shall be night no more, and they need no light of lamp, neither light of sun; for the Lord God shall give them light and they shall reign forever and ever" (v. 5).

And this is heaven! Surely it is worth all the sacrifices and labors and conflicts which may be involved in gaining it.

The supreme emphasis in this lesson on heaven should be laid upon the way of getting there, which, as we have seen, is Christliness of character. Our creeds may be correct, our opinions may be orthodox, our baptism may be regular, our position in the church may be respectable, our standing in society may be unimpeachable; but if we have not the Spirit of Christ we are none of his, and there is no heaven for us. Heaven, it should be clearly understood, must be in us before we can ever be in heaven. While Christ has gone to prepare a place for us, he is seeking at the same time, by his Spirit to prepare us for the place, and it is this preparation in which we should be especially interested.

PRAYER.

We thank Thee, O God, that Thou hast made us for Thyself, and that we cannot be happy without Thee. We thank Thee that Thou didst send Thy Son into this world to bring us back to Thee. Our hearts overflow with gratitude for the revelation concerning the future life which Thou hast given us in Him. We are not orphans. Thou art our Father. We are not homeless. Heaven is our home. No mortal eye hath seen, ear heard or heart conceived the glory Thou hast prepared for those who love Thee and serve Thee. But the glimpses of it Thou hast given in Thy Word fill our hearts with unutterable longings. Help us to be like Christ here that we may be with Him and share His glory there. For His name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

There is many a literary waif floating around in public prints without known parentage, the histories of which, no doubt, would be exceedingly interesting if we knew them. In looking over an old diary the other day we ran across a memorandum bearing date of Dec. 27th, 1887, to the effect that on that day the editor had been confined to his room with a severe cold, but during the day he had prepared a statement of principles to stand at the head of the editorial page of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. This statement, which appeared first in the initial number of the volume of 1888, and with which our readers are familiar, closed with some verses which came to us at the time as a suitable summary of these principles. What we stated in prose we summed up in the now familiar lines:

"For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see."

In the course of a year or two this statement, either in whole or abbreviated, appeared on many preachers' visiting cards, on their letterheads, and in tracts. The poetry especially was widely quoted, rarely, however, with any credit, as no name was ever attached to it in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Sometime ago a good brother wrote asking why we did not place Lowell's name to the lines in question. We replied that one reason was that we did not know Lowell to be the author, and another was that so far as we knew the lines were original, unless it was a case of unconscious plagiarism, the possibility of which we freely admitted. The brother replied that he had it in his scrapbook with Lowell's name written under it, and that he was sure he did not copy it from the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He secured the aid of a Unitarian minister to assist him in searching Lowell's poetry, with the conclusion that it was not Lowell's poetry, however Lowellian it might be in sentiment. After searching through Lowell and the other poets he wrote: "I guess that poetry must be run in at your door."

Col. John A. Lee, of this city, now a member of the Central Christian Church, told us the other evening at a social gathering how these verses of poetry had contributed to making him a member of the Christian Church. Being something of a politician, he was canvassing the state of Missouri in one of the campaigns, and, in his prepared speech he quoted these verses, which he said he always used with good effect on his audience. He had run across the verses from reading his wife's religious paper. On various occasions when he had completed his speech persons would come to him from the audience, extend their hands and say: "How do you do, Bro. Lee?" When he informed them that he was not a brother, they would reply with astonishment, "Why, you quoted from the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and we thought you were a member of the Christian Church?" This tendency on the part of the Disciples to spot him as a member and offer him fraternal greetings indicated a feeling of fraternity which proved a strong attraction. The lines were not written to serve as the slogan of a political party, but if any political party will pledge itself to live up to them we will pledge ourself to vote with it until the millennium dawns! We do not care, indeed, how widely it is used, the wider the better, nor do we ask for any credit to be given. They have had a circulation and a publicity of which we little dreamed when we were penning them.

Some of the best hymns in our collections are marked "unknown." The hands that penned them have long since turned to dust, but they go on forever in their mission of good. Their authors were careless as to the credit of authorship. Their sentiment was:

"Though they may forget the singer,
They will not forget the song."

Some of the best specimens of prose literature are anonymous. It is easy to understand how these articles come to be anonymous. A case will illustrate: Twenty years ago we wrote a paragraph little more than a hand's breadth in length, entitled "Be a Good Man, Papa!" based on a domestic incident. For many years there came to us, quoted in all kinds of papers with all kinds of credit, and often without credit, this paragraph, and we presume it is still going up and down the world somewhere as one of the literary waifs to which we have referred. There was very little in it, just that "touch of nature that makes all men kin." The things that come out of the human heart are those which are endowed with a sort of immortality. Men care little for the reasoned and logical conclusions of the intelleet, but the deliverance of the heart appeal to other hearts, and often live on when their authors are gone and forgotten.

Is there not comfort in the thought that many of the words we speak in kindness—words of affection and of loving appreciation—will live on after us as a perpetual influence for good long after our active careers on earth are finished? "Kind words can never die." Good deeds put into operation forces that never cease. It is a glorious thing to live when the heart is attuned in harmony with God, and all the words and acts which flow out of the heart are forces that make for truth and righteousness. It matters little whether our names be attached to the words or to the deeds that live. There is an eye that never slumbers or sleeps, and He will place to our credit every true and kind word, every noble and unselfish deed. But alas! how we all may well tremble when we remember that our harsh and perhaps unjust criticisms, our doubtful or evil deeds, even though repented of and forgiven, may also live after us, exerting a perpetual evil influence!

If Thomas Paine could have blotted out the "Age of Reason," no doubt he would have done it long ago in the new light that must have come to him in his experiences beyond the veil. But it still exists, and is doing its evil work in the world long after he has left it. "Being dead, he yet speaks," is as true of Paine as it is of Abel. Every man who speaks or writes a word or line that will live after him will speak when he is dead. This thought should make us exceedingly careful in our speech, and should cause a man to pray over every line he writes for the public prints.

Questions and Answers.

1. Are we to understand from Romans 8:28 ("For we know that all things work together for the good of them that love God and are the called according to his purpose") that all the troubles, sorrows, accidents and wrongs which the true Christian endures in this life are for his good?

2. Explain how "the Lord chasteneth and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth?" (Heb. 12:4-6).

1. Such seems to be the meaning of the bold statement of the apostle. The chief thing, the only valuable thing in man, the only thing he can take with him when he goes hence, is character. Whatever tends to develop that into Christ's likeness is for man's good. There is a ministry of sorrow and affliction as well as of prosperity and success, and the one is as essential as the other. What we call our calamities and losses are often merely the exchange of the less for the greater good. If the removal of our affections from earthly things to things heavenly is effected by earthly losses and afflictions, it is plain that we have been gainers rather than losers by the exchange.

2. It would be presumption for us to attempt to explain all of God's dealings with his people. We will have to wait for the explanation of many things until we can look upon them in the light of eternal day. This much, however, we can understand: no child of God is perfect, but God is seeking the perfection of every one of his children. When the child goes wrong the earthly father chastises it for its good, aiming thereby to train it in the right way. God dealeth with us as with children. If we did not feel the chastening hand of God when we did wrong, we should be emboldened in wrong-doing and should grow worse and finally forfeit the benefits of sonship. We can best understand God's dealings with us in the light of this family relationship, only we must remember God is infinite in love and in wisdom, and all his chastening is for our good. In the day of our full redemption, as we look back over our lives, we shall have reason, no doubt, to thank God for every chastisement and every scourging we have received from his loving hand, since we will then see that it was all for our good. It is under the operation of a universal divine law that the man that doeth evil suffers the consequences thereof, and this is one of the strong incentives to right-doing.

I have a daughter who desires to be immersed. Who is commissioned by Christ and his apostles to do this work where there is no preacher except those of the M. E. persuasion? H. S.

Junction, Idaho.

As a king and priest unto God, you have the right in the absence of a minister who believes in immersion to baptize your daughter, and to do it by the authority of Christ. There would be no objection to the Methodist preacher performing the act if he believed that in so doing he was carrying out the divine will. We would not care to have a man violate his convictions of duty, or even do what he regarded as an idle and unnecessary thing. The doctrine of the common priesthood of all Christians, which the advocates of this Reformation have ever held, makes it entirely legitimate under the circumstances for you to perform this duty toward your child.

What per cent. of the Israelites became obedient to the faith in Christ and his apostles? B. E. B.

Chandlerville, Ill.

We do not know, nor do we suppose that it is known to any one. The apostles were very careless in reference to statistics. In the report of their meetings they did not tell exactly how many were from the Jews and how many from the Gentiles. We know that "a great company of priests became obedient to the faith," and that the Jews constituted an important element even in many of the Gentile churches. It is safe to say that a much larger per cent. became obedient to Christ during the ministry of the apostles than are obeying at the present time. We do not seem to have the access to the Jews that the apostles had, being themselves Jews.

1. Is a local congregation of the Church of Christ a properly and scripturally organized body without the elders and deacons having been ordained in the scriptural way—"by fasting and prayer, and the laying on of hands?"

2. Whose privilege, right and duty is it to ordain elders and deacons by laying on hands?

3. Are elders and deacons both ordained alike, and by the same person or persons?

4. Is it scripturally necessary for a minister in the Church of Christ (Christian Church) to be ordained to the ministry? Where is the Scripture so teaching? I know a number of our preachers who do not believe in ministerial ordination.

A Disciple.

1. We should say the officers of such a congregation had not been set apart in the same way as were the officers of the primitive churches, so far as we know. How far this deviation from apostolic practice may vitiate the scriptural character of the organization might be an open question. We should not like to say that officers not so set apart were not scriptural officers, but we believe adherence to the apostolic method would add to the efficiency of our church organizations and to their scriptural order.

2. In the case of new congregations being organized, the work of ordination is usually attended to by the evangelist; otherwise, a neighboring minister or ministers, or elders of a neighboring church, might be called in to attend to the matter.

3. There is no distinction, so far as we know, in the form of ordination, though the instructions to each class in reference to their official duties would, of course, be different.

4. We should say it was scripturally proper for preachers to be ordained to the ministry. Timothy, it seems clear, was thus set apart to the work of the ministry, and the same principle that applies to the ordination of elders and deacons, applies to preachers, because they are all set apart for the service of God, and the elders of that day were in the main, no doubt, what we call preachers now. It is a matter of good order, and is an impressive way for the church to express its official approval of any one of its members as a minister of the Word. In the case of a minister it is entirely proper and in good order to invite a number of churches to participate in the ordination, inasmuch as his ministry ordinarily transcends the limits of a single congregation.

"YE ARE THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD."

A. A. HIBNER.

In the physical world we observe that whenever we see light that there is something consumed to produce it. The intensity of light depends on the light-giving power of the source. It also varies inversely as the square from its distance. The light of the tallow candle is less intense than that of the coal oil lamp, while the lamplight is less bright than gaslight, and gaslight is less than electric light, while electric light is less than the sunlight.

In the examination of these various lights we discover that the element which are consumed in the production of light vary in composition, energy and quantity.

By means of photometry we ascertain the light-giving power of different sources of light; while with the spectroscope we ascertain the various elements which produce the spectrum of light, and whether it is true or borrowed light, such as that of the moon and planets, and sunlight as the true light.

Again, light is the source of life-giving power to the animal and vegetable kingdom. Its utility is shown in the fact that it was the consequence of the first command given by God: "Let there be light, and there was light," etc.

In the vegetable kingdom light is the essential element as a fructifying agency and maturation of the parts upon which the seed depends; without the proper amount of light there will be no ripened fruit nor even a fully developed plant. The same is true in the animal kingdom.

"Ye are the light of the world." In this metaphorical expression we notice that this bears a close analogy to the physical light. It behooves us thus to investigate the elements of our nature which produce the light of our lives. As we were able to ascertain the light-giving power and the various elements which produce light by means of photometry and the spectroscope, so we can ascertain these elements in the life of man by examining him under the penetrating influence of the reflecting power of the inspired Word. Christ said: "I am the light of the world." Hence we must use such elements as will radiate this light. What are some of these elements? The psalmist says: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight." Paul writing to the Philippians told them to think about the things which are honest, true, just, pure, lovely and of good report. Peter tells us to be diligent and to add to our faith, virture; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. Paul writing to the Corinthians passes this word charity through the prism of his inspired intellect and produces one of the greatest spectra the world has ever seen—the spectrum of love. As some one has said, "Riches may make us comfortable, wisdom may bring us honor, but to love and be loved is the highest happiness of human existence.

The intensity of the light of a Christian depends upon the quantity and quality of the material which may be derived from the study of the Bible and of nature. Especially should he who proclaims the Word of God be filled with the true light. He should not only be conversant with the Bible, but with the sciences and arts as well, and above all, he should be a consecrated, not a desecrated man. He should be a man who does not count or eulogize his own sermons, but a humble servant of the lowly Nazarene. If we are the light of the world we must have the characteristics of him who is the light of the world.

WHY THIS DEARTH OF CONVERSIONS?

C. PERCY LEACH.

Our motto for the Jubilee Year is a good one and I am glad it has been written upon our banners—100,000 souls for Christ in '99. We are a great brotherhood of a million communicants, and we have decided to strain every nerve to make 100,000 converts during the year; in other words each member is asked to save a tenth of a soul. Isaiah was not speaking of this generation when he said: "One thousand shall flee at the rebuke of one." I long for the time when one Christian shall garner ten souls instead of ten Christians winning one soul. Our zeal is only smoldering upon our hearths; we are lazy, listless, lethargic. We are too much like the policeman who had the ability to lean against a lamppost and take a nap, and at the same time keep his club moving as if to let people know he was wide awake. There are somnambulistic Christians who go through the motions of church-going and worship while they are asleep—it is only the movement of the policeman's club. There are Christians whose rosary is a necklace of pearls, whose prayerbook is the latest novel, and whose verbose prayers do not ascend higher than the roof of their mouths.

Who is not prepared to give an answer to the above caption? I snppose that we, as a brotherhood, have been fairly successful in our gleaning. But are we not far in the wake of our possibilities. There are reasons for this humiliating condition; only a few of the more prominent ones will be mentioned in this article.

The pews must bear their share of the blame. The church is too much concerned with the externals. They are making broad their phylacteries. They care more for the exact shade of the frescoing than they do for the color of their spiritual robes. They have more ears for the fine soprano than they have for the cries of the distressed. They would rather have a man in the pulpit who would please all the people than one who would convert a few of the people. The pews are careless; when they are not lukewarm they are frigid. The pastor of a fashionable church once preached a very delightful sermon. The theme: "Shall we know each other in heaven?" His aristocratic auditors were entranced. A laboring man in passing out asked the pastor: "If it were really true that they should know each other in heaven?" "Certainly, certainly; my good man, it is true." "How comforting, no one seems to know me here," was the poor man's only reply. Do you not recall what James said about the rich man with a gold ring and fine raiment? It would be no exaggeration to say that there are tens of thousands of pew holders in our ranks who never asked a sinner to change his ways. The easiest way to convert 100,000 sinners is to convert 100,000 saints.

But the pulpit is to blame also for this dearth. The pulpit is concerned too much with quantity. There are evangelists who work solely for numbers, or so it seems. It looks well in print, and assures them of another job. It does not matter whether the converts stay in the church until the evangelist boards the train ar not. It will be an easy matter to reach the number of accessions we so much desire if we preach an easy gospel. But haven't we enough of the easy variety of Christians in our ranks now? Let us not say roses bloom on the narrow way where there are none, let us be honest with the people. A worthy bishop describes some of the preaching in this way: "Some of the ministers of God dare to stand in their pulpits and preach as follows: 'You must repent, as it were, and be converted, in a measure, or you will be damned to a certain extent.'" A man described his pastor as "a man with a well-balanced mind; with one-half he thought he would and with the other he thought he wouldn't." There are too many men like these in our pulpits to-day. Brethren, let us call a spade a spade. It takes a brave man to face the Santiagos of sin, or to beard the wealthy hypocrites in their dens. There are none in the brotherhood who desire more earnestly to see the ranks of Zion swell and the strongholds of sin crumble beneath the battering-ram of righteousness than the writer. But I believe that a John's voice is needed to call our brotherhood to repentance and to take many of us to task for our loose and time-serving methods. I have seen towns and churches killed by a large protracted meeting. The whole truth was not told and when the enthusiasm passed and the trials of the Christian life came upon the converts they fell away and their state was worse than the first. The converts are not to be blamed, but the evangelist has sinned a great sin. Some of our evangelists will be punished in that day for making converts. The grain is not gathered when it is in the shock. Neither are sinners saved when they join the church. They must be nourished, watched, helped, instructed, prayed for. What a work God has placed in our hands! We every one need that divine enthusiasm for souls which knows no abating nor recognizes no defeat. Let us not pack our grips and start for the next town thinking the work is done or half done when 200 names have been added to the church roll, for the clerk'sbook is not the Lamb's Book of Life. Let the inspiration of our motto: 100,000 souls for Christ, for time and for eternity during '99, have full course in our hearts and minds. Behold, God stands on the threshold of the new century beckoning on his tardy church. Awake, ye sons of Zion, to the herculean task, one and all, pulpit and pew. Behold, the fields are ripe unto the harvest; thrust in your rusted blade. But take care how you reap!

THE REAL DIFFICULTY.

J. M. LOWE.

What is the greatest obstacle in the way of Christian union? Much has been accomplished when this question is fully and fairly answered.

By way of preparation, it would not be amiss to answer the question, What is unity? What principle is that by which things are one, although they differ? The other day a million snowflakes fell and no two were exactly alike, yet one was as truly a flake as another. In a few months, spring will cast her green mantle over the forests, yet no two leaves are exactly alike. The flakes are all flakes because the same principle of formation operated in each. They are different because they are environed differently. Circumstances modify. The leaves are alike because the same life principle is active in each. They are different for the same reason that the snowflakes are different. Unity, then, is not uniformity. I would say that unity is identity of essence with a variety of manifestations. For example, all people are easily classified as people, yet they are widely different. The life force is the same in essence in each. Different parentage and different surroundings make different people. All minds are the same in essence. They differ in their manifestations. "One star differs from another star in glory." All stars are glorious, but they are different.

That which is unity in one realm is unity in another. Christian unity is identity of essence. What is the essence of Christianity? Is it not love? Has not love been the moving, vitalizing force from the genesis of redemption until now? Beyond question it has. Christ is love personified. The spirit of Christ, then, is the principle of unity in the Christian system. What crystallization is to the snowflakes, the spirit of Christ is to Christianity. Both are principles of unity. Christian unity has been impaired or destroyed because men differed from each other, not in their thinking, but in their loving. They lost the spirit of Christ. We do not need to be alike in order to be leaves. The spirit of Christ always makes Christians. In all centuries and among all peoples "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." We have had different phases of Christianity in different ages. The eyes of love have seen the need of each age, and love "found a way" to supply the need. To one age intense missionary zeal by the same spirit, to another light on the problems of creation and redemption by the same spirit, to another the study and solution of social problems by the same spirit.

The Christian world cannot be held together by creeds, councils or arguments. These are externals—bands which growing conceptions must inevitably burst asunder. Love—leavened character—is the magnet which alone can hold the Christian world together.

The real obstacle in the way of union is the selfishness, narrowness and bigotry of the unregenerated, or half-regenerated human heart—the lack of the Christ-spirit. Right here is the real difficulty—the efficient cause of all the sectarianism and partisan hatred that mar the fellowship of the age and paint a frown upon the fair face of the future. By sectarianism I do not mean the various organized sects of Christendom, but that shortsightedness which cannot see beyond the limits of a certain religiousbody, whatever that body may be—that spirit which says "we are the salt of the earth." This command lies at the threshold of a union movement. "Little children, love one another."

It is true, there are discordant notes being sounded throughout Christendom which grate upon the cultivated ear. Let love strike her harp the harder, and while discord abounds, harmony will much more abound. It has been said that the spirit of Christ is the principle of unity. It should be added that this alone is the principle. Human ideas and human traditions, in so far as they have been injected into this spirit, are foreign matter, and must and will be thrown off by the free and healthy action of the same spirit. "Let love be without hypocrisy." May we beware lest we substitute "our plea" for some of these other "human opinions" thus sectarianizing the only unsectarian position that men can occupy to-day.

It has been said that the need is, not to create unity, but to recognize the unity that already exists. The real difficulty is the lack of the large, lofty spirit of Jesus of Nazareth—a spirit world-wide in its sympathies and agelong in its forbearance. The greater command, "Love your enemies," surely includes a lesser command—Love your religious neighbors.

THE SCRIPTURAL IDEA OF WOMAN.

M. L. STREATOR, A. M.

The great apostle Paul, inspired by the Spirit of God and illuminated with the light of divine truth, announced and established as a grand and fundamental principle in the kingdom of the Messiah that all men, however much they may differ in gifts and capacities, in opportunities and culture, are equal before God in the rights and the privileges of the heavenly citizenship such as pardon and adoption and fellowship with God, without reference to the national, social and natural distinctions which may divide them in this world. Christ, who is our peace, has broken down the middle wall of partition between Greek and Jew, barbarian and Scythian,bondman and freeman, male and female. This was revolutionary doctrine for the nations controlled by arbitrary power, where "the kings of the Gentiles have lordship over them;" but it is in reality the doctrine of Christ, and is in harmony with universal truth and goodness. The apostle to the Gentiles declares expressly, "There can be neither Jew nor Greek, there can be neither bond nor free, there can be no male and female: for ye are all one man in Christ Jesus" (Gal. 3: 28). While a person as to race may be a Jew or a Greek, as to social condition a slave or a freeman, and as to nature a man or a woman, yet these distinctions as to race and condition and nature are absorbed and ignored and lost in the higher and holier relation of kingship in Christ with God. A man may be none the less a Jew or a Greek because he is a Christian, but in Christ these distinctions do not count with reference to salvation and its blessings. A man may be a slave, yet the freedom of Christ lifts him out of the degradation of his bondage. A person may be a woman, yet fellowship with Christ lifts her up into sympathy and unity with her adorable Lord, and onto a plane of equality with all who are his by a blood-bought redemption. Why will preachers and teachers proclaim and defend the equality in Christ of men of high degree and men of low degree, and yet deny the equality in Christ of men and women? The same Lord who saves persons of one sex saves persons of the other sex through the same great atonement, and on precisely the same conditions. If he exalts the one from the depths of sin and condemnation to a high estate in grace and justification, he exalts the other to an equally high estate. If he overcomes the effects of the fall for man, he overcomes the effects of the fall for woman. It is a sacred and solemn truth which has been sadly overlooked that woman was not subject to man at their creation, but in their sin and their fall. They sinned together. They fell together. But woman, leading in the sin, fell the lower, and was subjected in the fall to the lordship of her husband. In so far as the work of Christ overcumes the effects of the fall, in so far does he rescue woman from her subjugation to man in consequence of the fall, and so far does he restore her to her original equality with man, established in the beginning as the divine ideal is the relation between man and woman. In Christ Jesus there can be no male and female. Why not accept this great principle of the gospel of Christ in all the heights and depths and lengths and breadths of its meaning? God made woman the equal of man. God rescues her from sin, and recreates her in Christ Jesus as the equal of redeemed man. Womanhood is precious in the sight of Christ. The heart of woman if cherished as the fittest temple for the dovelike Spirit of truth and love. Womanhood debars no one from the free and full enjoyment of all the blessings and privileges and promises of the gospel of Christ.

"O woman, great is thy faith!" Bocause of the greatness of thy faith, great is thy opportunity of rescuing a lost and perishing race, and restoring the wanderers through mercy to the favor and blessing of God.

PREACHERS AND IMPRESSIONS.

ISAAC S. BARNUM.

The editor of this paper, suspecting that there might be some ancient things stored away in my memory, has kindly asked me to write up some of them for the public. That is no easy task, for he refers to reminiscences connected with a great religious Restoration.

In complying with his request I shall try to write fairly and impartially of men and things I have seen and impressions received from childhood to manhood, as I have looked along

"Our far-flung battle line."

If I shall wander into errors, I will thank some kindly hand to lead me back. If my own personality shall appear to be too prominent, the excuse is, I must write these things as they appeared to me, not knowing how they appeared to the other fellow.

Thousands of acts are not worth recording. To make a small act worthy of record, it must be capable of carrying an influence for good for years; it must glow with tenderness and beauty or thrill with something of the heroic.

Two plain, uncultured widows stand by the boundary line of Moab and Judea; the older one faces the east and with her forefinger points to the hills and valleys of Moab; the younger one faces the west, and her vision falls on the whitened fields of Boaz and the sun-kissed hills and valleys of Judea, as with tremulous voice she says: "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee, for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge. Thy people shall be my people, and thy God shall be my God. Where thou diest I will die and there will I be buried. The Lord do so to me and more also if aught but death part thee and me."

Was that incident worth recording? If so, why?

The answer is in the fact that millions or Jewish and Christian imaginations have lifted the scene into a sacred picture of woman's devotion to her new God and her new friends, and God honored the young woman by raising her descendants to royal blood. The scene was a simple one, but it was full of the tender and heroic, and it lives.

Millions of flowers have been plowed under and we know not when nor where, but finally Plowman Burns, who could see and express the heart of things, turned over a flower, and its mute appeal touched his poet heart and in return for its life he tenderly gave the daisy to immortality.

It was a little incident, but it lives. After brilliantly finishing an act in "Grand Opera," the beloved Emma Abbott was called before the curtain, and after a moment of silence, as her sweet, melodious voice, carrying the words of "Swanee River," rose over the entranced wealth, culture, power, beauty and splendor of a great city, hundreds of eyes were filled with tears.

Those eyes had never seen the warm Southland, the Swanee River, the old plantation, nor where the "old folks" stay, but singer and song were deftly turning the pages of far-away memories, and the room was silently filled with a thousand other rivers, homesteads and dear old father and mother faces as they were standing on the old stoop, and with a far-away look watching loved forms that were going out from the home, until women and strong men bowed and wept before those magic pictures of their childhood days.

What is there in a reminiscence that can so profoundly and mightily move all that is highest, deepest and most sacred in our natures? Pause a moment, reader, while I reverently write, God only knows. When a child I stood in a cemetery with a company of mourners, by the side of an open grave into which a coffin had just been lowered.

The men removed their hats and bowed their heads as a man read from a book something about the way, the resurection, the life and living again.

I could not understand it all, but as my parents led me out through the gates of that silent home of the dead, I thought from the reading that the man in the coffin would come to life again.

Years have sped away, and the impression is with me yet; I still believe that he will feel the ecstasy of movement as this mortal shall be putting on immortality.

They called the reader pastor, minister, man of God. Whether he is in the body or out, I know not, but in that momentary appearance he became my first pastor, and prepared my heart to ever extend a warm reception to those noble preachers who are giving their lives to God and humanity.

Pastors, children's hearts are very susceptible to impressions in regard to the mysterious and eternal things, and when those impressions are once made, no "steel-clad paw" can ever tear them out.

Before God, be careful what impressions you make on the heart of a child who may yet with great power strike the heart of the world.

In the early '50s Coberly Martin came from Indiana over to my home at Paw Paw, Michigan, to hold a meeting for "our folks." As I recall him he was a strongly built, rugged man, stern and commanding. His reputation had preceded him that he used to get up in the morning and walk around barefooted in the snow before breakfast.

When he came to our house to stay I was out as early as Fourth of July to see the preacher walk in the snow, and to my great delight he did. A man's barefoot track in the snow has a great fascination for a child. I had not heard of Valley Forge then.

The thaw that soon followed and took away the tracks almost broke my heart. "Friday's" tracks were nowhere.

He was one of those strong, fearless, plain, outspoken, honest characters, which gave tone and direction to the new settlements of the great West. Sir Oracle of his community he was bound to be.

Nothing of his preaching is recalled, but "our folks" said "he give it to 'em."

In with the venerable preacher there floated a beautiful tradition: that he and his wife had originally been Baptists and went from them to the Disciples, whose teachings they believed to be more in accordance with the Word of God. Earnest, devout and conscientious, they had not gone far before a lion stood in the way.

As they understood it, they had been baptized by a regularly ordained Baptist minister because their sins had been forgiven, while under the new teachings they understood that they should have been baptized for or in order to the remission of their sins.

Then the question followed: Although they were honest and sincere, had their baptism secured to them that for which they now believed it to have been designed —the forgiveness of their sins and their induction into Christ? If not, then they might be out of Christ and unforgiven. Ought they to be rebaptized? The question pressed itself upon their hearts with a mountain's weight.

They wept, prayed, read and consulted friends and still the solemn question rose before them, silent and unmoved as the sphinx.

Darkness seemed to be settling down upon them when his great heart and vigorous common sense broke through all of the labyrinth of theology and he said: "Wife, we will be baptized."

Soon after, happy and radiant faced, they stood side by side, at the tranquil waters; joyful friends surrounded them, the brightest skies were smiling above; they are to go into the water together, and as the words of a song, perhaps, "How happy are they," made the air tremulous with its melodies, he takes her by the hand saying, "Well, spouse, here we go; if we are right may the the Lord bless us, and if we are wrong may the Lord forgive us."

That was one of the most deep, tender, loving and manly prayers that has been uttered since that prayer which rose on the night winds through the dark olives of Gethsemane.

The silver waters rolled over them, and they came forth at peace with themselves and God.

Such questions were incident to the transition of religious thought through which men were then passing. A little more time for study and reflection would probably have brought them to a different conclusion.

The noble couple have long since gone hand in hand to him who doeth all things well.

He knoweth all hearts, all thoughts, all lights and all equities, and will surely do right. "They shall walk in white, for they are worthy."

Denver, Col., Dec. 28, 1898.

The Religious World.

The description that Count Tolstoi gives of the condition of the peasant population in large districts of the Russian Empire is nothing less than heartrending. The people are perishing of hunger; and if not absolutely starved to death, they hold life with so uncertain a grasp that any strain, however slight, is enough to kill them. They have no strength left in them for effort or for endurance: when disease comes, it mows them down as if they were so much grass. Count Tolstoi attributes this state of things to the bureaucratic system of the empire, which leaves the masses of the people at the mercy of a host of officials who regard any freedom of action with absolute terror. With such a dead weight crushing them down, cut off from any opportunity of making their way in the world, of trying fortune under fresh conditions, of rising from one grade to another, men sink into a moral fatalism which saps the very sources of strength. They are helpless and hopeless. For many years it has been said that the resources of Russia, both military and economic, are less than one would imagine them to be in consideration of the size of the empire and the size of its population. Count Tolstoi suggests one cause of the national paralysis.—Sunday Magazine.

The Christian Endeavor World after Jan. 1st, 1899 will be installed in Tremont Temple, Boston. This move will associate the best organ of the Christian Endeavor Society, the Christian World, with historic names. Tremont Temple is one of the most beautiful and well-arranged in the country, or indeed in the world. It is one of the world's great religious centres, being the home of the American Baptist Missionary Union and allied societies, of the Watchman and of one of the largest Baptist Churches in the world; that ministered to by Dr. George C. Lorimer.

The Independent, as is its custom, in its issue for Jan. 5, 1899, furnishes its readers with an annual statistical report of the numerical strength of the religious bodies in the United States, from which we give below the general summary showing memberships with gains and losses for the year 1898. The star denotes decrease; blanks either not reported or no gain during the year:

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan does not believe in belittling man. In a recent article on "Self" in the Record of Christian Work he says:

I cannot understand fallen man, sinful and heart-broken, save as I have the vision of man unfallen, without sin, whole in heart and affection towards God. Were I a stranger to this land, and were I suddenly brought here from some of the dark places of the earth, did I know nothing of civilization, naught of all the progress of this rapidly fading century, and were I placed first of all in connection with our great railway system on some point where an hour before there had been a fearful wreck, would it be fair to say to me, as I gazed upon the wreck of the locomotive and train scattered in all confusion, "That is a train?" Every child will see how absurd it would be. That is the wreckage, the result of the accident, and it is the very splendor of the construction that has made that wreckage so profound and appalling. If I want to know what a train is, I must find out what it was before the accident. It is not fair to point man to me as you see him to-day, with the blemish and the blight of sin upon him, with the dimness of sin in his eye, and the weariness of sin in his physical frame, with his mental vigor enfeebled and spiritual power benumbed.

It would be thought a hard government that should tax its people one-tenth part of their time, to be employed in its service; but idleness taxes many of us much more. Sloth, by bringing on disease, absolutely shortens life. Sloth, like rust, consumes faster than labor wears, while the used key is always bright. How much more time than is necessary do we spend in sleep, forgetting that the sleeping fox catches no poultry, and there will be sleeping enough in the grave.—Franklin.

Our Budget.

—The March offering for foreign missions looms up on the horizon.

—It is time to begin to get ready to prepare for that great occasion.

—A specially generous offering will, of course, require an especially careful preparation for it. Things do not happen; they take place under the law of cause and effect.

—The foreign secretaries at Cincinnati stand ready to furnish any ammunition which the preachers may need in the way of statistics, facts or suggestions. Do not be bashful in applying for them.

—The first Congress ever held among the Disciples of Christ comes off in April next at St. Louis. Do not forget that. It will be a combination of city evangelization and education, along with the discussion of other vital questions. All members in good standing may be elected members of this Congress if they so desire.

—We are receiving many tokens of deep and widespread interest in our series of historical articles on the Reformation of the 19th Century, the first of which has already appeared. We have no doubt but that this interest will both deepen and widen as the articles proceed. The second article will appear next week. It is to be hoped that our friends and readers will assist us in securing as many new readers as possible to begin with the beginning of this series.

—J. A. Erwin and wife have been appointed missionaries of the American Christian Missionary Society to Puerto Rico, and will sail to that island just as soon as their arrangements can be made.

—The Educational Bulletin this year is under the editorial oversight of Mrs. A. A. Forest, of Irvington, Ind. The first number of the second volume is to hand, containing the address of President E. V. Zollars on "Education, Its Importance and Status Among the Disciples of Christ," given at the Chattanooga convention, and other interesting matters. The papers promised in this Bulletin for the present year and editorial observations and information about our schools and colleges makes it a most valuable journal for every Disciple of Christ. At the nominal sum of $1.00 per year, the Educational Bulletin ought to have a large subscription list.

—The proceedings and leading addresses of the Ninth International Conference of the Railroad Department of the Y. M. C. A. of North America, held at Fort Wayne, Ind., Oct. 20-23, 1898, have appeared in a handsomely printed book, in tinted paper cover. The addresses are of a practical character, high order, and indicative of the vast influence for good exerted by this association in railroad circles.

—The Central Branch of the Y. M. C. A. of this city has secured Prof. John B. De Motte to deliver his popular lecture on "The Harp of the Senses; or, The Secret of Character Building," in the auditorium of its new building on Grand and Franklin Avenues, on the evening of the 20th of the present month. This lecture, it is said, creates great enthusiasm wherever delivered.

—The Foreign Christian Missionary Society informs us that it has about closed up all arrangements for the transfer of the building and grounds of the Bolengi Mission, in Africa, formerly owned by the Baptists, to us, and that Royal J. Dye, who was married to Miss Eva M. Nichols at Ionia, Mich., on the 16th of the present month, in company with his wife will start for Bolengi, Africa, in a few days, as missionaries. We are glad to know that our Foreign Society is wide awake to every opportunity for a foothold in the "Dark Continent" and that they are able to send these new missionaries into that field. Here, then, is another concrete reason for an enlarged offering for foreign missions on the first Sunday in March, or sooner.

—C. M. Pinkerton, of Lead, S. Dak., suggests that a suitable committee be appointed "to prepare a cheap edition paper cover of the good old-fashioned songs" to be used at the Jubilee Convention next fall. And also that every church in the land, Disciples of Christ, of course, be sure to have at least one delegate present even to the bearing of the expenses of that delegate to and from the convention These are good suggestions and will doubtless be realized, especially the former one.

—Charles R. Scoville, who added over 1,250 souls to the Church of Christ last year, says that "the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is the paper for any evangelist."

—James S. Lamar, whose face our readers will be glad to recognize on our first page this week, is known wherever the literature of the Disciples of Christ, or Christians, has circulated. He is a native of the state of Georgia, where he was born May 18th, 1829. He graduated in Bethany College in 1854. His first pastorate was with the church at Augusta, in one of the suburbs of which, Grovetown, he still resides, enjoying the quietude which men of his years usually desire. His first work was the "Organon of Scripture." Since then he has written a Commentary on the Gospel of Luke, "The Memoirs of Isaac Errett," and some other smaller works. He has been a frequent contributor to our current religious literature, and few men, if any, among us are more eagerly read than Bro. Lamar. A man of wide culture, the master of a fine style, a thinker of great independence, he is, nevertheless, a man of extreme modesty and self-depreciation. May the light of his Heavenly Father's countenance be his cheer and support while he lingers yet on this mortal shore!

—Sumner T. Martin, of Mason City, Ia., wrote for a large number of sample copies of CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to distribute in their meeting now in progress. He says that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is improving all the time, that he is proud of it and will do all he can to extend its usefulness. Such encouragement from ourfriends is very gratifying, indeed, in the midst of our ever-increasing burdens, ambitions and anxieties.

—The Outlook thinks that the Dispensary System or state control of the liquor traffic is gaining ground. This opinion it bases upon the recent vote in favor of its adoption by South Dakota and its success in South Carolina since the Supreme Court's adverse decision on Judge Simonton's order permitting the sale of original packages in the state. If the state is to regulate the traffic at all, no doubt but that the "Dispensary System" is an improvement over the license system, high or low, but we yet fail to see anything better than legal prohibition. Why some people make such a noise about anything that tends to reduce this nefarious business and its direful results and yet balk at something that proposes to stop it wholly, is without controversy, one of the grea mysteries of our Christian civilization.

—We were pleased to see quite a creditable account of the Disciples of Christ as a religious body in the first edition of the Detroit Free Press for the new year. The general outline of the article is only fairly true to history, but the spirit in which it was written shows that it was the aim of that popular journal to give its readers unbiased information concerning the origin, growth, faith and purpose of our people and predicts that in the next fifty years we will be the largest religious body in the United States. The report especially emphasizes our plea for unity among God's people and also our educational interests. When the leading newspapers of the land thus begin to tell the world who the Disciples of Christ are and what their aims, we predict a larger demand for our preachers and our literature, than we have yet known, and must be prepared to shoulder a greater responsibility than we have yet carried.

—"Make a resolution that for the next year you will not suffer from fatty degeneration of the pocketbook."—Chicago Standard.

—Editors of religious weeklies are "immune," so far as this dread disease is concerned.—Religious Herald.

No, not "immune." Editors of religious weeklies would "take it" as quickly as other people if only they were "exposed." But their delinquent subscribers see to it that they are not exposed.

—The Christian Worker, in commenting on "Are We Pagans?" by J. J. Haley, some weeks ago in our columns, says: "The question is a startling one, and yet there is in it more truth than poetry." This is true, not only of anything about which J. J. H. writes, but also of what he writes. There are few pens more trenchantly weilded than that of this widely known writer. The Christian Work quotes in its columns a large part of the article referred to.

—It is evident that a just estimate of the Salvation Army cannot be made from a casual view of the little bands seen on the streets of our towns and cities throughout the country. Already they have enlisted men and women of wealth and of culture and of education, and are finding access to the pulpits of some of the best churches in the East. In Washington, D. C., some of their ablest defenders recently occupied some of the leading pulpits of the Presbyterian and Lutheran Churches. While the Salvation Army is thus reaching upward and getting hold of some of the best churches in Washington, D. C., and other cities, it is still holding on to its street work and usual street methods. It is said that there is no city in which its bass drum beats louder than on the street corners of our national capital.

—The mention of a "progressive euchre party," "matinee performance," and a "club house provided with a bowling alley, billiard and pool tables," by a leading Catholic paper that comes to our table, in a favorable way as church benefits, does not impress us as a very high conception of the Christ-life.

—We have just received a large 14x18 brass-hemmed chromo wall picture of beautiful design, with calendar attachment, advertising the First Christian Church, Jacksonville, Fla., and its public services. J. T. Boone, the pastor, seems unwilling to have the Master say of that church that it is less wise than the children of this world. The picture is not only an ornament to any preacher's study, hotel, store, or other public or private room, but a conspicuous announcement of the existence and work of that church to all casual observers. And now that calendars are so beautifully and cheaply made, why not the churches use them for advertising purposes? Why should secular institutions have the monopoly of this useful art? We commend the enterprising spirit of the First Christian Church of Jacksonville, Florida.

—A special dispatch to the Chicago Record says that William L. Wilson, formerly president of the West Virginia University, later member of Congress and member of the Cleveland Cabinet, then president of Washington and Lee University at Lexington, has been chosen president of Yale College, to succeed President Dwight, whose resignations is to take effect at the end of the year. Mr. Wilson will accept. The salary is to be $25,000 a year.

—We very much regret to hear that the Christian Courier has been pressed for lack of funds to meet current expenses and is burdened with a debt. The debt, however, is not dangerously large, and we hope that the plan of offering shares of stock will remove the same and open the way to wider usefulness.

The Disciples of Christ in Texas will surely not permit so valiant a defender of the faith as the Christian Courier to falter for the want of $2,000. In nothing should church members be more prompt to pay than their subscription to a church paper.

—The St. Louis Sentinel is the name of a new paper in this city, successor of the Atlanta Dictator. In the platform of this new journal is this singular selection of a mission.

We believe it better to single out one of the great evils of our political and economic system and devote our whole energies and space to an attempt to eradicate that particular evil, instead of only touching in a limited way a great variety of topics. After a very careful consideration of this matter we are satisfied that the one greatest evil of the present day, at least as far as concerns the people of the United States, is the hostile legislation concerning our great railroad industries.

We wonder whether his efforts in behalf of the mighty against the weak will be appreciated.

—In a copy of the 5th annual report of the Montana State Orphans' Home, the superintendent states the object of the Home, in part, in the following somewhat remarkable language:

The manifest purpose was to establish a home and school for the destitute and dependent children of Montana, who were not otherwise provided for. It was not intended to admit orphans unless there were reasons other than orphanage; nor to exclude other destitute and dependent children simply because there were uniortunate enough to have parents living.

The last clause of the above statement is the remarkable part of the purpose of the Home and it strikes us as a favorable comment on the parents of Montana that the state is able to maintain a home large enough to contain the children of this class. The report states that since the opening of the Home in 1891, there have been 145 children received, few of which are orphans. Why is not such a care properly the burden of the state? And why do we not hear of more "State Orphan Homes?" There are many dependent, destitute children in the older states and our larger cities "unfortunate enough to have living parents." And in not a few instances the state is largely responsible for these miserable parents.

—In an interview with Joaquin Miller since his return from Alaska and the Klondike country, published in a recent number of the Union Signal, it appears that the laws against the sale of liquor to the Indians and the laws regulating the social evil and marriages are better enforced upon the Canadian side of the line than in Alaska. This ought not to be. Mr. Miller's interview concludes with the following remarkable announcements:

I saw no drunken men in Dawson City. They were nice people there. I saw no card-playing either. Of course, there was plenty of drinking and card-playing in the saloons. I was there a year and ten days. Ours was a cabin of newspaper men. We read Shakespeare through twice and most of the Bible. My father, you know, was a kind of missionary. I want to tell you something touching the old bishop said to me. He is a good friend of mine. He said: "I buried nine Indians last year, but, thank God, I baptized seven of them." The missionaries have a hard time combating the spirit of the age everywhere, but they are doing a great deal of good.

—The New York Voice has become the New Voice. The old form is put off and the basis of the paper greatly enlarged. It is now a literary journal of sixteen pages, new type, new depratments and on better paper. The New Voice will be none the less compromising with the saloon and the liquor traffic than its predecessor, the New York Voice, but will be more companionable as a literary and family journal. We think the changes have greatly improved the appearance and usefulness of the paper.

—In an article which we have not the room to publish, T. H. Edwards, of Quincy, Ill., rightly and strongly insists upon greater care on the part of churches in the selection of men for its officers and for leaders of services. These men should, as he says, always be selected from moral and spiritual considerations rather than from mere personal, financial or social reasons. An inefficient officer or leader is always a hindrance to the best interests of the church.

—D. H. Scott, of Wapalla, Ill., writes that a church in the neighborhood has been organized with about 100 members and that he will try to induce them to take the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. This is a good idea. The CHRISTIAN-ENANGELIST is a splendid preventive of the backsliding disposition found in so many of our churches in which religious papers are not as common as they should be.

—F. N. Calvin writes that he appointed a member of his congregation in Milwaukee, Wis., an agent for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and then publicly mentioned the fact from his pulpit and strongly recommended the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST to the congregation. This is business. Every preacher should take up this matter of church literature and urge upon a church paper in every family as a religious duty as well as a means of advancing the Master's kingdom.

—Wallace Brockman, writing from Jacksonville, Ill., after giving an interesting report of the progress of the church in all its departments under the wise supervision of the pastor, Geo. L. Snively, adds the following:

Preparations for a great revival are in progress; we expect to commence the series of meetings about the last of February or the first of March; all our efforts and prayers are for a harvest of souls; the church never was in a better condition for a great meeting. Our South Side Mission are preparing for a revival also; the mission is a success in every way; the Sunday-school average attendance is 68; there is preaching at the mission every Thursday night and a fine interest, with one confession. WALLACE BROCKMAN.

Jacksonville, Ill., Jan. 4, 1899.

—We are glad to learn from J. J. Morgan, pastor of the church at Warrensburg, which has just held its annual meeting, that the congregation is happy over the results of the year's work and that "never were the prospects of this congregation more promising." The church at Warrensburg has been one of our good, reliable churches for many years and we are glad to know that it is still prospering and reaching out for higher things.

—We learn that the Foreign Missionary Society is preparing to send two strong men to Cuba in a short time. The ground has already been looked over carefully by representatives of the society and the report is that there is a wide door open to us there to preach the gospel and to plant churches. The people feel very kindly toward Americans in view of their assistance in delivering them from the power of Spain, and are prepared to listen to the gospel coming from this source. As previously reported, a man has been selected to take the place of one of our missionaries who recently died in Africa. Roy J. Dye, of Ionia, Mich., with his new wife, will sail for Africa this month, if they have not already departed. Another feature of the aggressive work of the Foreign Society is the sending of five or six young men to India to evangelize in the villages, provided the March offering is sufficiently liberal to justify its doing so. They want young men that will be willing to go and promise not to marry for at least five years, and give themselves unreservedly to the work of preaching in the villages. Our readers understand what all this means in reference to our March offering. It means getting ready for the largest contribution for Foreign Missions which has ever been made in our history.

—An Illinois preacher writes: "I am rejoicing over the strong fight being made by our papers over hearts rather than mere names in the campaign of this year. God grant that this year may be made memorable by striving for the souls of men rather for their nominal membership. There is need of preparation in the churches for the reception of the new converts. When they are brought in, what will they find? They will find worldliness in every church with which I am acquainted. In opposing this worldliness our papers will have to be definite. Men and women say 'Amen' to your strong pleas for higher spiritual life, and turn from the paper to the card table, the dance, the theatre, or to their money. I have been a pastor for over 14 years, and I have found nothing so destructive to spirituality as the above-named things."

After all, however, are these not the symptoms of an imperfect spiritual life, and is not the constitutional treatment the proper treatment that is to deepen and tone up the spiritual life of these members? The hands of the clock will go right if the inside machinery is right, but no amount of tinkering with the hands will suffice if the main-spring is out of order. It is well enough to specify symptoms of disease, but the root cause of the disease should be pointed out.

—Here is a manifestation of unity among Christians at Osceola, Ia., where J. H. Wright is our preacher, that has in it the prophecy of better things:

By agreement at their ministerial association meetings, united protracted services are being held in the five Osceola churches. They are to work in union and present a solid front against the evil ways of the town. The idea is an original one, but we believe these meetings will certainly result in bettering the moral condition of Osceola. The field is open for work and there is ample opportunity for improvement along these lines. Rev. Stevenson is conducting the M. E. meeting, Rev. Wright the Christian, Rev. Pelton the Baptist, Rev. Moyer the M. P. and Rev. Aikman the Presbyterian. They have issued cards bearing the following inscription: "You are cordially invited to attend the Co-operative Revival Services now being held in our various churches;" signed by the different pastors. Appropriate quotations border the card. Such effort as this is worthy of encouragement.

—We are pleased to learn that the present session of Kentucky University has been very gratifying both in the number of the students in attendance and in the quality of the work done. The matriculation list is the largest for several years and the character of students fully up to its best former sessions. The number of young ladies is especially encouraging. The next term will open on Monday the 30th, inst., and from letters of inquiry received and calls for catalogues, the faculty expect a goodly number of new students at that time. The institution has just entered upon the second century of its existence under most flattering prospects. A hundred years is a long time in the life of an individual, but may not, and ought not to be a long time in the life of worthy institutions of learning. And so we join many in the hope that Kentucky University is just entering the youth of her long and prosperous life. And as the centuries come and go, and the brighter light dawns, may she go forward to the highest possible perfection in Christian education and manliness. Her host of friends should give her their most cordial support in every way. Her new Medical College, located in Louisville, Ky., opened on the 2nd inst. with fine prospects, and a Normal College will be opened with the beginning of the next session, September 11th, 1899.

—We are permitted to announce that on the 21st day of April, in the year 1900, there will be held in New York City an Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, to continue in session for eleven days. It will be an event of world-wide interest. Every Protestant religious body in Christendom will be expected to have its Mission Board represented in this Conference. Delegates are to come from all parts of the world wherever there are Protestant Christians. This is to be a conference, not a council. It convenes for deliberation, not for legislation. "No creeds will be drawn, no laws enacted. It aims to gather facts, state principles, consider methods, bring to view the full array of Protestant aggressive activity, and to fire the hosts with new courage and zeal."

This will be a great event in the history of the church. That and the International Peace Conference will be two events of supreme importance to crown the closing century.

—A young man, student of one of our medical colleges of this city, was found dead in one of the parks a few days since, the victim of a pistol shot from his own hand. In a letter to his sister he tells her that when the letter reaches her he will be in "Devachan," whereever and whatever that is. He expresses his purpose to appear to his father in Dawson City, Alaska, and "warn him to turn to theosophy." He refers his sister to "Judge's chapter on Devachan" and adds: "It explains why I must go." So this is one of the fruits of this ancient but modernized fad which some people in this country are deluding themselves with.

—The articles "Can I love my enemies," by N. J. Aylsworth in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are worthy a careful and prayerful reading. I call especial attention to your issue of Jan. 5th, page 9, paragraph beginning with "The possible ministries of love," etc. In literary merit and spiritual force that paragraph is a gem. It ought to be made immortal.

JAS. A. ROSBOROUGH.

—We do not remember to have seen a more interesting and instructive number of the Missionary Intelligencer than the January number of this year. There seems not to be a paragraph without a point, nor an article without a pointed purpose. There are cogent reasons given why every church should make an offering for Foreign Missions this year, and why the general sum raised should exceed anything before attempted by the Disciples of Christ for Foreign Missions.

—Ashley S. Johnson, president Kimberlln Heights School for Evangelists, is continuing his heroic struggle in behalf of that institution and the young men for whom it was founded. His two great levers of power are faith and works, or prayer and books. A letter has been issued by him, recently, announcing the annual call to prayer, from Jan. 1st to Feb. 26th, 11 A. M., in behalf of this educational institution and also of the books written by its president and for sale in its benefit. The last and newest of these books is "The Self-interpreting New Testament" which, so far as we can learn, promises to become a most popular and useful volume. A copy of this book has been received at this office and will be duly noticed at our earliest opportunity. In the meantime we join with all friends of the Kimberlin Heights School in prayer for its success and heartily commend Bro. Johnson's books to the churches as a worthy means for its support.

—Father Sherman, son of the late Gen. Sherman, of Porto Rico, has su mitted a report to Gen. Brooke, part of which has been made public through the press. Father Sherman, in common with our own Bro. Erwin, reports the people of the island to be gentle, docile and friendly toward Americans. He reports the state of religion on the island, however, as very unsatisfactory. Though in every town of any size there is found a large and handsome edifice, the services are very poorly attended. The inhabitants of the island, with few exceptions, are nominally, at least, Roman Catholics. Very few of the men are more than Catholic in name; they are baptized, married and buried by the priests; that is the extent of their Catholicism. He speaks of hardships brought about by depriving the clergy of their state pay, but thinks it will be better for the church when the new state of things comes to be accepted. He says: "Religion is dead on the island. Whether it can be revived as a living influence is highly problematical. There is little or no observance of the sanctity of Sunday." This seems to us unjustifiable skepticism on the part of a religious teacher. We see no reason to doubt that the people of Porto Rico will respond to the gospel of Christ just as other people when it is preached to them in simplicity and power, as it no doubt will be. Bro. Erwin takes a far more hopeful view of the outlook religiously, as we think he is justified in doing, and we are glad to learn that arrangements are being made to send him to the island as a missionary.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Granville Snell removes from Trenton, Mo., to Memphis, Mo., where he takes charge of the work of the church.

Geo. W. Cline, of McComb, Ohio, is in a series of meetings with his brother, C. C. Cline, at Malinta, Ohio.

Bro. Jacob Hugley, of Paris, Mo., is still very ill with pneumonia, but is improving slowly.

The Christian Church at Flanagan, Ill., at their meeting Jan. 1st, 1899, gave Rev. L. B. Wither a call to remain with them for the year 1899.

A. L. Chapman, whose Constantinople letter appears in this paper, has changed his address in that city from the German Imperial P. O. to the British P. O., which is also the address of G. N. Shishmanian.

The church at Boston, Mass., dedicates its new building on the 22d inst. B. L. Smith delivers the dedicatory discourse. We congratulate the Bostonian Disciples on this advance step in their progress.

I can locate a wide-awake, progressive preacher where he can secure for himself and small family a reasonable salary. Write me.

SAMUEL GREGG.

Le Sueur, Minn.

S. W. Brown, of Coffeyville, Kan., has just moved to Eureka, Kan., and taken pastoral charge of the church there. M. Ingels, of Leanna, Kan., succeeds Bro. S. W. Brown as pastor at Coffeyville, Kan. Mrs. Ingels and the boys will remain on the farm at Leanna, Kan., for awhile, at least.

Tho. J. Thompson began his work as pastor of the church at Lincoln, Neb., Jan. 1st. His residence is 247 S. 25th street of that city. He was formerly at Lathrop, Mo.

After having sent a New Year's letter to each of the brethren, F. D. Ferrall, of Pleasantville, Iowa, gave the membership a reception at the church, during which the announcement was made that their new organ was paid for.

H. J. Crockett, formerly pastor of the church at New Sharon, Ia., is now pastor of the church at Mankato, Minn. He speaks in the highest praise of the New Sharon church which place he seems to have left with great reluctance. He, however, will find a great field for work and a good working church at Mankato, which was at one time the church home of ye assistant editor.

A. H. Harrell, Windsor, Ill., sends in a good report of his ministry for the church at that place. Of the items stated are 60 additions to the church for year 1898. He is open to engagement and prefers work in Central Ill.

A. C. McKeever is in a protracted meeting at Nevada, Mo.

B. F. Hill, for five years pastor of the church at California, Mo., is assisting Edmund Wilkes in a protracted meeting at Eldon, Mo., with good outlook. He speaks well of the condition of the church at Eldon and of its pastor. Also of the California church.

According to the Jacksonville press, Ill., G. L. Sniveley is one of the most popular pastors in that city. This opinion is based on the crowded house to which he usually preaches and frequent additions.

During A. M. Hale's six years' ministry for the Gerlaw, Talbot's Creek and Alexis churches in Illinois, "three beautiful houses of worship have been built." At the close of his sixth year a farewell was given by his many friends, who expressed their appreciation of his work by the gift of a handsome gold watch. The elders of the church at Gerlaw express a high appreciation of Bro. Hale's work at the places named.

A. W. Gehres closed his year's work at Hopewell, Ind., with a three weeks' meeting and a roll call on Christmas day. He reports 13 additions for the year 1898; present membership of the church 76. He will give this church one-half of his time this year instead of one-fourth as last year. He closed his work of two years' duration at Wildcat and will continue one-half time at Spring Creek Church in White county.

John M. Reid, M. D., Centerview. Mo., would like to locate at a place where we have a church, either in Southwest Missouri, Southeast Kansas or Oklahoma, where he can practice Homeopathy while helping some church.

S. J. Phillips, of Sugar Grove, Wis., has been disabled from work by the grip. D. G. Wagner, of West Lebanon, is holding a meeting for him at Sabina.

A MINISTER'S STATEMENT

The testimonials in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla come from a class of people whose words are worth considering. Many clergymen testify to the value of this medicine. Read this:

"By a severe attack of diphtheria I lost two of my children. I used Hood's Sarsaparilla as a tonic both for myself and little girl and found it most excellent as a means to restore the impoverished blood to its natural state and as a help to appetite and digestion. I depend upon it when I need a tonic and I find it at once efficacious." REV. C. H. SMITH, Congregational parsonage, Plymouth, Conn.

F. P. Arthur, pastor of the Church of Christ, Rochester, N. Y., recently preached a sermon on Christian Unity, a brief of which was published in the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, Jan. 2, 1899. Christian unity from the standpoint of the Disciples of Christ seems to strike Eastern people as something quite novel and surprisingly simple. Bro. Arthur pointed out some of the sins of sectarianism and the trend of the religious world in these latter days toward a closer fellowship in and around Christ and concluded with a clear statement of the position of the Disciples of Christ on this subject.

W. H. Hanna sailed at noon Dec. 31, from New York for England, to assist Evangelist J. A. L. Romig.

G. W. Hamilton writes that he is making a great effort under sore trials to maintain the gospel of Christ in Roby, Mo. His health has been very bad, he has an invalid wife, and says that he receives almost nothing for his work. We have forwarded his letter to our state secretary for consideration.

J. W. Lowber is delivering his twenty-third course of lectures at Add-Ran University. The present course is on "The Outline History and Philosophy of the Nineteenth Century Reformation."

A. F. Holden has accepted the call to preach at West Plains, Mo., this year. He was at Charleston, Mo., last year.

H. G. Waggoner has closed his work at Mt. Morris, Ill. The church is in a prosperous condition. They expect to repair their house in the spring. Recently they remembered their pastor and wife with a donation.

J. B. DeHoff, of East Radford, Va., finds it necessary to resign the work there because of a lack of financial support. He is a young married man of good report and would make an acceptable minister for some good church or churches. He is open to correspondence. Write him at East Radford, Va.

Allen Hickey preached on Jan. 8 for Oskaloosa, Ia.

Wm. Semones and wife, so long in Iowa, and lately of Colorado, have returned. They locate in Linn county.

Dean H. W. Everest is improving in health in Conroe, Tex , and reports that he has finished the MS. of his new book.

H. E. Cory has received a call from the church in Oskaloosa, Ia. His final acceptance is expected this week.

A M. Haggard, of Drake University, reports that the enrollment of this winter term is the best in the history of the University.

ARE MODERN NOVELS HELPFUL TO MORALITY?

This is the latest question asked and answered by the accomplished Dean of Canterbury, Dr. Farrar. The Novel, in the popular sense, is a very modern institution. Two hundred years ago there was no literature of fiction, and the first novels were those of Fielding, who wrote "Tom Jones," and Richardson, the author of "Pamela, or Virtue Rewarded." Now we see a Niagara of novels pouring from the press of every civilized country, and the question whether fiiction is doing good or harm is a very important one. This is more especially so, because an immense proportion of modern fiction is religious. Dean Farrar reminds us that in an American book, once widely read and highly valued, Todd's "Student's Guide," the clerical author warns his readers against reading any novels at all, saying that he is well aware of the many pitfalls, even in those which were most highly esteemed. But this antipathy is now almost extinct. There are few indeed, even in the strictest circles, who would regard "novel reading" as being in itself a sin. The Dean defines a novel as being only a tale of a certain length. Its differentia is that it does not profess to be actual history. Yet it may be even this. Many historical novels are carefully drawn from the facts of history, and many are founded on the actual experiences of life. Fiction, known under the generic name of Haggadah, furnished a prominent element of the post-exilic literature of the Jews. And our Lord himself set the example of making fiction, in the form of parables, the most exquisite and serviceable method for the indication of truth. It is therefore clear that it has often been unspeakably helpful to morality. It has reached tens of thousands who could have been reached in no other way. Many modern novels, such as those of George Macdonald, have exercised a most healthy influence.

COMPARATIVE FICTION.

It soon comes out, however, as we follow the Dean's argument, that this matter, like so many others, is one of relativity. Some novels are altogether excellent, while others are execrable. I myself have long formed the opinion that the vast majority of the works of novelists are altogether baneful, especially those written by women. A few, and a few only, are worth the paper they are written on, and a vast number are positively mischievous. The grandest achievements of novelists have been those recorded as the results of books of fiction written with a purpose. Think of the wonderful influence of the books of Charles Dickens. His "Nicholas Nickleby" improved off the face of the earth those scholastic hells for boys which had their type in Dotheby's Hall, where that she-devil, Mrs. Wackford Squeers, reigned supreme with her brimstone and treacle. His "Oliver Twist," that masterpiece of pathos, worked magical improvement in the treatment of wretched pauper children in workhouses. The "People's Palace," in East London, is the monument of what an earnest "novel with a purpose" can do, for it is the outcome of that marvelous story by Charles Read, "Never Too Late to Mend." But there is another and a very dark side to this question. We will glance at it.

WHAT HAS BECOME OF GENIUS?

Who would dare to say that the novelists of to-day are worthy of comparison with their magnificent predecessors? Of wildly sensational writers we have a plethora, but none of them seem to be gifted with the power of Scott, Bronte, George Eliot, Hawthorne, Thackeray, Dickens, or Harriet Beecher Stowe. Dr. Farrar is struck with this fact, and he has a forcible theory about it. We are passing through one of those interspaces of history, when, as though the soil of human intellect had become exhausted by the splendid flowers and superb fruit which it has produced, it must lie fallow for a time. All our greatest writers and eminent men in all branches of literature and attainment have passep away, and they have left no successors who can be even distantly compared with them. We have no living statesmen who can speak like Bright and Gladstone; no poets to be mentioned in the same breath with Tennyson and Browning; no historian to equal Macaulay or Freeman; no men of science like Darwin, Tyndall, or Huxley; no men of letters equal to Carlyle or Matthew Arnold. Yet we have an army of men and women writing fiction. But what comes of it all? Who now cares to mention "Trilby," that brilliant bit of Anglo-French pornography which seemed to aim at veneering hell with the tints of heaven? When will Zola, now that he has reformed, be able to undo even a small fraction of the evil which his vile sewer fiction has done? As for the gaudy tinsel of Marie Corelli, the spurious religious pictures of Hall Caine, and the "sex novels" of Sarah Grand, the certain doom of them all is to be sold off for sixpence with a cake of soap.

POLLY PUT THE KETTLE ON!

The most popular preacher amongst the clergy in the City of London is Canon Scott Holland, of St. Paul's Cathedral. Crowds throng the glorious edifice when he is to preach. But he is taking rank as a popular writer also, devoting himself chiefly to the new line adopted by a small school of the High Anglican clergy, who are trying to attract the working masses by showing special interest in the intricate and almost despairing problems of the age. He is the editor of a small monthiy magazine called "The Commonwealth," which is occasionally confused in the minds of people with the "Christian Commonwealth" with which I have so long had the honor of being connected. The odd mixture of Socialism and Sacerdotalism is but a poor bait, and the working men are not being caught in any numbers by the artifice. "Polly put the kettle on" is Canon Scott Holland's New Year's motto. In his own witty way he tries to show us all just where we are by treating Polly and her kettle—the kettle being one which refuses to boil—as symbols of social matters at this time. As for social reforms, everybody wants them, and yet we seem no nearer to securing any one of them. "Why," asks the genial Canon, "does nothing happen? Why won't the kettle sing? We have kindled the fire. Polly has played her part. The kettle is on. We want our tea very badly. But the thing sits there and refuses to hum." Well, it appears that it is all because there is no actual proposal before us which can command anything approaching the agreement which is necessary to carry it. "All the same it is well to keep the kettle on the fire," says the Canon. "Therefore," he goes on to advise, "let all the Pollies put on every kettle they possess, light the fires, and get everything moving. Everybody ought to be at it, puzzling their brains, stirring their consciences, pushing, pressing, conferring, discussing, working, keeping ever in view the things that have got by hook or by crook to be done." But alas! some of us who have been reading what the Canon of St. Paul's thus inculcates have some sad remembrances of certain times and seasons in the early part of this decade, when some powerful kettles began to sing with noise most musical to all liberal minded people. For instance, a few years ago there seemed to be a real prospect of the disestablishment of both the Welsh and Scotch State Churches. Then it was that this same organ of which Canon Scott Holland is the real controller began to sing quite another tune. Then also it was that the notorious Christian Social Union, of which he is the true ringleader, set vigorously to work all over the land to squirt cold water on the fires which promised the reform kettles of all descriptions. The fact is that a High Churchman is necessarily so steeped in priestcraft that he can only advocate those reforms which promise increasing power and influence to the church and the hierarchy. That is why you in America have a struggle impending with Rome over popular education, and why we expect tremendous political squalls about all social questions which involve ecclesiastical issues.

Constantinople Letter.

It has been nearly three months since our arrival in the land of the "unspeakable Turk." As yet we have been impressed not so much by his unspeakableness as by his not being understandable. One can never fully realize what a barrier a language is between nations until he has been among a people to whom he cannot make his wants and wishes known. This fact is then indelibly impressed upon his mind by loss of time, extra fees and many difficulties. It takes away much of a man's independent spirit to be compelled to use an interpreter every time he wishes to express an idea. There are many incentives urging us on to our best efforts to a speedy mastery of the language.

A brief account of our work in this city and some of the conditions which confront mission workers in this empire will no doubt be interesting to the readers of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST. Our mission is located in Stamboul, in the Armenian quarter. There is no better location from which to reach the Armenian population of this city. Here G. N. Shishmanian and wife have lived and labored for nearly twenty years. Their home is used for a chapel where the gospel is preached and men, women and children are instructed in the Holy Scriptures. Near by is the school building. This is a neat and comfortable building, having four rooms and very poor equipment. The present accommodations are sufficient for about one hundred pupils, while our faithful teachers are doing their best to make comfortable and instruct one hundred and twenty-five boys and girls. Recently the hearts of all have been made glad by a letter from A. McLean, stating that new seats and desks for the school are on the way from New York. When these arrive we hope to be able to arrange for two hundred pupils. We could easily have twice this number had we the room and teachers for them. We need maps, charts, kindergarten equipment, etc. If there is a brother or sister who has $500 to devote to the cause of humanity, I know of no better investment than in the enlargment and better equipment of this school, where the need is so great and our work is in popular favor. Last Lord's day two men came requesting baptism at the hands of Mr. Shishmanian, and almost daily there come inquirers asking about the mission, or, what is better, seeking the way of life. Thus the work is moving forward slowly but surely in spite of the many difficulties characteristic of this field.

Time goes so very rapidly in Constantinople. The days are too short and the weeks are not long enough to accomplish what one feels ought to be done where the needs of the people are so many and great. Everything else moves slowly in Turkey, and it is necessary to learn that "it is a good thing for a man to hope and patiently wait for the salvation of God." The Sultan desires to give his personal attention to all matters of state, important and otherwise. This causes almost endless delay. The subordinate officials catch the spirit, and matters among them are delayed, hoping that bribes may be given to hasten the performance of their duties. G N. Shishmanian worked and waited seven long years for a government permit for our school in this city. A native here would have to live to the age of Methusaleh to live and experience as much as the average American in his "threescore years and ten." Procrastination is stealing a great deal of valuable time from these people.

For several years no government permits have been granted for new school or church buildings. In fact, the missionaries cannot even build a residence without the pledge that it shall never be used for a school or a place of worship. Sometimes they are refused traveling passports to and from their places of labor. In this way a number of American and English missionaries were delayed in this city the whole of the month of October. At last they started without passports, telegraphing the American and English consuls to help them to their stations in the interior. It is with great difficulty that Armenian merchants obtain permission to travel in the interest of their business. The police and detectives keep a strict surveillance of all actions of the mission workers. At a reception given in honor of the return of a missionary, some happy hits were made in addresses which called forth applause. The next day a leading Armenian worker who was present at the reception was called before the chief of police to give an account of the previous night's revelry. Many questions were asked concerning who were present, what was said and done, the questions indicating that a spy had also been present at the reception. When informed that one of the speakers had said, "All things are possible with God," the chief replied, "That is a very dangerous doctrine," and added, "We have long known that you have worshiped in that place, that you sang and played on a piano, but what did that clapping of hands mean? That's what we'd like to know!"

All of this opposition to Christian missionary work is carried on under the pretext of keeping down revolution among a people who have meekly submitted and patiently endured, while their homes have been pillaged, their property destroyed, their wives and daughters outraged and a hundred thousand of their number ruthlessly slain or died of consequent starvation.

Working, waiting and watching, bearing aloft the light of the truth, are nearly two hundred American missionaries and twenty thousand Protestant Christians who believe in God and the ultimate triumph of the right. Schools, colleges and churches scattered throughout the empire are centers of light and influence which shall ultimately prevail in the land and usher in a reign of righteousness. Many of the Armenians are thirsting for knowledge and eager to be educated. The schools and colleges are overcrowded with pupils and students, and many have to be turned away because there is no room for them. The leaven of Christianity is being planted in the hearts of the people and in the process of time "they shall know the truth, and the truth shall make them free."

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

At a recent meeting of the Board of the Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia Convention, action was taken upon a matter which will prove of interest to our people in all the Eastern and Middle States.

A committee consisting of F. D. Power, J. A. Hopkins and J. Irvin Bitner, was appointed to secure an option on several hundred acres of land on the ocean coast of Delaware, near the Maryland line, to be the site for a Summer Assembly. Several capitalists are interested in the enterprise, and it is thought the land will be purchased and this year a few cottages built and the tent owned by our State Board pitched. While we shall begin in this modest way, it is hoped that the Assembly will grow until it becomes a rival of Ocean Grove.

Reports from the mission points supported jointly by the State and Home Boards were most encouraging. The Fulton Avenue Chapel, Baltimore, dedicated the first Sunday in December, is a model building and located in a growing section of this great eastern city. The lot, building and equipment cost $4,500, about one-third of which has been provided for. Milton H. H. Lee, the pastor, has entered enthusiastically upon his work. The Sunday-school is growing rapidly. If the Harlem Avenue Sunday-school is not energetic she will soon be outstripped by this enterprising daughter.

We have been slow in planting these outposts at strategic points in our eastern cities, but are now trying to make up for lost time. January 8, the Third Christian Church of Washington will open its new place of worship in the southwest section of our city. With a building fund which this young congregation had accumulated, a generous loan from the Church Extension Board, and gifts from the people of Washington and vicinity, a valuable property has been secured in the heart of a thickly populated district. A brick building, used as a bottling establishment, stood upon this lot. This structure has been converted into a church, which will seat about 300 persons. The pastor, W. J. Wright, has been architect, contractor, superintendent, laborer and worker day and night to get into the new building with the new year. His haste was due to two causes, first to save rent and secondly to prevent a rum-seller from securing a license for a saloon on the adjoining corner. It seems now that Bro. Wright will succeed in all that he has undertaken.

Benjamin Summy, the Nestor of our work in Washington, departed this life Christmas Eve of 1898. He was born in Lancaster Co., Pa., 88 years ago. When ten years of age he moved to Erie Co., New York, where he became identified with the Disciples of Christ. In 1854 he moved to this city and for many years has been one of the leaders in all matters pertaining to the welfare and growth of our people in this section. F. D. Power conducted the funeral service, delivering a very tender discourse from Acts 21:16: "And there went with us also certain disciples of Cæsarea, bringing with them one Mnason of Cyprus, an old disciple, with whom we should lodge." The appropriateness of the text was recognized as Bro. Power dwelt upon Bro Summy's long and faithful service, his strong convictions and loyalty to the truth, his life-long study of God's Word and large hospitality.

The annual report of the Ninth Street Sunday-school of this city shows an average attendance during the year of 269 and $592.64 raised for all purposes. Thirty-three have been present every Sunday and ten scholars have not missed a Sunday for six years. Our school is not yet eight years old, yet we have had in this time 1,390 names on our roll, raised $4,226.28, of which $901.51 was for missions, and best of all, 332 members of the school have confessed Christ and united with the church. The Vermont Avenue Church reports about a dozen additions recently. Rockville, Md., is pleased with its new pastor, Bro. Elmore, of Virginia. J. W. Moody is arranging for meetings at Vienna and Herndon, Va. H. J. Dudley has lately taken to himself a helpmeet. P. A. Cave is in a meeting at Hagerstown, Md. The Third Church, Richmond, Va., is delighted with S. R. Maxwell. They have something over $5,000 in sight and will begin soon to build a house of worship to accommodate the growing audiences. Z. T. Sweeney is spending the month of January in Indiana. The people who come to hear him fill every nook and corner of the great auditorium of the Seventh Street Church, Richmond. The Maryland board has engaged W. R. Watkins for special evangelistic work, and he is now on the eastern shore of Maryland.

Misleading Statistics.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: — Statistics are very apt to be misleading—especially in regard to what certain churches give. Those that are reported as giving many thousands of dollars more for missions than they use themselves are in the cities where the memberships are large and where a few very rich members swell the average up to a high mark. But suppose the membership is composed of people mostly women who earn practically nothing, and a few men, none of whom have more than days' wages, and very few of them even that much, and who deny themselves at every step of their lives to pay their meager contributions—then what is there in the nature of the case to make them desirous of giving more than they use? I know very well the difficulties that country congregations have in meeting their yearly budget of expenses. Times are getting harder and harder; people are retrenching in every way possible, and the first thing to go is the church contribution. If the rich have money to give, very good; but the credit should be given to them personally and not to the church they belong to. Most church members are poor, from the very fact that they are church members. That alone cuts them off from many avenues of wealth that are open to those who do not care how wealth is obtained, provided they get it. If any church is richer after building a $60,000 edifice, besides giving that much to charity, it is because the members have made it in the ordinary channels of business. If a man never gets more than $2.00 a day, and works 300 days in a year, it is all nonsense to say that he will get more than $600 a year, providing he contributes liberally to the church, when his expenses are fully $550. Contributions to missions should be reckoned as just so much out of our income as truly as if we had spent the same for books or clothes.

W. P. ROOT.

Medina, O.

[We fear Bro. Root has written the foregoing paragraph under an attack of the blues. The times are not what they should be by any means, but are certainly better than they have been, and the outlook for the year is still greater improvement. The criticism on pro-rata estimates of giving and on giving in the hope of greater immediate cash returns, however, are not amiss. Money should not be pressed from any person for any purpose by deceptive arguments.—EDITOR.]

Rev. J. H. Jackson's "Twenty Reasons."

Something has moved the Rev. J. H. Jackson, of St. Joseph, Mo., pastor of Hundley Methodist Church, to preach a sermon on baptism, in which he sets forth his subject in the following title: "Twenty Good and Sufficeint Reasons for Believing Effussion, i. e., Sprinkling or Pouring, the Scriptural Mode of Administering Water Baptism." This sermon was published in a St. Joseph daily paper, a copy of which has been sent to me, with a request that I review the sermon in a series of articles to be published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. As I am at all times willing to aid proper efforts in bringing out truth, it affords me pleasure to comply with this request. In so doing I shall quote every one of Mr. Jackson's reasons in full, as they are contained in the report of his sermon which, I presume, he wrote himself. This will leave no room for misrepresentation.

The sermon is introduced with the following sentence:

Such statements as, "Immersion is the only mode," "The word 'baptizo' means 'to dip,' and nothing else," "Immersion was general with all denominations up to the thirteenth century," "Commanded by Christ and practiced by the apostles," "All admit there can be no mistake when immersion is practiced," are so inwrought with error and potent of evil that they should not go unchallenged, especially when they become matter of public print.

The use of quotation marks in the foregoing excerpt, gives the impression that Mr. Jackson is quoting from a printed document. I am a little curious to know where he found the expression, "Immersion is the only mode." Immersionists do not regard immersion as a "mode" of baptism, and hence I cannot think that the foregoing statement is taken from any noted immersionist writer. Mr. Jackson appears to have edified the congregation that heard his sermon, by making a sharp and clear distinction at this point. If he had so defined baptism as to make it stand out in a clear light as discriminated from its modes, he would have performed an act helpful to all thinking people. But he left his hearers in utter confusion upon this point. The rest of the foregoing statements are fairly well put, and are in harmony with the facts in the case.

Mr. Jackson says: "We are not modists; we practice administering baptism by sprinkling, pouring and immersion." If this does not make him a "modist," it would be difficult to say what would. He practices three things which he calls modes, without defining the thing of which they are alledged modes. This certainly makes him a "modist" of the purest type. If sprinkling is a mode of baptism, what is baptism itself? The same question may be raised as to pouring and immersion. Light here would have illuminated Mr. Jackson's sermon greatly.

I now come directly to his "reasons."

First—My first reason, therefore, in favor of sprinkling and pouring for baptism, as against immersion, is that sprinkle and pour occur frequently in both the Old and New Testaments, and in connection with baptism, while neither immerse nor the equivalent is found in the Bible.

This is an unsupported assertion. Mr. Jackson seems to take it for granted that his declarations are to be taken as conclusive proof and thus he pays no very high compliment to the intelligence of his hearers. He should have cited at least one passage from the Bible, in which sprinkle or pour is clearly used of baptism. This, however, he fails to do, and for the very good reason, no doubt, that no such passage exists. When he says that neither "immersion nor the equivalent is found in the Bible," he perpetrates an egregious blunder. There is a word in the Old Testament which is therein used sixteen times, and Mr. Jackson himself says that this word is the equivalent of baptize. This word is tahbal in the Hebrew Bible and in the English Bible, both Common Version and the Revised, it is translated by "dip," or an equivalent word, and never by sprinkle or pour. Dip is the equivalent of immerse, and hence Mr. Jackson's assertion is shown to be incorrect. Besides this, there are several Latin Versions in which the word merse is used to translate the aforesaid word. In no version is it translated sprinkle or pour. In the New Testament the word baptizo is used, and this is the equivalent of immerse, as will be abundantly shown further on.

Second—The versions of the New Testament gotten out by immersionists, in which "immerse" is inserted wherever the word "baptizo" occurred, fell "stillborn" from the press, and even its friends will not use it. The travesty on the meaning of the original is too apparent.

It would require a magnifying glass to discover any reason for effusion or against immersion in this statement. Immersionists use the versions alluded to in their private study, but on account of prevailing prejudice they do not use them in their public ministry—which prejudice Mr. Jackson's sermon is very well calculated to support. That no immersionist regards the translation of the "original" by immerse as a travesty is a truth that Mr. Jackson knows very well, if he is competent to speak on this subject. No scholar regards it as a travesty.

Third—New Testament Greek is a separate and distinct idiom of the Greek language, and in it "baptizo" is never used in the sense of of immersion. (See Robinson, Greenfield and Schleusner as New Testament Greek lexicographers.)

Does Mr. Jackson understand that every idiom of a language uses words in different senses from those attached to them in other idioms of the same language? If so, he should not attempt to teach people on such matters. It is sometimes the case that a word used in a given idiom, departs from the meaning which it has in the parent language; but this is the exception, and not the rule. It is, therefore, unscholarly to assume a different meaning on idiomatic ground. He who affirms a different meaning must prove it by clear examples. This Mr. Jackson does not even attempt to do. His reference to three lexicographers can avail him nothing without quotations from them in support of his position. This he fails to do, and I assert that neither of the authors affords his position any support.

On the other hand, the very best modern New Testament lexicons give immerse as the meaning of baptizo in its New Testament use. Dr. Hermann Cremer, professor of Theology in the University of Greifswald, in his Biblico-Theological Lexicon of New Testament Greek, says: "The peculiar New Testament and Christian use of the word to denote immersion, submersion for a religious purpose, to baptize," etc. This great German scholar declares that immersion is the New Testament meaning of the word in question. Prof. E. A. Sophocles, in his Greek Lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine periods, defines the word thus: "to dip, to immerse, to sink." In addition to this he gives the following note: "There is no evidence that Luke and Paul and the other writers of the New Testament put upon this verb meanings not recognized by the Greeks." Prof. J. H. Thayer, of Harvard, in his Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament, says: "In the New Testament it is used particularly of the rite of sacred ablution first instituted by John the Baptist, afterwards by Christ's command received by Christians and adjusted to the contents and nature of their religion, viz., an immersion in water," etc. Schleusner, one of the authors referred to by Mr. Jackson, in defining the word baptisma, says: "(1) properly immersion, a dipping into water, a washing. Hence it is transferred; (2) to the sacred rite, which is par excellence called baptism, because anciently those baptized were immersed into water, that they might become obligated to the true divine religion. Thus it is used (a) concerning the baptism which John the Baptist administered by divine command."

These four distinguished authors and eminent scholars positively contradict Mr. Jackson's intimation that baptizo does not mean immerse in the New Testament, because New Testament Greek differs idiomatically from classic Greek.

Fourth—The persistent effort of immersionists to introduce classic Greek as authority is an admission of weakness.

And Mr. Jackson calls this a "reason!" Classic Greek is the foundation of all Greek and one cannot understand New Testament Greek without a knowledge of classic Greek. Dr. George Benedict Winer, in his grammar of the idiom of the New Testament, says: "For a long time, however, biblical philologists took no notice of this progress in Greek grammar and lexicography. They clung to old Viger and to Storr, and kept aloft from classical philology, under the impression * * * that New Testament Greek, because Hebraistic, could not be subjected to the same philosophical method of inquiry." The same author, in a foot-note, says: "Rational investigation must be founded on historical. The whole field of language must first be historically surveyed before we can explain individual phenomena." Mr. Jackson's investigation is not rational, because he wholly ignores classic Greek, which is the foundation of New Testament Greek, which no philologist or scientific inquirer ever does. People who have to be imposed upon by his method of inquiry are entitled to commiseration.

The Sana-Cera treatment for the cure of Catarrh, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Deafness and all diseases of the Head, Throat and Lungs.

MISS LILLIE FRUSH, Elwood, Ind., writes:—Three years ago I was a mere skeleton and thought to be a hopeless victim of Catarrhal Consumption. My entire system was saturated and diseased with the catarrhal poison. I belonged to a consumptive family and no one ever expected me to get well again; but I was placed in charge of Dr. M. Beaty who gave me his Sana-Cera treatment. Shortly, the coughing spells left me, my appetite returned, I grew stronger, increased in weight and after a 3 months' course was completely cured. I am now in perfect health and a stout hearty woman, as you will see by my photograph.

Three Months Home Treatment Free!

To introduce the Sana-Cera Cure in every community and prove that it cures when all others have failed, I will for a limited time send medicines for a 3 months treatment free. GERMANY (Wurtemburg).

Simplicity, neatness and industry are characteristics of the German women, particularly of the women of Wurtemburg. They live in a part of Germany where the climate is moderate, the land fertile, and where the standard of education is high. In such a country, among a frugal people appreciating the best and requiring full value for cash expended, the Singer sewing machine leads all others. This is not because it is sold at a lower price than other machines, but because of its superior excellence in design and manufacture.

The young peasant photographed for the national costume illustration shown in another column, is a beautiful illustration of the strong, healthy, well-trained woman of the German Empire. The most peculiar feature of her costume is the headdress, which is a modified form of the old style. Formerly a tall semi-circular crest of richly embroidered velvet, fastened to a close-fitting quilted cap of silk, encircled the head from ear to ear. Four wide streamers of ribbon hung from the back. Now a small, round, velvet cap takes the place of the crested one, but the ribbons are still worn.

University Credit for Biblical Study.

[The following clear statement by one of the leading professors of the University (professor of biology) expresses the conviction of many prominent educators in regard to giving credit for Bible study in the regular University course.—C. A. YOUNG.]

The law of Virginia, which prohibits in all state institutions the use of money derived from the taxation of the people for the maintenance of religious instruction, appears to me to be wise and right. The experience of states in which no such law exists shows that its absence invites a struggle for predominance which may lead to the control of the educational and charitable institutions of the state by some one religious body to the practical exclusion of others and to the use of state funds for purposes far from religious. The history of Virginia shows that the disestablishment of what was practically a state church which this law effected was not only an act of justice to those dissenting from its tenets, but also a direct good not only to the people of the state at large but also to the cause of religion and to the very denomination which it dispossessed of its supremacy.

With this belief I join the conviction, based on the observation and experience of a quarter of a century of professional work, that no system of education can afford to lose sight of the great truths of religion, and the earnest belief that what is called the higher education can least afford to do so; and this for two reasons. The very fact that it is the higher education renders it necessary that it should take cognizance of that knowledge which is highest and most important of all: the study of all literature, all history, all science and all philosophy ought to bring the student to a reverent contemplation of the great problem of existence and of our relation to the God whose children we are. The great end of education, moreover, is the formation of character rather than mere educational discipline; the period of student-life is that in which the mind of the youth is opening, expanding, passing from the state of childhood to the responsibility of manhood; and as a means of shaping not only his character but his whole destiny, it is of the first importance that he shouid not only bear the truths of religion preached from the pulpit on Sunday, but there shall be opportunity through the channel of his daily duties to bring him face to face wth the practical question, "What shall I do with Jesus, who is called Christ?"

The laws of Virginia neither forbid nor discourage religious instruction at any state institution, but only the use of state money for that purpose and the dissemination of the particular tenets of any religious body. As a fact, religious instruction of a non-sectarian character can be and is given at all the public institutions of the state, but such instruction must necessarily be dependent upon private effort or special endowment. Such instructions has been given at the University of Virginia since its earliest history, the members of the faculty, aided largely by the students, and to some extent by the persons living in the neighborhood, providing the means for the maintenance of religious services daily and upon Sunday (attendance upon both of which is noncompulsory), and individual members conducting Bible classes and giving courses of lectures upon religious subjects. To their efiorts have been added for the last forty years the labors of the Young Men's Christian Association, which is constantly increasing in extent and efficiency.

The amount of work thus accomplished by individual effort has been neither small in quantity nor insignificant in its results. There is still room, however, for more instruction in religious matters and particularly for more definitely organized instruction, such as can only be adequately provided for by special endowment. As far as my knowledge goes, all propositions looking to such endowments have, until recently, been in the interests of particular denominations, and have not, therefore, met with encouragement. In common with a number of my colleagues, I have for sometime hoped that some one or some organization that cared more for the upbuilding of Christian manhood than for the spread of denominationalism would make provision here for systematic religious instruction and Bible study on a purely unsectarian bases.

When, therefore, Mr. Young came to us three years ago as the representative of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and proposed on their behalf to make provision here for a course of Bible study on such a basis, my heart went out to him. I was glad for the sake of the University and of the young men therein to welcome his proposition, and joined with my colleagues as, without one dissenting voice, we assured him that every facility in our power would be afforded for the carrying out of his plans.

The experience of the years that have just passed has demonstrated the wisdom of this movement. The courses of instruction have increased in length, in extent of the subjects discussed, and in the depth and thoroughness of the instruction given, as well as in the interest in them manifested by the students; they have been carried out in every case with the primary purpose of giving to the young men pursuing them a more intimate, more intelligent and more reverent knowledge of the Bible and of the great truths contained therein; and I am convinced that they have been a direct power for good. Peasonally, I feel grateful to the society by whose benevolence they exist and to whose thoroughly evangelical spirit we owe it that they have been put upon the purely undenominational basis which has made it possible for us to give them place at the University without giving just cause of offence to any body of citizens of the state, all of whom have equal rights at the University.

I trust that this work is here to stay, and I hope that it will speedily grow to such an extent in the amount and the character of the instruction given, that it may readily find a place in the regular schedule of studies open to students, those completing the work thoroughly and satisfactorily receiving credit for the same as in other courses of instruction.

Campbell on the Ageney of the Holy Spirit.

[Following is the quotation from Mr. Campbell to which you referred in the Budget of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Jan. 5, in connection with an alleged statement of Elder Vardeman. I give the connection so your readers will fully grasp Mr. Campbell's meaning. The whole debate is interesting and should be in print again.—A. B. MOORE, Mansfield, O.]

I would not, sir, value at the price of a single mill, the religion of any man, as respects the grand affair of eternal life, whose religion is not begun, carried on, and completed by the personal agency of the Holy Spirit. . . . But while avowing these my convictions, I have no more fellowship with those false and pernicious theories that confound the peculiar work of the Father with that of the Son, or with that of the Holy Spirit, or which represents our illumination, conversion and sanctification as the work of the Spirit without the knowledge, belief and obedience of the gospel, as written by the holy apostles and evangelists, than I have with the author and furnisher of the book of Mormon.—Campbell-Rice Debate, p. 616.

[As to the "figment" referred to, hear Mr. Campbell's wn words.—A. B. M.]

What is Christian faith? It is a belief of testimony. It is a persuasion that God is true, that the gospel is divine. Not merely a cold assent to truth, to testimony, but a cordial, joyful consent to it and reception of it. Still it is dependent on testimony. No testimony, no faith. The Spirit of God gave the testimony first; it bore witness to Jesus; something to believe; that something must be heard before it can be believed. . . Faith is, therefore, impossible without language, and consequently without the knowledge of language, and that language understood. An infant cannot have faith; it needs neither faith, nor regeneration, nor baptism. It was a figment of St. Augustine, adopted by Calvin, propagated in his institutes and adopted by his children.

These infant regenerators are lame in both limbs: in the right limb of faith and in the left of philosophy. . . They will have infants regenerated, and souls morally dead quickened by a direct impulse. The Spirit of God is supposed to incubate their souls—to descend upon them and work a grace within them, a faith without reason, without argument, evidence, intelligence, perception, fear, hope, love, confidence or approbation.

The whole system of Calvinism, of Arminianism, is crazy just at this point. They pile mountains on an egg; they build palaces on ice and repose on couches of ether.

They have not one clear idea on the subject of regeneration. To them it is a mystic mystery. They have the Spirit of God operating without testimony, apprehension or comprehension, sense, susceptibility or feeling, and all this for sake of a worse than useless theory. I, therefore, ex animo, repudiate their whole theory of mystic influence and metaphysical regeneration, as a vision of visions, a dream of dreams, at war with philosophy, with the Bible, with reason, common sense and with all Christian experience.—Ibid, pp. 618, 619.

One of Grandmother's Tales.—"Two of my grandchildren," relates Mrs. Sarah A. Forshey, McVeytown, Pa., "derived great benefit from Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. One was scrofulous, its head covered with sores and the eyes so affected that it could hardly see at times. The other had a kind of dysentery, nothing would stay on its stomach and the child became greatly emaciated so that it was nothing but skin and bones. Two physicians treated the children without result. We almost gave up when Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer was recommended to us and it worked wonders. The scrofulous symptoms disappeared, the bowels became regulated, the stomach acted and we became convinced that Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer doesn't find its equal."

Kentucky University's Centennial.

This institution has entered the second century of its usefulness, under its modern title, by which our people know of its work. Its predecessor, Transylvania University, with which Kentucky University was consolidated, began its university career January, 1799. On the evening of Jan. 1st, very interesting exercises were held in the chapel. The ministers of the city, prominent citizens from other places, including the governor of the state and his staff and educators from the leading colleges of the state were on the platform. The audieuce was fully representative of the best citizenship of the community. The program was varied and leaders of other churches and schools were represented on it. The devotional and musical features were edifying and enjoyable. A detailed account of the program might be of interest, but the space must be devoted to the more important matters. There were two leading addresses, Pres. E. D. Warfield, LL.D., of Lafayette College, Pennsylvania, whose great-grandfather was one of Transylvania's first officers, whose grandfather was an early graduate and who was himself a student in Kentucky University, made the chief address. It was good, clear and strong in its views of our obligation to prevent the secularizing of education. I quote one paragraph which may fairly represent the position and tone of President Warfield's address. He said:

By Christian education I mean to distinguish that education which regards a student from the standpoint of obligation to God from every other conception. For several hundred years a rationalizing influence has been at work insisting that education has only one function—the imparting of knowledge. Over against this Christian education has set up its banner and has battledfor a teaching, a training and an inspiration which has for its highest object the making of man. Ours is a Christian civilization. It rose upon the views of Greek thought and Roman rule, because it has a deeper purpose and a sounder basis than they. It trained and developed the forceful energies of the wild forest men of Germany. And out of those various elements by the subtle influence of Christian sense of obligation and love created our modern world. Now, when we are all partakers of its benefits, when we enjoy its liberty, delight in its equalily and rest in its hope, men who are its beneficiaries seek to escape its obligations.

The points here indicated were treated at some length. President Warfield was well received and heartily applauded.

Pres. J. W. McGarvey, of the College of the Bible, then gave a sketch of the century's history of the institution. He is an adept at historical narrative and though the hour was late, he interested and instructed a delighted audience. These exercises are merely a beginning.

The University authorities intend more elaborate exercises during commencement week in June. It is earnestly expected that this centennial year will bring very material aid to the university. It is in every way worthy the confidence of any people. Its work is a credit to us, its graduates have no small share in shaping affairs in our national life and its promise of usefulness for coming years is very considerable.

For the information of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a few items concerning the present condition of the work are here added. The attendance on the College of Liberal Arts is larger than usual, the new students are much better prepared for admission and the work done is encouraging to the faculty and friends of the University. The Medical College, located at Louisville for good chemical facilities, promises to do much to increase the reputation of the University. The great reputation of Transylvania was largely due to its medical department, for its professors were eminent in their calling and students came, even in that early time, by hundreds to obtain their medical education. If the present medical college worthily follows its earlier example, Kentucky University will have high rank in medical circles.

The Commercial College has a large attendance, furnishes a thoroughly practical business education and fills with graduates many important positions in the business world.

Perhaps Kentucky University is best known to our brotherhood because of the College of the Bible. This school has for nearly a third of a century stood for a thoroughly biblical training of its students for the practical ministry of the gospel. Students in its classes are all required to carry forward their literary studies in the College of Liberal Arts. No one here thinks for a moment that any mere study of the Bible alone will suffice. Yet it is true that there is no other school among us where face-to-face study of the Bible text itself is continued for so long or so thoroughly. It is gratifying to state that students are coming more and more with better preparation to enter this college. The better men are prepared for work the more benefit can the college give them. The faculty are planning to add advanced work so that graduate students may spend another year in more thorough preparation for the ministry. This will meet the growing demand for advanced work in strictly Bible study, which after all is the necessary course for ministers.

Kentucky University looks forward hopefully, seeks to merit the confidence and attendance of more and better students and trusts God's providence to raise up funds, who in material things will equip the institution for larger usefulness. B. C. DEWEESE.

The "Jubilee City."

The readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will perhaps be interested in a few facts and figures concerning the churches in the city toward which all roads lead for 1899, to its Jubilee Convention. The "Jubilee City" is not the Cincinnati of Uncle Sam's post office calendar, but the "Queen City," lying between the hills of Ohio and Highlands of Kentucky and the double score of beautiful suburbs crowning the many hills contiguous to the more busy valley. The surly old Ohio will never permit a "Greater Cincinnati," but the two greater cities and the many suburbs become one "Jubilee City" for the hosts of our Lord in the year of his grace, 1899.

The following is gathered from the reports of the various churches at the close of 1898:

Total resident members	3,800

The "Central" of Cincinnati cares for two mission Sunday-schools. The First of Covington, for one, and also ministers to the Milldale Church, while the young Norwood Church supplies Madisonville with regular Sunday afternoon preaching.

The "movement all along the line" has hold of these churches and the year '99 will be even more prosperous than the one gone. The following is a roster of the preachers:

On the Ohio side: Central, A. M. Harvout; Walnut Hills, S. D. Dutcher; Richmond St., Justin N. Green; Cumminsville, J. K. Hester; Eastern Av., J. A. Pine; Camp Washington, E. W. Symonds; Norwood, A. W. Taylor; Carthhge, E. K. Van Winkle; Lackland, W. O. Thomas; Mt. Healthy, A. C. Gray; Madisonville, ———; Terrace Park, H. K. Pendleton; Fairmont, J. A. Lawrence.

On the Kentucky side: First, Covington, Geo. A. Miller; Fourth St., Covington, H. J. Seaman; Central, Newport, J. A. Erwin; First, Newport, —. —. Stewart; Bellevue, R. D. Harding; Ludlow, P. H. Duncan; Milldale, ———.

J. K. Hester will be the first to break these ranks in the new year. He resigned some months ago, but continues work until Feb. 1. His pastorate of nearly two years has been successful. The church at Ashland, O., has tendered him a proposition, but he has not yet accepted work.

Three new churches have been organized during the year and one house built. Others are in prospect. A. W. TAYLOR.

Cured of Cancer of Twenty-Four Years Standing.

I was for twenty-four years a sufferer from a cancer the size of a quarter of dollar on the temple. I am rejoiced to bear witness that, under the care and treatment of Dr. Rinehart, I am permanently cured, and there remains but slight evidence, even by scar, that a cancer ever existed there. I can most heartily recommend his treatment and skill to all afflicted with cancer or skin diseases, and will answer all letters of inquiry if a stamped envelope is enclosed. Respectfully,

A well-qualified young man desires the position of pastor, either all or part of the time. In view of being employed on approval, he wil make any church a trial visit for expenses. Address L., Box 379, Eureka, Ill.

We begin a meetidg with home forces this evening. Our year's expenses are all paid an we have a small sum on hand to begin the New Year with. Pray for us and the work now in hand. J. H. FULLER.

Burlington, Ia.

J. D. Carson began his seventh year with the church at Remington, Ind., with the present year. The work he says is in splendid condition. T. J. Shuey will assist him in a meeting in that place in February. The church expects to rebuild its house next year. He says that the interest of Fountain Park Assembly is widening beyond the hopes of the most sanguine. A splendid. program for 1899 is almost completely arranged.

Our first Lord's day service gave us one confession. Bro. J. B. Mayfield has been recalled to the service of the church in Lewistown, Fulton Co., Ill., and ha moved there. Began his work the first Lord's day in this year. Brethren Abott, Sallee and Mayfield have left us during the last year. I miss them much, but this is a world of changes.

E. J. LAMPTON.

Louisiana, Mo., Jan. 6, 1899.

I am now away from home on an evangelizing tour, holding a meeting in a destitute place where there are a few Disciples, in a neighborhood a few miles from Danbury in Red Willow Co., Neb. Have fair sized audiences and fine attention, and hope to do a good work. I could do much more than I am doing, but am handicapped on account of finances.

C. P. EVANS.

J. F. Callahan from Nobles, Ohio, has been with us six weeks looking for homes for himself and others. John Evans has bought and will move in March. We look for others soon. Our Sunday-school numbered 40 last Sunday. The Bible readers reported 736 chapters read in six weeks. One R. R. Co. is building and another is surveying through the country. We need workers. Brethren of limited means needing homes, now is the time to secure them. Address with stamps,

W. A. STREATOR.

Cardiff, Ark., Dec. 28, 1898.

Willis M. Cunningham, of Franklin, Ind., rounded out the year with 45 additions to the church; $117.46 were contributed by the three churches for missions. The C. E. Society of the Fillmore Christian Church made an increase of more than two hundred per cent. during the past year. He found the church there considerably in debt, but left it with all debts paid and money in the treasury. The official board passed resolutions highly commending his ministry among them, and on the last night of his year, the Ladies' Aid Society gave him a handsome financial gift, the whole amount of which, he says, will be used in missionary work.

According to report sent to us, the year 1898 was the best in the history of the Church of Christ at Cameron, Mo. The total expenditures of the church for the year were $3,802.64. This is for all purposes. An especially noteworthy item in the report is the increase—400 per cent.—of contributing members over 1897. Would that all churches could make a similar report. During the year the church had 39 additions and closed 1898 with 685 names on its register. The new year started in encouragingly, there being five additions at the services New Year's night. S. J. White is the pastor.

The following extract from the Report of their National Superintendent of Christian Endeavor shows its growth among the Disciples: "In October, 1892, at the Nashville Convention, there were 1,321 societies reported; in 1893, Chicago, 1,685; Richmond, in 1894, 2,446; Dallas, in 1895, 3,085; Springfield, 1896, 3,654; Indianapolis, 1897, 3,987. Through all these years there has been a steady growth, but it was intimated at the time of the last report that the Christian Endeavor movement had probably reached the limit of its numerical increase among the Disciples. The report today presents a total of 4,633 societies among us—an increase of 646 societies since last report. This increase represents not only a healthy and normal growth, but it indicates the advantage of systematic and persistent effort in collecting statistics. These figures have been prepared with laborious care, not resorting to the easy expedient of 'guessing at half, and multiplying by two.'"

Sometime ago it was agreed between Rev. Burnham and his congregation that they should raise $2,000 in new pledges by the first of the year 1899, to be paid upon the church debt. In order to do this the new pledges were given in the form of notes, payable to the trustees and due Jan 1, 1899. Rev. Burnham worked earnestly and faithfully every spare minute of his time and Christmas morning was able to make the joyous announcement to his congregation that more than the $2,000 had been pledged and that the notes were fast being paid off. Added to this amount is the $1,000 which the Ladies' Aid has paid during the last year, making a grand total paid during the year over $3,000.

This was indeed news for rejoicing and the congregation is loud in its praise of the noble and unselfish manner in which their pastor has labored to attain this end, and as a mark of their appreciation of his excellent services, voted to raise his salary $100 per year. It has indeed been a prosperous year for this church, and we join in the earnest wish that next year will be even more so than this, and heartily congratulate both pastor and people on their good fortune. We begin the new year with all incidental expenses paid and money on hand. We began a meeting Jan. 1st. Bro. J. T. Alsup is assisting Bro. Burnhan.

Charleston, Ill. W. L. HARDING.

The Canton Jubilee.

I spent a happy day with the church at Canton January 4th. I was pastor there for five years, during which time two houses were built. J. P. Lichtenberger followed me immediately and has been pastor for two and a half years. Over two hundred have been added to the church under his regular and special revival meetings. In the past nine months he has led the church in a successful effort to pay all its debt. The total was $9,009.31. This was all paid. Half of this amount was given by Mrs. M. E. Whitnah and her son, C. L. Whitnah, and her daughter, Mrs. Rohrer. They made a Jubilee Day of it. N. S. Haynes preached the morning sermon, and in the afternoon the city pastors extended hearty congratulations. I had the honor of burning the canceled mortgages and a number of our brother preachers were present to praise and prophesy. At night Bro Scofield, of Carthage, delivered a popular lecture. Bro. Lichtenberger began his third revival the next night. With a congregation free from debt, numbering over five hundred, aggressive and united, he will have a great meeting. Under his magnificent leadership we have assurance of good reports from Canton church. Pray for them.

We have a splendid church, a good congregation out of debt and at peace with among ourselves. We want a good blacksmith and a general merchant here. Splendid openings for both. Only members of the Christian Church in good standing need apply. Write to J. O. Rowland, Avoca, Neb.

A Church Building Saved.

When, on the 11th of December, 1898, it was found quite sure that we would be able to save our splendid church building at Huntington, West Virginia, it brought so much rejoicing that we—Bro. A. E. Zeigler, the former pastor, and I, the present pastor—began a meeting. It continued 10 days and 22 were added. Our building was advertised to be sold for debts amounting to more than $10,000. The good people of the great Church of Christ came to our aid through the Church Extension Board. Bro. Muckley came, and by the offer to pay $5,000 of the amount if the brethren would raise the balance, and clear the church of debt. By the splendid work of Brethren Muckley and Zeigler and others, and a big-hearted people, the amount was raised. Thus during the last 10 days of our pastorate in Huntington, West Virginia, the church building was saved from the sheriff's hammer, and 22 added to the church. More later. I am now ready to blow the Church Extension bugle. G. M. WEIMER.

A Good Report.

January 6th was Annual Day at the Edward Street Church of Christ. Financial reports showed more than three thousand dollars raised during the year. In the past two years we have incurred no debt. We have paid a considerable sum for improvements on the properties, have paid interest on $5,400 debt assumed at the organization of the congregation two years ago, and have reduced this amount to $4,000. This includes the payment of a mortgage of $785.85 on our mission property. Our enrolled membership is 306. Near three hundred dollars were given to missions and education. Eighty-seven families take our religious papers. Pastor receives an increase of salary this year. We have decided to begin at once the erection of a comfortable, commodious and modern house. Rejoice with us and pray for us. MARION STEVENSON.

This Will Interest Many.

F. W. Parkhurst, the Boston publisher, says that if any one who is afflicted with rheumatism in any form, or neuralgia, will send their address to him at Box 1501, Boston, Mass., he will direct them to a perfect cure. He has nothing to sell or give; only tells you how he was cured. Hundreds have tested it with success.

Made Progress.

The Sixth and Prospect Avenue Church of this city had 123 additions during the year 1898, net gain, 87, present membership, 942. This church has had a net gain of over 600 during the last six years. Money raised in all departments, $7,500. Money raised for missions, nearly $1,800. Missionary offerings have increased fourfold within the last four years.

From the Black Hills.

So far as I can ascertain there is but one society of Disciples in the Hills. This is a little band at Spearfish. We have no church here, but we worship with the Congregationalists and find them a very devout and lovable people.

I have been using all my efforts to bring about a union service—a union meeting. With the right evangelist and sensible methods, such a meeting would do great good here.

A few of us from the Hills held a conference meeting in Deadwood last year with a view to organizing a church there, but the outlook was so discouraging we abandoned the idea. Bro. Crow and family were then residents of Deadwood, but since have moved away.

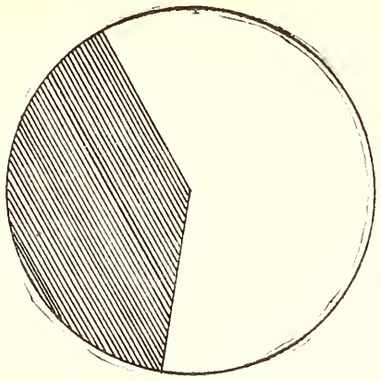
The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a wonderful comfort to us away out here in our mountain home where we really have no church home. It is a very dear friend who comes each week into our very hearts. May God still continue to bless you even more abundantly in the future in wisdom and words of good cheer than in the past. Fraternally,

C. M. PINKERTON.

Church Extension Notes.

There was a full meeting of the board on Jan. 3rd. Devotional services were conducted by T. R. Bryan. The receipts for the month of December were very gratifying, being $1,503.53 in excess of December '97.

The receipts for December, from all sources, are as follows: Collected by Cor. Sec. were $2,389.50; interest collected by treasurer, $664.97; collected on loans by the treasurer, $1,932.27, making a total of $4,986.74. The amount now in the Extension Fund is nearly $175,000.



The month of December has been most gratifying in the way of closing up loans, and some of the most important work ever done by the board was accomplised during December. The following loans were closed during December: Harvey, Ill., $400; Las Animas, Col., $200; Third Church, Washington, D. C., $4,000; for saving the church properity at Huntington, W. Va., from sale by mortgage $5,000; Chippewa Falls, Wis., $250; Ottawa, Kan., $1,000; Stillwater, O. T., $400; near St. Bernice, Ind., $300; Claude, Tex., $200; Wyckliffe, Ky., $600. Total, $12,350.

It will be noticed that our treasury is rapidly becoming empty. The demands upon this board are very great. The following churches called for aid in December: Waukomis, O. T., Maxes Valley, Ky., Ina, Ill., Hamilton, Mo., 169th St. Mission, N. Y. City, Elk, Tex., Harrisburg, Pa., Chandler, O. T., Pheonix, Ariz., Pocahontas, Ia., Springvale, O. T., West Point, O. T., Morgantown, W. Va., Marfa, Tex., Luther, O. T., and Macon, Ga.

The first quarter of the new missionary year has been very gratifying in results, both in the collecting of new money, returned loans and in closing up loans. The total new receipts since Oct. 1st are $9,686.48, being more than one-third of the entire new receipts of last year. The returned loans amount to $5,377.23, being more than one-third of the entire amount returned last year. Though receipts are gratifying the demands are constantly increasing. The amount paid out to churches since Oct. 1st is $15,000.

To reach $250,000 by the close of 1900, we must have at least $32,000 of new receipts for the year 1899 and $33,000 for 1900. This is not impossible and we certainly can reach it. Remit to the writer, G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., Kansas City, Mo.

Remarkable Growth.

The above circle represents the 2,900 churches that contributed to Foreign Missions last year. The gray section represents the 1,200 churches that were contributing five years ago. The white section represents the 1,700 contributing churches that have been enlisted during the past five years. It will be seen the number of contributing churches has been more than doubled in five years.

The March offering for Foreign Missions is again at hand. Shall we not make a bold, united and persistent effort to enlist every church during this glad Jubilee Year? This ought to be done, for—

1. A church must be a missionary church if it would be a Church of Christ.
2. The Foreign Society has now 204 workers in foreign lands, including native evangelists, or 41 more than one year ago.
3. New missionaries are to be sent to Africa, Japan and other fields during the year.
4. Cuba is to be entered. Two missionaries will be sent to Havana soon.
5. Missions is the work of the Church of Christ.
6. Our greatest shame as a religious people is the comparatively few churches that are contributing to Foreign Missions.

Begin to make announcements and other preparations at once. We furnish March offering envelopes, the March offering number Missionary Voice and Pastoral Letter (for preachers only), all free of charge. Order now!

Made Progress.

The work at Macomb is moving on fairly well. I have been here fourteen months. Several have been added to the membership, a new roof put on the church, a new sidewalk built and paid for. Also our old debt paid; so that the congregation is now out of debt. All the missionary and benevolent objects of the church have been presented and the church responded. We are trying hard to make this one of our best missionary churches. During the year just closed the church has raised for all purposes about $1,700.

Frankford, Jan. 10.—In December I held a meeting with James E. Donovan at Warrenton. Nine additions. Church employed Bro. Donovan for 1899. This is our only organization in Warren County. Bro. Donovan is held in high esteem.—CRAYTON S. BROOKS.

A GOOD PRACTICE.

If You Want a Good Appetite and Perfect Digestion.

After each meal dissolve one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in the mouth and, mingling with the food, they constitute a perfect digestive, absolutely safe for the most sensitive stomach.

They digest the food before it has time to ferment, thus preventing the formation of gas and keeping the blood pure and free from the poisonous products of fermented, half-digested food.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets make the complexion clear by keeping the blood pure.

They increase flesh by digesting flesh-forming foods.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the only remedy designed especially for the cure of stomach troubles and nothing else.

One disease, one remedy, the successful physician of today is the specialist, the successful medicine is the medicine prepared especially for one disease.

A whole package taken at one time would not hurt you, but would simply be a waste of good material.

Over six thousand men and women in the state of Michigan alone have been cured of indigestion and dyspepsia by the use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Sold by all druggists at 50 cents per package.

As stated in our last issue the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, from the wonderful Kava-Kava shrub, is proving a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disordered action of the kindneys and Bladder. The New York World publishes the remarkable case of Rev. A. C. Darling, minister of the gospel at North Constantia, New York, cured by Alkavis, when, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing himself for certain death. Following is his letter in full:

North Constantia, Oswego Co., New York.
GENTLEMEN:—

I have been troubled with kidney and kindred diseases for sixteen years and tried all I could get without relief. Two years and a half ago I was taken with a severe attack of La Grippe, which turned to pneumonia. At that time my Liver, Kidneys, Heart and Urinary Organs all combined in what to me seemed their last attack. My confidence in man and medicine had gone. My hope had vanished and all that was left to me was a dreary life and certain death. At last I heard of Alkavis and as a last resort I commenced taking it. At this time I was using the vessel as often as sixteen times in one night, without sleep or rest. In a short time, to my astonishment, I could sleep all night as soundly as a baby, which I had not done in sixteen years before. What I know it has done for me, I firmly believe it will do for all who will give Alkavis a fair trial. I most gladly recommend Alkavis to all. Sincerely yours,

(Rev.) A. C. DARLING.

Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from others, including many ladies. Mrs. Mary A. Layman, of Neel, W. Va., twenty years a sufferer; Mrs. Sarah Vunk, Edinboro, Pa., Mrs. L. E. Copeland, Elk River, Minnesota; and many others join in testifying to the wonderful curative powers of Alkavis in various forms of Kidney and allied diseases, and of other troublesome afflictions peculiar to womanhood.

So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, of No. 420 Fourth Avenue, New York, are its only importers, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, difficult or too frequent passing water, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

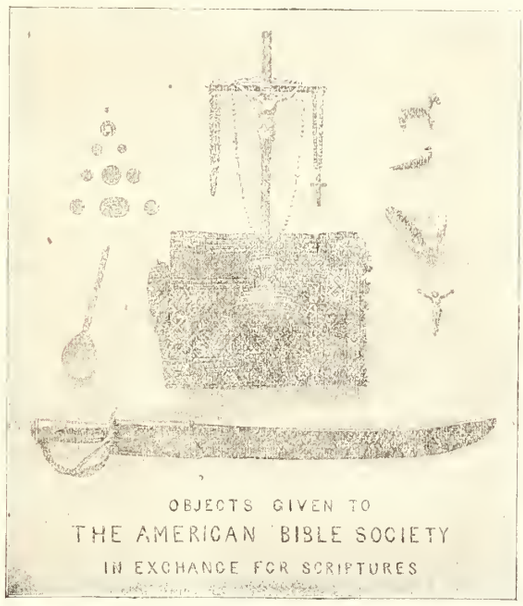
Saying and Doing.

BY WILL H. DIXON.

'Tis the doing, not the saying,
That will win the hardest fight;
Then let us work without delaying,
Face the conflict, do the right;
Hear the Savior gently pleading
To his children here below;
Do not linger then unheeding,
For we will reap just what we sow.



Let us sow good seed, then all around us
Scatter sunshine full and free,
And God's blessing will surround us
Where'er we go on land or sea;
Let's not wait, then, idly saying
To the world what we will do,
But let us work without delaying,
Standing steadfast, brave and true.

But let us heed the Master's calling;
He has work for each to do;
All round us men are falling,
And the laborers are few;
Then to the work without delaying;
Soon will fall the shades of night;
'Tis the doing, not the saying,
That will conquer in the fight.

The American Bible Society.

Unless you are an interested reader in the doing of this society you can have no idea of the vastness of its work and good in the world. It is translating the Bible into every language and carrying it to the ends of the earth. It does not depend on accidental circumstances to spread the Word of God in the world, but by the use of colporteurs does the work in a systematic way. Through the courtesy of this society we are enabled to give our readers a cut of two of their colporteurs in Armenia, a cut of things which they sometimes have to take in exchange for Bibles, and also a cut of some of the translations into which it is translated and printed that the different peoples of the earth may have the Word of God in their own tongue. Some of the benefits of the work of this society are that it keeps the price of Bibles at the lowest cost, searches out the poor and the neglected who would otherwise never own a Bible, and also supplies the army, navy, hospitals and prisons. The volumes of Bibles distributed in various lands by this society is enormous. In China more than half a million copies of the Bible were distributed last year, and the total distribution in the Chinese Empire now amounts to 6,394,061 volumes. Time would fail us to tell of what it has done in other lands. Now all of this work, and much more done by this society not yet named, costs money and the money has to come by volunteer offerings. The society was never in greater need for money than now, because of the increased opportunities and demands, and those who love their work never had a better opportunity to support it by a free-will offering than now. The society is undenominational. The Scriptures are simply published without comment, and distributed without denominational bias. These colporteurs are missionaries of the Word of God and have to endure many hardships as do other missionaries in the foreign field, and are most worthy of support. We trust that you will inform yourself of the work this society is doing, if you have not already done so, and that you will find it in your heart to make a liberal offering to extend its usefulness in the world. A subscriber at one time of $30 becomes a life member, and of $150 at one time a life director of the society. Offerings in any amount, however, will be thankfully received. All offerings should be sent to Rev. Frederick D. Green, financial agent, Bible House, New York.

THREE WAYS OF SEEING.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.—Matt. 7:20.

Three friends met around one hearthstone when the twilight was deepening and the blaze from the grate sent out flickering flames of light.

It was a time for exchange of thought, and presently Bro. Pessimist (whom, for the sake of politeness, we will call Bro. P.) said to the others, Bro. O. (whose real name was Optimist) and Bro. Commonsense·

"Last eve I sat in the firelight, as we sit to-night, thinking of the prodominance of evil in the world, and I saw as in a vision, the church. She was beautiful and undefiled; clad in garments of purest white; untainted and unspotted from the world, and by her fruits she was known.

"But the world stood nigh, singing a merry song; and he beckoned to the church and said:

" 'Come this way, my friend. Give me your hand. Walk with me a little way. But the church drew back and hid behind her the hand that was as white as snow. Then the world with his kindliest air spoke again:

" 'Only a little way. No harm shall come of it. All is joyous and fair along my path; its sun is always shining; it is flowery and smooth and broad, and my gate is wide. There is plenty of room for you to journey beside me.'

"But the church drew back again and said:

" 'Your path is the way to endless death.' And the sly old world again urged:

" 'But come only a little way. Think of your path that is so often thorny and rough, while I am continually moving in circles of joy. Come.' And the church advanced half shyly, and half hesitatingly she extended her snowy hand which the world eagerly grasped and exultingly held fast; and bending low, he whispered:

" 'You have been denying yourself too much in that respect. Come with me. I have velvets and silks with which to clothe your graceful form; I have pearls for your hair and diamonds to sparkle upon your white fingers, and the church looked down upon her plain white robes, then at the elegant world, and blushed to see his handsome lip curl with contempt.

" 'I will change my dress for a costlier one,' she said. So her pure, white garments were laid aside and in their place came the gleaming satins and beautiful silks that the world gave to her; and her hair she dressed in curls and coils that blazed with costliest gems.

" 'Your house is too plain,' was the world's next complaint, and then he built for her a splendid, costly edifice, where her sons and daughters met to hold frolics untold; and where they invented the very cunningest tricks to gull and amuse and win from the world some help for the righteous cause.

"Then soon—very soon—these sons and daughters were off to the dance; to the theater; and some to the gay saloons. Then the church longed once more t gather her children in. Her heart smote her. But the world hushed her fears by assuring her that her children meant no harm; that they were merely indulging in innocent sport, etc., etc. So the church leaned on this gay deceiver's proffered arm, and laughed and chatted while millions of precious souls were being lost.

"'Your preachers are too old and plain,' the world next said, and soon the plain old ministers of the cross were turned out of the pulpits to give place to young and gay divines who smiled at the innocent (?) pleasures of the world, and preached to please the people, and were very careful lest they offend Bro. Mammon who came in and rented the most prominent pew.

"The world looked on exultant and next complained:

"'You give too much to the poor. Of course they need food and shelter, but that need not trouble you. Neither need you trouble yourself about the heathen. God will care for them as he cares for the fowls of the air. Use your money to buy horses and carriages, rich food and costly wines.

"So the church held tight her purse-strings and the poor was turned from her door; the orphan's cry was not heard; the mission treasuries became empty. She sat down at her ease; she danced and feasted; she walked hand-in-hand with the world, and none could tell them apart. And the sly old world laughed in his sleeve at her fall.

"With a start I awoke. The figures vanished as if by magic. And as I sat and thought upon the vision I wondered if, indeed, it were all a dream, or whether it did not truly show forth the condition of the church as it is to-day."

Then up spoke Bro. O.:

"Friend P., that vision came of your unhealty state of mind. How can you say that evil predominates and that the church walks hand-in-hand with the world, etc., when every day and all the time we see evidences of her unselfish work. You forget how many of Christ's followers understand that their wealth is but an instrument placed in their hands by the Heavenly Father, to be used for the benefit of their fellow-creatures. You forget how the orphan is cared for; how the sick and the poor are looked after; how consecrated men and women answer the command, 'Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature' by saying: 'Here am I; send me,' and who forsake all to preach deliverance to the captives. You forget that vice is being put down; that sin is being banished; that everything is working out for the best, and that God's providence is over all and that his righteousness will ultimately triumph."

Then up spoke Bro. Commonsense:

"My friends, you are both partly right and both very much wrong. The man who believes and advocates the idea that evil predominates and will finally conquer is, in reality, an atheist, no matter what he may pretend to be, while the easy-going optimist who refuses to see things as they really are, who makes no issue with them, is even worse.

"What we need is the Christian who sees and recognizes existing evils; who takes note of the wrongs that afflict both church and state, but who never despairs because of his belief in humanity and faith in God."

The pessimist may help to awaken the public conscience to the evils existing, the optimist may declare that they do not exist or that everything is for the best, but the Christian of faith and common sense, sees things as they really are, and fights with the weapons that God gives to the faithful. He meets sin in its den and vice in its liar. He never wavers—never gives up. And if on this earth he does not see any great results of his work which may be but a drop in the bucket, so much is there to do, yet he feels that his efforts have not been lost, for he knows that the slightest deed, if done "in his name," will live on and on, and be a power for good in the great strife that is ever going on between right and wrong.

My Sweetheart!

My sweetheart is fair, she has light golden hair,
And her eyes are a heavenly blue.
There is beauty and grace in her figure and face;
Her nature is tender and true.
Her smile is as bright as the morning sunlight;
Her laugh is bewitchingly mellow.
With a sweetheart like this most adored little miss,
I think I'm a fortunate fellow.

This dear little miss always gives me a kiss,
Whenever she happens to spy me.
She doesn't care who hears her say, "I love you!"
And she says it whene'er she is by me.
She'd just kissed me one day, when my wife came that way—
MY WIFE—think of that! and she caught her!
That made trouble for me? Not a bit; for, you see,
That sweetheart of mine is my daughter!

Horses with Brains in Their Heads.

"Big Jack" is not the only intelligent New York horse that Mrs. Gabrielle E. Jackson tells about in the article, under that title, in the January St. Nicholas. There are, she says, a great many very clever and very beautiful horses in our big city. Indeed, Wee Winkles and I know several ourselves. "Billy Borden," for instance, who knows his milk route so well that his driver has only to say, "8 West 66th, Billy," or "9 West 65th, Billy," to have him go at once to these addresses, or any other with which he is familiar. Again, he will say: "No milk here to-day, Billy," and Billy jogs on.

Then there is "Dan Sorrel," who draws the milk wagon which takes the milk to Central Park Dairy every morning. His driver often amuses the children who gather about his pet by saying:

"Now, Dan, I believe you are a Democrat."

"No!" shakes the head.

"What! a Republican?"

"Yes, yes, yes!" and a stamping of both front feet, while the tail was slashed about like a banner to emphasize his sentiments.

Dan is great fun. Nor must we forget our old pet "Jingo" of the mounted policemen's horses; for he was truly wonderful, and I might go on almost endlessly telling of his remarkable sagacity and cleverness.

Jingo and Wee Winkles were warm friends, for Winkles spent two winters in a home very near the West Forty-second Street entrance to the park, and each sunshiny day carried her lump of sugar to Jingo, who would perform all sorts of tricks in order to win his reward. He would waltz, go down upon his knees, shake hands, fetch a pocket-handkerchief which she made believe she had dropped, whisper in his rider's ear, and do many things besides.—Ex.

Ventilation.

There is one very important subject which, there is too much reason to fear, does not receive the attention that it deserves, and that is, the proper ventilation of rooms. It is safe to say that if the air in any room seems as pure to the person entering it from out of doors as the outdoor air itself, that air is well fitted for breathing. Such, at any rate, it should always be, and such should be the test applied by an intelligent observer. As for a test of the quality of the air—its purity or impurity—nature has provided us with a most useful one, and in all ordinary cases the only necessary one, in the smell. If this sense is offended by the characteristic "stale" odor of an ill-ventilated room, there is no appeal from its verdict, no matter how many ventilators there may be in operation. This test, it should be stated, can be applied only by a person just entering the room from the outside. With such an ideal before us, no hard-and-fast rule is called for. With this ideal in view, and with the homely quality of common sense in exercise, it is well also to remember the following facts: A room is best for most of us at a temperature ranging from 65 to 70 degrees; a guard, be it of the most primitive character, should be between a draught and ourselves; the air is not necessarily impure when warm, nor pure when cold; the smaller a room is and the more occupants it has, the oftener should the air be renewed.—The Family Physician.

Memory.

[The following unpublished poem, by James A. Garfield, was sent to us by a friend.—EDITOR.]

'Tis beauteous night; the stars look brightly down
Upon the earth, decked in her robe of snow.
No light gleams at the windows save my own,
Which gives its cheer to midnight and to me.
And now with noiseless step sweet memory comes
And leads me gently through her twilight realms.
What poet's tuneful lyre has ever sung,
Or delicatest pencil e'er portrayed
The enchanted, shadowy land where memory dwells?
It has its valleys, cheerless, lone and drear,
Dark-shaded by the mournful cypress tree;
And yet its sunlit mountain tops are bathed
In heaven's own blue. Upon its craggy cliffs,
Robed in the dreamy light of distant years,
Are clustered joys serene of other days.
Upon its gently sloping hillsides bend
The weeping-willows o'er the sacred dust
Of dear departed ones; yet in that land
Where'er our footsteps fall upon the shore,
They that were sleeping rise from out the dust
Of death's long, silent years, and round us stand
As erst they did before the prison-tomb
Received their clay within its voiceless halls.
The heavens that bend above that land are hung
With clouds of various hues. Some dark and chill,
Surcharged with sorrow, cast their sombre shade
Upon the sunny, joyous land below.
Others are floating through the dreamy air,
White as the fallen snow, their margins tinged
With gold and crimsoned hues; their shadows fall
Upon the flowery meads and sunny slopes,
Soft as the shadow of an angel's wing.
When the rough battle of the day is done,
And evening's peace falls gently on the heart
I bound away, across the noisy years,
Unto the utmost verge of memory's land,
Where earth and sky in dreamy distance meet
And memory dim with dark oblivion join;
And, wandering thence along the rolling years,
I see the shadow of my former self
Gliding from childhood up to man's estate.
The path of youth winds down throught many a vale,
And on the brink of many a dread abyss,
From out whose darkness comes no ray of light,
Save that a phantom dances o'er the gulf
And beckons toward the verge. Again the path
Leads o'er the summit where the sunbeams fall;
And thus in light and shade, sunlight and gloom,
Sorrow and joy, this life-path leads along.

The Difference.

A characteristic difference between heathen India and Christian America is well illustrated by a story of Rudyard Kipling's. An Indian Rajah by whom Kipling's artist father had been employed, was about to bring home a wife. Displaying his wonderful jewels before the admiring gaze of the elder Kipling, the Rajah desired him to assist in the selection of the gems to be included in the marriage gifts. Kipling proceeded with the selection, and finally held up a superb diamond, one of the finest geme in the whole collection, and said: "You should send this. No woman could resist it." The Rajah caught the jewel up and hugged it to his heart. Replacing it in the case, he exclaimed: "Nay, such gems be not for women." The estimate that England and America, as enlightened by the gospel of the Christ, put upon womanhood is vastly superior to the ideas which in India, where Buddhism and Mohammedanism darken, govern social conditions. Paganism puts upon the wrists of woman a fetter; Christianity thinks no jewel too fine or too fair for her brow.—New York Observer.

Webster.

No one can forget the scene when Webster stepped into the arena in battle-array. His majestic presence, his massive brow, his cavernous eyes, his sonorous voice, his stately gesture, his grand physique would at once attract a stranger's gaze. Calm, strong, self-poised, he always reminded me of a line-of-battle ship swinging sluggishly at her anchor, her ports all closed, and no sign of life about her dark and massive hull. But when a seventy-four bore down upon her and poured in a broadside, instantly the drum beat to quarters, the ports were opened, the guns run out and a weight of metal thrown with a power and precision which would crush any common foe. This was the champion selected to meet Calhoun and batter down his doctrine of State Rights.

His speech was complete in every element, logical, rhetorical and moral. It exhausted the argument and justified the eulogy of Stevens, that "it was the habit of Daniel Webster to say everything that could be said on his side of the question and to say it better than anybody else." He possessed unquestionably a "nationality of soul," and he availed himself of his opportunity.

The sentiment rose above the region of party and reached, or seemed to reach, the atmosphere of pure patriotism. It is an advantage which the champion of the majority always wields.

He carried the audience with him, even to an outburst of applause. The Southern doctrine was overthrown; the cause of State Rights lay prostrate in the dust, and the national champion (so to speak) rode around the lists, bearing the consolidation banner triumphantly in his hand.—Charles C. Pinckney, in January Lippincott's.

A Fable.

Once upon a time a foolish youth came to a venerable sage, and did thus address him: "Good sir, you are a nice old man and mean well, but you are not up-to-date, nor onto your job. The alleged wisdom which you deliver unto young men is all rot. I am especially moved to make these remarks by reading an interview from you which appeared in yesterday's Morning Whoop. You state that it is perilous to tamper with the wine when it is red, and with the seductive booze when it is a rich amber. On behalf of a number of us who can take it or let it alone, I come to request you to come off."

When he had finished speaking, the sage leaned forward upon his staff and replied: "Verily, my son, I perceive that you are what is sometimes styled a 'hot tamale.' Presumptuous though it may be for a hoary codger, such as I am, to attempt to advise a youth of such parts, I crave your indulgence while I relate a fable:

"There was once a mule, which stood in a pasture near a roadside. It was just a common ordinary specimen of the genus jacasticus, and like all other members of the tribe, it wore an expression of unutterable woe and melancholy. This was part of its little game. Finally there came that way a traveler from a far country, who knew not mules, neither had he knowledge of their deceitfulness and desperate wickedness. Struck by the air of unutterable sadness on the countenance of the beast, he eaned on the fence and contemplated it. A citizen of that country passed by and warned the stranger not to monkey with the mule, but the stranger mocked his advisor and bade him, in the weird vernacular of his own land, to 'go chase himself.' He leaned against the fence some more, and watched the mule, the said mule not saying a word. Then the stranger grew bolder and vowed he would investigate the strange beast. Scaling the fence, he approached the sad quadruped and surveyed him at close range. The mule didn't worry, but just waited. The stranger was more than ever convinced of the innocuous disposition and honorable intentions of the mule and ventured nearer. 'Why should I leave this beast alone,' he soliloquized. 'I will pet it a little and try to comfort it. If it shows symptoms of pugnacity, I will retire beyond the fence.' But even as he spoke, the mournful mule executed a strategic flank movement and with his heels he smote the wayfaring stranger in the solar plexus, so that he lay still right where he fell."

Thus spake the venerable sage, having his eyes fixed humbly on the ground. And when he had finished he lifted up his eyes, and behold, the foolish youth had vanished! —Christian Oracle.

The Discipline of Life.

Sooner or later we find out that life is not a holiday, but discipline. Earlier or later we all discover that the world is not a playground; it is quite clear God means it for a school. The moment we forget that, the puzzle begins. We try to play in school; the Master does not mind that so much for its own sake, for he likes to see his children happy, but in our playing we neglect our lessons. We do not see how much there is to learn, and we do not care; but our Master cares. He has a perfectly overpowering and inexplicable solicitude for our education; and because he loves us he comes into school sometimes and speaks to us. He may speak very softly and gently, or very loudly. Sometimes a look is enough and we understand it, like Peter, and go out at once, and weep bitterly. Sometimes the voice is like a thunder-clap, startling a summer night. But one thing we may be sure of—the task he sets us to is never measured by our delinquency. The discipline may seem far less than our desert, or even to our eye ten times more. But it is not measured by these; it is measured by God's solicitude for our progress; measured solely by God's love; measured that the scholar may be better educated when he arrives at his Father. The discipline of life is a preparation for meeting the Father. When we arrive there "to behold his beauty," we must have the educated eye; and that must be trained here. We must become so pure in heart—and it needs much practice—that we shall "see God." That explains life—why God puts man in the crucible, and makes him pure by fire.—Henry Drummond.

The Saloon and the Laboring Man.

If laboring men want a reason for saving their money and refusing to patronize the saloon here is something to read. Men of toil, what do you think of the following facts handed down to us from our national government reports on the question of "Liquor and Labor?"

In every $100 worth of boots and shoes you buy is $20.71 of labor
In every $100 worth of furniture you buy is $23.77 of labor.
In every $100 worth of hardware you buy is $24.17 of labor.
In every $100 worth of clothing you buy is $17.42 of labor.
In every $100 worth of cotton goods you buy is $16.91 of labor.
In every $100 worth of men's furnishing goods you buy is $18.34 of labor.
In every $100 worth of worsted goods you buy is $13.55 of labor.
In every $100 worth of woolen goods you buy is $12.86 of labor.
In every $800 worth of the above goods, $100 worth of each kind in $800 lot, is $147.73 of human labor employed.
In every $800 worth of liquors you buy is $9.84 of human labor,

Uncle Sam's Parrot.

One of Uncle Sam's most faithful servants in the State of Maine, but one that draws no salary, lives at the Portland Head lighthouse. It is a large gray parrot, brought from Africa some time ago, and presented to the keeper of the light. The bird soon noticed when the fog began to blow in from the ocean somebody would cry out: "Fog coming! Blow the horn!" One day the fog suddenly began to come in thick, and the men did not notice it. But Poll did, and croaked out: "Fog coming! Blow the horn!" Ever since then, whenever fog is perceptible, Poll always gives warning.—Ex.

Jennie's Room.

The next evening Jennie Weston had hardly time to tell her mother about the events of a new school-day, before a timid knock was heard at the front door. It was Tattie Marsh, looking rather dismal, as if sorry she had come. It was the first time she had ever been in the house, and she followed Jennie half on tiptoe as if she were trying not to be so heavy. Jennie had a room all of her own, and it was here that she led the way. To any one it must have appeared a very cozy place, and to Tattie it was luxurious. There was one window, before which stood a window-seat large enough to accommodate two persons. At each end of this seat, or bench, rose a tier of shelves, six in each case, each shelf only about two feet long. It made a very pretty picture, the window-seat between the two little bookcases, for the shelves were filled with books. The lower shelves, which were rather far apart, were devoted to papers and magazines, which had been saved up for several years.

But Tattie did not pay much attention to the books, because she had not yet learned to care for them. She saw that upon the walls hung large frames, the size of those that usually inclose uninteresting oil paintings of trees and other outdoor things. But these frames inclosed ten to twenty pictures in each frame, arranged in rows; and they were interesting pictures which Jennie had cut out of newspapers, catalogues and magazines, from time to time. One frame was entirely devoted to comic pictures, which told their own story; another consisted of the pictures of celebrated authors; another of statesmen; one that particularly attracted Tattie was made up of children's pictures cut out of advertisements. All these were pasted upon pure white paper, or canvas, and then tacked to old frames which Jennie had painted white. Jennie had also painted the bedstead white, and she had fastened short rods at the top of the headpiece, over which she had sewn muslin, thus forming a dainty canopy above and including the pillows. There was a curious seat, entirely round, and apparently solid, which Jennie told her she had made by sawing off part of a barrel and making a cushion to fit the top. Cretonne hid the sides of the barrel and also the back, which was simply a broad board, nailed to the barrel and cushioned.

"I was looking for you, you see," said Jennie, taking "Little Women" from the top of one of her bookcases. She was just able to reach it without tiptoeing. "This keeps the place," and she held up a piece of pasteboard, which was almost covered with writing. "See how many books I have used it in; for whenever I read a book I write the name and date of reading on my bookmark. Would you like to look at it? You must sit by me on my window-seat. Perhaps you would never guess that this used to be a woodbox; but it was such a good fit to the window that I begged it of papa, and cleaned it—you ought to have seen me scrubbing! Then I made this long cushion out of a lot of excelsior that came around some things. George and I made the bookcases ourselves. He sawed and nailed, and I planed and painted. I only keep my own books in here, and the one I happen to be reading. But look at my bookmark. What heads the list?"

"I wonder what makes you take so much trouble with me," said Tattie suddenly. "I am so stupid and so ugly, and so useless to everybody!" And she burst into tears. Jennie put her arm around her visitor, and their heads came together under the window. "I want you for my friend," said Jennie, "that's why."

"If I had so beautiful a room," said Tattie, "and everything I wanted, as you have, I believe I would just sit up in it all by myself, and try to feel it in all my bones, and in all my veins, and I am afraid I would never think of little girls who have nothing."

"But what do all these things amount to, after all," cried Jennie, waving her hand at her possessions, "compared with what you have as well as I?"

"I don't know what you mean," returned the other, looking puzzled. "I am sure I have nothing a hundredth part as nice as all this."

"Oh yes, you have!" exclaimed Jennie. "In the first place, you have what every girl has—a chance to make a good and true woman out of yourself; and then you and I have what thousands of girls are without—a mother and father." And the tears came to Jennie's eyes, too, she hardly knew why. "Dear me!" she added, "this isn't being jolly, is it? Now, Tattie, you see that all my things are very cheap; why not fix up your own room that way? I will help you."

"But we can't afford to have a fire in my room, too," sighed the other.

"Then fix up a corner of the big room. I saw a splendid place when I was there yesterday, for a cozy corner. And I will come and help you, if you want me."

"You are always seeing chances to make things better," said Tattie. "I wish you would come."

"And now the bookmark," said Jennie. "Never mind the dates. What comes first? 'The Wide, Wide World.' Oh, Tattie, what a book that was! And then, 'Queechy,' of course. Do you know, dear, that the person who loves to read, lives two lives? Because you live in the book you are reading. So you get twice as much out of existence as the one who doesn't read. Then here comes 'Treasure Island;' I read that aloud to George. When George comes in he sits on that barrel-seat. He sits as if he was riding a horse. Nearly every time he comes in, he looks at my shelves and says, 'We made them, didn't we?' Then the next book is 'Helen's Babies.' I had read that before, but I never get tired of it. And here is Irving's 'Life of Washington.' I haven't finished that. You see, I got to reading so many books of fiction that I got scared. And then I heard about the Advance Society, and I joined it. If you are a member, you have to read history and poetry. Then you can take up a story-book with a clearer conscience. But now we must begin on 'Little Women.' Can you tell me where we left off?"

Tattie remembered very well, and the reading began. When it was time to stop, the girls were rosy with the life, beauty and human interest that surges through every line of a great book. In that mysterious way, so often experienced after such a reading, they felt closer kin to all the world, and that it was a greater thing to be a girl than they had realized before. Tattie forgot to be ashamed of the patches on her dress and the worn edges of her shoes. As she went home she met a crowd of little girls who sang to her—

"Tattie, Tattie, where's your tatting?
Tattie, have you learned to tat?
Tit-tat-toe, Tattie, Tattie!"

Not that they disliked Tattie, but it was fun to see her "get mad" and "make a face." On this occasion Tattie smiled at them, their faces were so bright and they were so little and goblin-like, with their fezes which came to a long point behind and hung down like a tail. Besides, she was too full of a new happiness to be annoyed.

Scarcely had Tattie left, when George peeped into his sister's room. Having looked cautiously all about, he whispered:

"Where's Lady Macbeth?"

"If you mean Tattie," said Jennie with dignity, "she has gone."

George danced into the room and mounted the barrel-seat.

"Then hear the news! Uncle Tom has invited me to go camping out with him next Friday evening, at the old Red Woods hut. We will sleep there." George rose and waved his arm theatrically. "We will go for game, rabbits, quails and—and deers, if there are any!" George seized an umbrella and held it up to his eye. "I shall shoot a gun," he continued. "Thus! Now you be the squirrel. Bang! Well, why didn't you fall? Don't you feel like playing?"

"I was playing," said Jennie, "but you missed me."

I am sorry to say that George met with a dangerous and exciting adventure while camping out. I will have to tell you about it, week after next. But next week comes the announcement of the books that children most love. I know you will all be glad to hear about them. And parents who sometimes wonder what their boys and girls would like, can take notes—"Make a note on it," as Captain Cuttle would say. But I suppose you don't know who I mean by this captain, as he took no part in our last war. Besides the list of most popular books, we will have more letters and new members' names. Two months ago, there were nine members; a month ago, 128; today, 248. In a few weeks I expect to hear from our Honor List members. Here is a good form in which to make out your report: Bible, verse every day; total, 84 verses (or more). History, five pages a week, of —; total, 60 pages (or more). Poetry, 30 lines a week, of —; total, 360 lines (or more). Quotation, one a week, —, —, —, —; total 12 quotations. Note—Kept account in my note-book. Remarks—Anything you feel like saying.

The blank places are for you to insert the name of book read, except in the case of quotations; in that case, name the authors. If you have done more than required, be sure to say so. A WOMAN OF SAMARIA.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The ministry of Jesus in Judea was brought to its close by two events which are recorded respectively in the Synoptic Gospels and the Gospel of John. The first was the intelligence that John the Baptist had been arrested and thrown into prison by Herod (Matt. 4:12; Mark 1:14). The second was the growing opposition of the Pharisees when they heard that the ministry of Jesus was becoming even more popular than that of John (John 4:1-3). They were unwilling to brook the growing influence of the prophet from Galilee who was not content to remain in the wilderness as John had done, but came directly into the city and its immediate vicinity, and thus won admiration and followers from the very classes who constituted the admirers of the Pharisees themselves. Jesus was too wise to rouse at this early stage of his work the animosity of these religious leaders to the point of open opposition, and as the imprisonment of John warned him that his life was not safe in the territory of that despot, he took warning and avoided both dangers by retirement into Galilee.

The journey to the north would ordinarily lead one through the middle province of Samaria, which separated Judea from Galilee. But it was the usual custom of the Jews who made the journey to cross the Jordan into Perea and pass northward on the eastern side in order to avoid going through Samaria, whose people were the descendants of that mixed race composed partly of Israelites and partly of emigrants form the East who occupied the territory of the northern kingdom after the fall of Samaria in 722 B. C. They were regarded by the Jews with aversion, and on the return of the latter from the Babylonian captivity in 586 B. C., they were refused permission to assist in the rebuilding of the temple. The consequence of this act was a bitter feud between the two sections, which manifests itself in several references in the New Testament. Jesus did not share this feeling of his people against their neighbors, and seems to have traversed the territory of Samaria several times during his ministry. On the present occasion he had reached the vicinity of the ancient Shechem, a city known in his day as Sychar and now called Nablous. Here at a point somewhat remote from the town was the old well reputed to have been dug by Jacob, and regarded with great veneration by the people. Not desiring to attract particular attention Jesus remained at the well which afforded a resting-place during the heat of the day, while the disciples made their way to the neighboring village to purchase food. The little party was supported by the gifts of friends (Luke 8:1-3) and was thus able to purchase supplies in the villages where the usual hospitality of that age did not suffice.

During this absence of the disciples Jesus waited by the well, weary with the journey. While he was thus musing, a woman from the neighboring town came to draw water. Her character as subsequently revealed in the interview may have induced her to avoid publicity by coming to the well at the unusual hour of noon, when she would be less likely to encounter others. As she drew the water from the well Jesus approached her and requested a drink. She was astonished at this, because he was a rabbi, a religious teacher, as she would recognize by his dress, and no rabbi was permitted to speak to a woman in a public place, not even his own wife. This fact caused even the disciples to wonder upon their return (v. 27). But still more strange was the fact that he was a Jew and she a Samaritan, and yet he spoke to her. It was this which she expressed in her question, in explanation of which the writer adds the remark, "For Jews have no dealings with Samaritans." The narrative of this interview is so vivid and life-like that it impresses one with the thought that John must have been among the disciples who accompanied Jesus on this journey, and must have learned the facts from the woman either during the two days that Jesus remained in the village (v. 40) or during a subsequent visit to the Christian community in Samaria (Acts 8: 14-17).

One of the impressive features of the interview is the fact that Jesus selected this unnamed woman, of a despised race and blemished life, as the person to whom he made the most important disclosure of his own character and mission which occurred during the early portion of his ministry. Not to the religious authorities of his own nation, not even to his own disciples did Jesus make an announcement so significant as the one he made to her (v. 26). Perhaps to prepare her in some measure for this announcement, or at least to draw her attention to more important matters than the rival interests of Jew and Samaritan, Jesus took up the figure of water and through it spoke of the value of his gospel. She quite missunderstood his meaning, and pressing his words to their literal import asked in amazement how he could draw water without rope or bucket. Even Jacob who dug the well could not do so much. In this conversation lies the suggestion of all the relations between men and God. Jesus needed the assistance of the woman to secure the water; God needs human assistance in carrying out his plans. The divine purposes can never be completed without human co-operation. Again, the human heart is ever skeptical of the divine love and the riches of pardon and grace. When the Christian goes to the man of the world with the promise of divine love and blessing he usually meets an attitude of skepticism, "What have you to promise that I do not already possess? You have no apparatus that is not also mine. Are your teachings greater than those of philosophers and sages who are my inspiration? The fountain of the world's knowledge and power is open to me; but you have nothing to draw with, and the well is deep." But it is evermore true that the living water has been tasted, the truth of the testimony is acknowledged in such words as those the Samaritans spoke after Jesus had been in their midst (vs. 39-42).

Jesus hastened to assure the woman that the water he promised was far more desirable than this of the well, which only quenched thirst for the moment. The water he should give would be like a never-ceasing fountain in the soul, pouring out its rich abundance eternally. The woman yet misunderstood and thinking still in the crass terms of some improvement in her domestic economy by which she should be relieved of the necessity of this daily journey, begged of him the blessing which she understood he meant. And so we evermore are asking the smaller blessing. When all the richness of divine love waits for our request, and for the opening of our hearts and hands to receive it, we pass it by and content ourselves the prayer for worldly prosperity, for bodily health or for the success of some personal enterprise. Jesus could not give the woman the thing she asked. It was quite within his physical power, but beyond the limits of his spiritual designs, and therefore impossible. God cannot give us a small blessing when larger ones wait for the asking. Too often our disappointments at the seeming failure to receive the expected answer to our prayers grows out of the fact that they have been answered in so much richer form that we do not recognize them, and go mourning that we have not been heard; while all the time the mercy which casts our small petitions into utter nothingnsss hovers above our heads. Seeing that the woman failed to comprehend his meaning, Jesus probed more deeply into the problem of her life and opened to her mind some suggestions of his purposes and of spiritual worship beyond the limits of worldly sanctuaries at Jerusalem or Gerizim. The sequel of the lesson is intensely interestingn. The return of the disciples, the departue of the woman for the city, the passionate longing of Jesus as he saw the possibilities of evangelism in that field, the stay of Jesus in the city and the results in faith and obedience which formed the basis for the future Samaritan church—all these make this marative one of supreme interest.

Japan as Mission Field.

BY FRANK H. MARSHALL.

[The following interesting notes on Japan were written by Bro. Frank H. Marshall, of Tokio, Japan, in response to a request from me, and with a view to publication in the Handbook. It came to hand too late for its intended use, and I take pleasure in placing it thus before a large circle of readers.—W. J. LHAMON.]

I. Period of preparation—1859-1873.

After two centuries of seclusion, during which only a few Dutchmen were able to set foot on a small island of Japanese soil, the nation is again open to the world. The new Japan was born in prayer as well as diplomacy. Commodore Perry came from America with four war-ships to open the country; but on these ships the Bible was read, hymns were sung, a Christian spirit guided the embassy. Though firm, the men were gentle and kind. The Japanese said that barbarians having much power would not be so good. The first United States minister, Townsend Harris, was also a Christian. He honored the Lord's day. Christian diplomacy won the victory. In 1859 a treaty was made, which permitted Americans to settle in certain portions of three Japanese cities.

At once came six missionaries. Their landing was in doubt, and once ashore, they were guarded by policemen as spies. All over Japan stood the famous signboards, now relics in the Tokio Museum, prohibiting any Christian from setting foot on Japan's shores, while death was the penalty for becoming a Christian. The missionaries worked five years before the first convert was made, and he being on his deathbed had no fear of execution. In ten years six converts were made. If the name of Christ was mentioned the hearer would stop his mouth and ears and flee. Death was the penalty for listening. Those were dark days. Some of Japan's brightest statesmen were murdered for favoring the hated foreigners. The Secretary of the United States Legation and other foreign officials were assassinated. Though threatened with death, though persecuted and forbidden to teach Christianity, not one missionary was murdered.

Add to these hindrances the obstacles to learning the language. For difficulties in acquirement the Japanese lauguage has few equals, certainly no superiors.

During several years persecution was bitter. The officials said savagely, "Christianity will be opposed like an invading army." At least two thousand lives were taken and as late as 1872 Ichikawa San, a native, perished in prison for becoming a Christian. By the close of this year, however, a dispensary was opened, a Christian became president of the Imperial University, and the first church was organized with eleven members, and called "The Church of Christ in Japan."

II. The period of laying foundations—1873-1883.

During this period a hint from the United States, expressing displeasure that the Ichikawa incident served to pull down every anti-Christian signboard in Japan. Twenty-nine new missionaries were added to the Christian forces, representing the Congregational, Presbyterians, Methodist, Baptist and Episcopal Boards. For refusing to work on Sundays, missionaries were forbidden to teach in the public schools, but in 1876 the nation actually adopted our Christian Sunday as a holiday. The educational and medical work of missionaries cannot be overestimated. It broke down prejudice and stood as a living monument to the superiority of the religion it represented. Of course native converts were still persecuted. They lost lucrative positions and their lives were spared only by the gentle firmness of the nation whose voice for justice has never been heard in vain. In 1880 the New Testament was translated and printed in choice vernacular. Christianity began to spread. The Buddhists became frightened. Their pamphlet of 1881 says: "Christianity is spreading like fire upon a grass plain, so that in the capital or in the country there is no place where it is not preached."

The close of 1882 saw Christian schools in Japan. There were 186 native helpers. Out of ninety-three churches, thirteen were self-supporting. 4,367 adult converts cheered the missionaries to move forward. Surely the Lord was sending evidences of his approval.

III. Rapid expansion—1883-1889.

In the year 1883 a great union prayer-meeting was held in Osaka. Christians from all the churches attended. Perhaps few prayer-meetings since the day of Pentecost have had more of the Holy Spirit. The meeting was followed by wonderful revivals in various parts of Japan from Sandal to Nagasaki. The spiritual life of the church was deepened, and the Lord added many to the saved. It is hard not to see the direct hand of God in the work at this time.

As yet a famous law, two centuries old, still stood, demanding the death of every Christian. The next year, however, legislation abolished Shintoism and Buddhism as state religions. This gave native converts many new rights, such as permission to be buried in public cemeteries, without a heathen ritual. Christianity began to grow popular. Some leaders like Fukuzawa. to-day Japan's greatest educator, urged the people to accept Christianity for policy's sake, in order to put the nation on a level with Europe and America. Christianity was in danger of becoming the state religion. Christian statesmen like Bismarck warned Japan against it, and missionaries and native converts, greatly to their honor, strongly opposed the plan. Japanese Christianity was thus saved from its Constantian error.

Many new missionaries flocked to this new Mecca of conquest. Almost every denomination in America sent its represedtative. Christian colleges, inspired by the faith and fervor of Neesima, the native apostle, were training hundreds of youth for the ministry and other honorable labors. In 1888 the translation of the Bible was complete, and Dr. Hepburn, at a celebration in honor of the event, said: "What more precious gift—more precious than gold and silver—could the Christian nations of the West offer to this nation? May this sacred Book become to them what it has become to the West, a source of life, a mesnenger of joy, the foundation of a true civilization, of social and political prosperity and greatness."

IV. Period of the testing and trial—1890-1898.

In the beginning of this period Japan was disappointed in her political relations with foreign powers, and her people came to hate all foreigners. Even the study of English became unpopular, and a great reaction began. Then came the war with China in 1894, after which, inflate her with victory. "Japan for the Japanese" became the popular slogan. With this anti-foreign feeling came scepticism, agnosticism and adverse legislation. It was a trying ordeal for the Church of Christ. But what has been the result? Though it is true that hundreds of members left the churches, and attendance fell off, yet Christ has been triumphant. The trial has purified her from insincere believers, and better ones have taken their places. 680 missionaries are now struggling to stem the tide, with a native falling off of 40,578 Christians, a net gain of 11,601, during the seven years of trial. (Statistics of 1897.) The sneer of the sceptic has not answered the lives of Christ's messengers, who like their Master went about doing good. What is the outlook for Christianity in Japan? As to ultimate results, no believer in Christ can question. In regard to the immediate future, we venture a brief forecast in conclusion: During the present year Japan has succeeded in getting her new treaty ratified by the foreign powers. After July, 1899, all residents in Japan will be subject to her laws. Whether this is best for the missionary as an individual, we do not here discuss. It has greatly changed the attitude of the natives toward foreigners, and already the demand for Christian preaching has begun to increase. From England and America come nearly all the missionaries. Japan's daily papers are even now being filled with editorials advocating a triple alliance with these two nations. America's new moves in the Orient seem to have received Japan's approval. All these things aid in the work of evangelization. Japan realizes that the great motive power in progress must be reckoned with in her national development. Christianity has more than held its own. The immediate future has new hope.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 29.

GOD'S ARMY.

(Ps. 20:1-9.)

Like a mighty army
Moves the Church of God.
Brothers, we are treading
Where the saints have trod.

Among the many illustrations by which the Christian life has been set forth, the figure of the army has often used. Paul uses it and it goes back further to illustrate the religious life of Israel.

Christian life is not a thing of ease and quietude, but of stife and sweat. To be sure the servant of the Lord does not strive nor cry, but that is only the other side of a great truth. Truth has more angles than one.

The "church militant" is an expression much abused, but containing a great truth. Although it is quite possible sometimes to find too much of a military element in the anger of the church against men and movements, it is never possible to find too much hatred of sin and wrong.

Civil war sometimes occurs in the army of God. One sect fights another, as if one regiment should turn its musketry upon its comrades of another.

The army has its officers and its private soldiers. There is infantry and Cavalry. One star differeth from another star in glory. But each soldier, however humble his position, is necessary to the great work of the army.

In buried Pompeii, the Roman soldier was found at the gate, true to the last to his duty. So many a Christian soldier is faithful unto death, of whom the world may know nothing till that day when the deeds of men shall be revealed. "They also serve who only stand and wait."

Christ is the commander, the captain of our salvation. The cross is our standard, and like the flaming ensign which Constantine saw in the sky, in hoc signo vinces.

"I am not an orator; I am only a regular," said one of the heroes of the Spanish war when called upan for a speech. "I am only a regular," and the regular is the man who wins the battles for his country. The army of God has its regulars.

There is no social status in the ranks of an army. Each man is only a man, but never less. There is, perhaps, no institution in which merit more surely wins its way, and every man is measured for what he is, than an army. Is it so in God's army?

Crusades were organized at one time—great armies to fight for the holy sepulchre. Crusades are often still organized to rescue the true, beautiful and good from the grasp of wrong. The crusader spirit—let it never die.

FUGLER.

On December 30th, 1898, we interred in their long resting-place the remains of Sister Charlotte Fugler, wife of Bro. J. J. Fugler. She was born May 1st, 1846, and was married to J. J. Fugler in September, 1870. Her maiden name was Coon. She leaves her husband and several sons and daughters to mourn their loss. Sister Fugler had been sorely afflicted for several years, and yet such was her resignation to the will of God that her faith grew stronger and brighter as the days and weeks of suffering passed by. May God comfort and sustain her aged husband, and guide him and the children to the celestial home of the now sainted wife and mother. LEE JACKSON.

Woodville, Miss., Jan. 3, 1899.

OLSON.

"The deepest sorrow of my life has come upon me." So writes P. S. Olson, one of the missionaries of the American Christian Missionary Society, referring to the falling asleep of his wife, Clara J. Olson. This is the message that comes to us too frequently, it seems, as we note the departure of those who are of great service in the kingdom and patience of our Lord. The outlines of her life are very briefly told. Born near Davenport, Iowa, Nov. 19, 1860; married to P. S. Olson, Oct. 27, 1886; died Dec. 14, 1898, at her home in Hickory, Wisconsin, leaving her husband, three sons and one daughter. Before her marriage for seven years she was a successful teacher in the public schools of Iowa. Bearing uncomplainingly the lot of the missionary's wife when that missionary was underpaid, out of her little pittance sacrificing far beyond many others, and frequently giving the last dollar that she had in her purse for the cause of missions. She loved little children, and no service of her life was more fruitful than that which she gave to the Juniors. During the last weeks of her life, when confined to her room, she made garments for the poor, like Dorcas of old. For more than two years preceding her death on each Lord's day she prepared the dinner for the teachers in the mission school who lived too far from church to go home and reach the mission school for the afternoon service. In all her life away from home she never failed to send to her mother a letter at least once a week; affectionate, scrificing, she poured out her life upon the altar of the King's service. We feel that the altar has sanctified the gift that was laid upon it, and we have committed her to God and to the Word of his grace, knowing that he is able to keep that charge committed unto him against that day. B. L. S.

MALLORY.

Bessie Evelina Mallory, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Mallory, died Jan. 3, 1899, aged three years, three months and 11 days. Sweet little Bessie was playing with her baby brother the day before her death and by some means they had gotten hold of some matches and her clothes were ignited, when her cries called her mother to the scene where she found her head enveloped in flames which she promptly smothered and subdued, but not in time to save her precious life. Bessie was a beautiful, sweet-dispositioned and gladsome child. The home will be sad and lonely without her. Her parents are grief-stricken over the sad accident and have the sympathy of the entire community. C. H. STRAWN.

MIZE.

Little Annie Mize was born March 13th, 1889 and died Nov. 12th, 1898, at Enid, Oklahoma Ter. Annie was the youngest in the family. The father had been taken several years ago, leaving the mother to care for and support her three little daughters. She was not a child of robust health and probably called out all the more tenderness from the family. May God comfort the mother, and may she be able to say with the poet mother, "Mine entered spotless on the eternal years; oh, how much the best!" T. B. GRESHAM.

Literature.

THE CHRISTIAN QUARTERLY for January has been on our desk for several days, awaiting our notice. We have not read all the articlescarefhlly, but have read a sufficient number of them to pronounce it an excellent number. The contents are as follows:

I. How Shall we Save the Rich? by the editor, W. T. Moore.

II. Status and Prospects of the Higher Criticism, by J. J. Haley, contributing editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

III. Mr. Gladstone and High Church Puritans, Prof. B. A. Hinsdale, Michigan University.

IV. Canon Liddon, J. W. Monser, Columbia, Mo.

V. A Study of Browning, George T. Smith, pastor Christian Church, Chicago.

VI. Alexander Campbell and Religious Controversy, F. M. Green, Pastor Christian Church, Kent, O.

VII. The Basis of Union, M. P. Hayden.

The usual departments, Exegetical, Literary and Table Talk are each well represented.

We have already adverted to the first article in a former number of the paper. The second article, by J. J. Haley, is a very able and, on the whole, rather conservative statement of the present condition and outlook of Higher Criticism. Prof. Hinsdale always writes instructively, and his treatment of the subject of Puritanism, as to what it is in its essential nature, is exceedingly interesting and valuable. The sketch of Canon Liddon, by J. W. Monser, is a very graphic and, on the whole, we judge, a very true picture of the great English preacher. G. T. Smith's treatment of Browning is fresh, original and shows fine insight into the great poet's character and work. Bro. Smith is manifesting fine power as a writer.

The article by F. M. Green is a summing up of the controversial labors of Mr. Campbell, with a sort of sketch of the different debates, oral and wriiten, which he held, and has special interest in view of the revival in historical studies this year. The article on the Basis of Union, by M. P. Haden, presents the subject in a little different light from that in which it is usually presented, and yet, perhaps, meaning after all the same thing. As the constitution of the United States is the basis of our American Union, the Ten Commandments the basis of union among the Jews, so, he holds, the great commission which Christ gave to his apostles is the basis of Christian union. "It stands in the relation to the Church or kingdom of God on earth as the constitution of the United States to our national life, and as the Ten Commandments or the Old Covenant stood to the Jewish nation." This basis embraces the divinity and authority of the apostles, the universality of Christianity, the baptism of believers, the instruction of believers so baptized in all the commandments of Christ, and the abiding presence of Christ with the church.

We commend the Quarterly once more to the brotherhood, and especially to the ministry, and now is a good time, at the beginning of the year, to become a reader of it. Published by G. A. Hoffmann, Columbia, Mo.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis, Mo.

THE COMING AGE is the title of a new magazine, by B. O. Flower, who has associated with him as editor Mrs. C. K. Reifsnider. We have already referred to the prospectus of this magazine and its general purpose. The first number fully meets the expectations awakened by the prospectus. It is a wide-awake, up-to-date magazine, filled to the brim with the discussion of living questions and with such a variety as will satisfy the taste of almost any one. Some of the leading topics discussed in the present number are:

I. Municipal Progress, by Hon. Josiah Quincy, Mayor of Boston.

II. Art and Manhood, by William Ordway Partridge.

III. The Work of the Society of Psychical Research, Richard Hodgson, LL. D.

These subjects are treated in the form of "Conversations," in which the persons named answer questions relating to these subjects. Other interesting articles are "A Visit of Count Tolstoy," "On the Threshold," "Democracy of Childhood," "Telepathy and Prevision," "Genius and Art as Viewed by Victor Hugo," together with a department of Original Fiction, also another on "Health and Home," and a closing one by the editor on "The Passing Day." This bids fair to become a popular and highly useful magazine, and we wish it great success. Copley Square, Boston.

Expansion.

Yes, thank you, that's the proper name for the present condition of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. There was never a time when the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST seemed to be more heartily appreciated by the brotherhood, generally, than now. This is evidenced by their actions as well as their words.

Expansion is the ruling spirit; education of mind and charity of heart are being emphasized by us more than ever.

As a consequence, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is finding its way into hundreds of new homes and the Church of Christ is increasing in vigor and influence. Our friends know they have our hearty thanks for their assistance in this expanding process.

We could fill an edition with the words of praise and encouragement received, but a few extracts will serve the purpose of many and not deprive our readers of matters that may be more helpful to them. These letters from our friends are, however, not only appreciated, but are of positive assistance to us in the work.

If they are also accompanied by the names of new subscribers———well, they lose none of their helpfulness by reason of that fact.

"The last isssue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a magnificent number."

St. Joseph, Mo. M. M. GOODE.

True. We intend to make it possible for that sentiment to be echoed and re-echoed each week.

"I have just read 'Thirty Years an Editor' from the gifted pen of the editor in the issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Dec, 29th.

It set me to thinking of the strength and encouragement received from his writings, which it has been my pleasure to read in recent years. I am a young man, a ministerial student and a lover of the truth as it is in the Christ. His consecrated pen has aided me more than I can tell, to love the Beloved more and more, and to find ever-increasing joy in the life that is hid together with Christ in God."

W. C. MCDOUGALL.

Forks Road, Ontario, Can.

Many are the brethren who, like our Bro. McDougall, have by their words of cheer and encouragement held up the hands of our editor, when perhaps they might have grown weary in the task of advocating the truth as it was given to him to see it. They are entitled to rejoice with us over the work accomplished, the victories won. We feel sure we shall have, as we shall try to merit, their continued approval and universal support.

Sunday-School Literature

THE matter of Sunday-school Literature is one o very great importance. For, whether it should be so or not, the fact is that the character of the instruction given in nine-tenths of the Sunday-school classes throughout the country is determined by the contents of the Lesson Helps they use. This being true, and the fact that first impressions are most lasting, how important that Pastors and Superintendents of Christian Sunday-schools see that their Schools are supplied with Christian Periodicals. If the children are taught that one church is as good as another, that certain divine commands are of little or no importance, or can be changed or set aside by man, what effect will it have on the church of the future? "Think on these things."

We understand a FEW of our schools are using sectarian or union (so called) supplies, in order to save a few cents each quarter. Are you one of that number? Samples of our Supplies sent free.

A Complete Commentary

FOR

EVERY TEACHER AND BIBLE STUDENT

This should be the watchword of every Sunday-school in the land. Thorough, systematic work cannot otherwise be expected. In selecting these books it is always wisest to secure the Best.

I. The Christian Lesson Commentary,

for 1899, prepared by W. W. Dowling, is the most systematic, thorough and helpful published in all this broad land. Scores of the most competent critics, reviewers and practical teachers of various religious denominations have so testified. It contains 416 large pages, with many illustrations, maps, charts and helpful tables—64 pages more than PELOUBET'S, and 24 pages more than HURLBUT'S, the only other Lesson Annuals that belong to its class.

Style and Price.—Neatly printed on calendered paper and substantially bound in cloth, $1.00 per copy; $9.00 per dozen—25 per cent. cheaper than the much smaller books noted above.

II. The Lesson Helper

by the same author, is considerably smaller in size than The Lesson Commentary, but contains much of the same material in a more condensed form, designed especially for Senior Classes and their teachers. Schools and Teachers that feel that they must have a lower priced book than the one first noted above, will find The Lesson Helper very satisfactory; and they may order it with the full assurance that it is more complete every way than any lesson annual or quarterly published by the Christian Church, with the single exception of The Lesson Commentary.

Style and Price.—Printed on fine calendered paper, and substantially bound in heavy boards, only 35 cents per copy; $3.60 per dozen.

REFORMATION OF THE 19TH. CENTURY

Or NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

A Series of Historical Articles to Run Through the Christian-Evangelist During the Year 1899

I. Introductory Period—1809 to 1819.

BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

This will include those stirring events which occurred in the formative period of our reformatory movement with which the present generation should be thoroughly familiar.

II. From the Organization of the Christian Missionary Society to the Outbreak of the Civil War—1849 to 1861.

BY DR. B. B. TYLER,
Contributing Editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

This period of our history, embracing the first decade of operations under the American Christian Missionary Society, with Jerusalem and Jamacia missions, will be full of interest to readers of to-day.

III. The War Period, rom the Firing on Sumpter up to the Death of Mr. Campbell—1861 to 1866.

BY DR. W. T. MOORE,
Dean of the Missouri Bible College, Columbia.

This is a turbulent period in our country's history, and one that tried most severely the principle we had adopted, of unity in Christ, in spite of differences of opinion. It ends with the death of Mr. Campbell, an event which opponents of the Reformation thought would practically end the movement.

IV. The Period Between the Death of Mr. Campbell and the Organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society—1866 to 1875.

BY T. W. GRAFTON,
Pastor Christian Church, Rock Island, Ill.

This period covers one of those turning-points in our history in which our whole future was involved. The conflict between Christian liberty and strict constructionism, and the conception and trial of the "Louisville Plan" of mission work, enter into this part of our history.

V. The Period from 1875 to the Close of 1899.

1. AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
B. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec. A. C. M. S.

2. FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
A. MCLEAN, Cor. Sec. F. C. M. S.

3. CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.
Miss Lois White, Cor Sec. C. W. B. M.

The closing period in our analysis is the period of expansion. Liberty has triumphed in its contest with legalism, and it manifests its power in the formation of new organizations through which to carry on a more aggressive work. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society came to birth, and the old Mother Society through their aid, soon comes to the consciousness of its own mission. The history of these societies will be given by their respective corresponding secretaries.

The whole series will be under the editorial supervision of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Series begins in the issue of Jan. 12th. Subscribe at once and secure the entire series.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Gen. Eagan has issued an expurgated edition of his testimony before the Board of Inquiry. As originally presented, bristling with insulting epithets applied to Gen. Miles, the Commission heard it through, but returned the manuscript, refusing to place it on record. The revised edition omits the most objectionable matter, and was accompanied by a letter in which Gen. Eagan explains and defends rather than apologizes for his former statement. So far as offense against the rules of gentlemanly conduct and the proprieties of military discipline is concerned, his withdrawal of a part of the language does not in the least alter the case. It is, therefore, right that the contemplated court-martial should proceed. The Secretary of War has issued an order detailing thirteen army officers to form a court-martial to try Gen. Eagan. The court will meet on Wednesday, Jan. 25. It is believed that the charge will be "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman." If so, the result must be either complete exoneration or dismissal from the service. In case the charge is "conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline," there may be a less severe punishment, varying from reprimand to suspension. Meantime, the Board of Inquiry is proceeding with its investigation of the disputed point, viz., the quality of the beef furnished in Cuba and Porto Rico. Such occurrences as this remind us forcibly of the need of the reorganization of the army. At present there is no certainty as to the relative authority of the commanding General and the Secretary of War, and doubtless Gen. Eagan's extreme freedom of language in regard to Gen. Miles is to be accounted for in part by the fact that he, as Commissary General, does not recognize in General Miles a military superior. It is no secret that Gen. Miles and Secretary Alger do not love each other, and the ambiguity as to their relations to each other furnishes a remarkable opportunity for friction. Both of them happen to be gentlemen, however, and it was reserved for Gen. Eagan to attack the commanding General under cover of the claim that as Commissary General he is responsible only to the Secretary of War.

It needed no prophet's eye to see in advance that there was going to be a clash in New York between a vigorous and upright governor and a set of corrupt officials who have not been accustomed to being bothered by the governor. From the first day of his administration Gen. Roosevelt has been, as every one knew he would be, a keen, hard-working and honest executive, a sworn foe to "jobs" and "deals," singularly unresponsive to the subtle influence of "pulls," and, as shown by his appointments to office, indifferent to the special interests of his party and friends. The particular clash between the governor and Tammany comes in the matter of municipal finances in Greater New York. In his inaugural Gov. Roosevelt stated that the administration of the city was corrupt and extravagant, and pointed out particular spots where large saving could be made. Almost at the same time came the report of the assessors, in which the valuation of Greater New York for 1899 is increased by nearly $400,000,000. On the strength of this prospective increase of revenue the Tammany officials at once began to raise the salaries of the faithful among the already overpaid and underworked city employes. It is noticeable that the school-teachers, who are about the only class of underpaid and overworked employes of the city, did not receive any increase. It is highly probable that legislative measures will be undertaken, with the governor's approval, for securing state control of city taxation, and thereby removing it from the hands of Tammany.

The Anglo-American Commission, at present in session at Washington, is meeting many difficulties in its work and some of them may be insoluble. The death of Mr. Dingley deprived the commission of its most thorough expert in matters of tariff and reciprocity, and the continued illness of Hon. John W. Foster has prevented his thorough acquaintance with the Behring Sea question from being entirely available. The point at which there seems most probablity of a failure in the negotiations is the arrangement of reciprocal tariff concessions between Canada and the United States. Our tariff of $2 per thousand on lumber is the chief offense in the eyes of the Canadians and the conference between Canadian and American lumbermen at Washington failed to develop even an approach to an acceptable compromise. Representatives of other industries have expressed themselve in favor of making liberal concessions, but each representative wants to make an exception of his own line of trade. The lumbermen would admit any Canadian products free of duty, except Canadian lumber. The fishermen see no harm in admitting lumber, but draw the line on fish. The coal men are the only ones who are willing to have reciprocal free trade in their own line. The conference has so far failed to justify the hopes of its promoters and it seems now that the outcome will be either total failure or, more probably, very limited success.

A recent agreement, signed by a British diplomatic representative and the Egyptian minister of foreign affairs, confirms to Great Britain the fruits of Gen. Kitchener's victory in the Soudan. The document defines the boundaries of the Soudan with considerable exactness. Roughly, it includes a territory of approximately two million square miles, bounded on the north by the Sahara Desert and on the South by the Valley of the Congo; its western limit is Senagambia and its eastern the hill country of Abyssinia. The agreement recites that since the reconquest of this territory was effected by the combined British and Egyptian forces, the two powers must share in its government. The governor-general of this vast province shall be appointed by the Khedive of Egypt with the approval of Great Britain. Consular representatives to points in the Soudan are to be accredited to Great Britain. It is to be observed that the Turkish Government is left entirely out of account. The Sultan's sovereignty in Egypt has of course been nothing more than a form since the British occupation of this valley, but this is a step toward the abrogation of even the form. The rumor of the establishment of a British protectorate over Egypt a few weeks ago, which would have involved a complete break with the tradition of Turkish sovereignty, proved to be premature. The present step is a less decisive move in the same direction, i. e., toward the establishment of British in place of Turkish sovereignty in Egypt and Egyptian Soudan, even as Turkish control has already been displaced by British. The Khedive, who is still nominally a vassal of the Sultan, is now copartner with Great Britain in the government of an independent province for which the British Government stands sponsor to the powers and over which the Sultan has not a pretense of sovereignty.

The bones of Columbus have been removed from Havana and transported back to Spain to be buried in the land that was not his. The remains of the late admiral have arrived at Cadiz, where they were received with as much honor as if he had been cut off last week in the midst of a victorious campaign. The body will be transferred to Seville with still more elaborate ceremonies, including flags at half mast, streets draped with black, artillery salutes and the distribution of bread to the poor. There the bones of the discoveror will be buried temporarily in the cathedral, awaiting the erection of a suitable mausoleum. In all this display of reverence and affection for the great navigator, it occurs to us that Spain is exhibiting a degree of forbearance and forgiveness which we had supposed was foreign to the Spanish character. It was natural, of course, that they should want to remove the body from Havana, just as they removed everything else that could be put on board a ship. But the reception of it on the other side forbids us to account for the act wholly on the ground of an instinctive disposition to purloin. No, they have generously decided to forgive and forget all the ills and calamities which Columbus innocently brought upon them. True, he thrust upon them an empire which they could never govern. He opened to them a treasury whose wealth dazzled the world, but corrupted the nation. He diverted the course of Spanish history from steady, deliberate, solid development into a giddy rush to the pinnacle of power followed inevitably by a fall into the deepest depths. Of that fall we are witnesses, and now out of the depths they send back the cry, "Great is Columbus! vive Columbo!" It would be evidence of a most forgiving disposition, or an irrepressible national spirit, if only they understood what it means. But probably they don't.

The Nicaragua Canal bill has been passed by the Senate by a vote of 48 to six. In its final form it embodies some important modifications of the original Morgan bill. As it now stands, the name of the Maritime Canal Company is retained, but over ninety per cent. of its hundred million dollars of stock will be owned by the government. The arrangement can, therefore, in no sense be considered as subsidizing a private enterprise, for almost the entire ownership and the complete control will be in the hands of the government. The company is to call in and cancel all stock already issued and meet all present obligations, for which purpose the government is to furnish $5,000,000, of which sum only such a part shall be expended as shall, in the judgment of commissioners to be appointed by the President, represent the actual value of the property, rights and franchises at the time of settlement. The contracts to be let must contemplate the completion of the canal within six years, and the expenditure for any one year is limited to $20,000,000. The total cost is not to exceed $115,000,000. An amendment, which was carried just before the final vote was taken, provides that in case the necessary concessions from the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica cannot be secured, i. e., in case the expiring concessions to the Maratime Company cannot be renewed, the President shall be empowered to negotiate with other Central American states to secure another route across the isthmus. The House Committee has for sometime been listening to the arguments of representatives of the rival companies which solicit governmental patronage. There is presented to them now a bill, approved almost unanimously by the Senate, for the construction of the canal by a method involving the least possible danger of the use of public funds in the interests of a corporation. It is now chiefly a question as to whether or not the House of Representatives wants a canal across the isthmus.

Troubles have broken out in Samoa which at one time threatened to produce a serious misunderstanding between Germany on the one hand and England and the United States on the other. The trouble arose from the alleged interference of the German Consul in the choice of a successor for the lately deceased King of Samoa. In 1889, as the result of a three years' struggle over the succession, German, British and American representatives met in Berlin, and by a treaty agreed to maintain Samoa as an independent and neutral kingdom under the joint protectorate of these powers. The natives were to fix their own form of government and elect their own king, but in case of a disputed election (and almost every one is disputed) the decision should be made by the Chief Justice, appointed by the three powers. In the present disturbance the facts are not wholly clear, but it seems that on the death of the king the natives failed to elect a successor peaceably, refused to abide by the decision of the Chief Justice, and started a civil war in which Malietao Tanus who had been chosen king by Chief Justice Chambers, according to the Berlin treaty came out second best. It is alleged that the German Consul joined with the natives in refusing to recognize the authority of the Chief Jusice; that he encouraged the pretender and attempted to close the Supreme Court. Conferences at Washington between Secretary Hay and the British and German Ambassadors make it fairly evident that neither power has any desire to abrogate the Berlin treaty and, if the German consul has acted contrary to it, his act will be disavowed and himself recalled. The question is chiefly one of fact, for the accounts from these consuls do not entirely agree.

The national convention of coal miners at Pittsburg had trouble in getting itself roganized and more trouble in coming to an agreement as to what it should demand from the operators when they met in joint convention. The joint convention was delayed a day on account of the inability of of the miners to bring each other to terms promptly, and held its first session on Wednesday of last week. It seems quite certain at this time that a compromise will be agreed upon between miners and operators which will remove any occasion for a strike. The point most bitterly contested is the continuance of the present "double standard" or "screen" system, by which the miners are paid only for the net output of coal above a certain size. Porbably the operators will carry this point for the present, as against the "run-of-mine" system proposed by the miners, whereby payment would be based on the gross weight of the coal as it stands on the pit cars. The operators are disposed to concede the eight-hour working day, although they at first proposed ten hours. It is not improbable that there will be an advance in the scale of wages, though less than was at first demanded. The operators and miners of Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana have most nearly come to a satisfactory compromise and the representatives of the other states will probably fall in line. If not, they will have to secede from the union.

On Thursday of last week the Cuban Evacuation Commission, having completed its work on January 1, when it transferred the control of the island from the Spanish Governor-General to the American Military Governor, presented its report to the President and the Secretaries of State and War and was formally dissolved. The members of the commission received, as they deserved, the highest official and personal commendation for their work. It was thorough, effective and as speedy as anything could be which was in the slightest degree dependent upon the motion of a Spaniard. It was due to the efficiency of the commission that the "immediate" evacuation mentioned in the protocol did not mean a year instead of only four and a half months.

It is not improbable, from present indications, that the Treaty of Peace will have to wait for a special session of Congress before it is ratified. Senator Davis is determined that it shall not come to a vote in the present Senate as long as there is any doubt of its ratification. He believes that there is the requisite two-thirds majority even now, but not being assured of that fact, he declines to take any chances. The opponents of ratification have been urging an amendment of the Treaty in the form of a resolution declaring that it is not the purpose of the Government to hold the Philippine Islands in perpetuity. This is objected to on the part of a majority of the friends of the Treaty on the ground (1) that this would require the approval of the Spanish Commissioners and cause delay, (2) that the Senate has no exclusive right to declare the policy of the United States concerning the Philippine Islands, that being as much the business of the House of Representatives as of the Senate, and (3) that a resolution of this kind, even if passed by the present Senate as an independent resolution forming no part of the Treaty, would have no binding effect upon the next Senate, and would be of no value. The opposition to an immediate ratification of the Treaty of Peace is, from our point of view, without any just foundation. After the ratification it is in the power of the United States to make any disposition of these islands that may seem best. The Treaty of Peace decides nothing except that the Philippines are no longer under control of Spain, but that the United States has the right of deciding what their future shall be. Cannot these Senators who oppose ratification trust the people of the United States to do what is right toward the people of these islands? Our own opinion is, and in this we believe we are representing a large majority of the people of the United States, that the United States should grant home rule to the people of these islands just as far and as rapidly as they show themselves capable of exercising it, and it should spare no pains in teaching them the principles of republican government. And when the time shall come that they are capable of becoming an independent nation, if they so desire it, they should then be absolved with our blessing and benediction. But these are questions of the future that must be determined in the light of future developments.

The passage of the Morgan-Nicaragua Canal Bill in the Senate with only six dissenting votes indicates the growth of sentiment in favor of the vigorous prosecution of that enterprise. The long voyage of the Oregon around South America at a time when its presence was needed on this side, and when its safety was imperiled by the long journey, was a great object-lesson, showing the importance of this inter-oceanic canal. It is believed that the bill as it passed the Senate will not be approved by the Lower House, which has a bill of its own, but there is no doubt but that a conference committee will agree upon such modifications as will receive the approval of both Houses. England's informal agreement to cancel the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty simplifies the problem, and it is probable that a satisfactory bill will be approved before the present Congress adjourns.

A BROAD INCLUSIVE CREED.

In a sermon on "Entire Sanctification," by Bishop John P. Newman, printed in the Religious Review of Reviews for January, he declares that it is the mission of the great Methodist movement to give emphasis to the doctrine of entire sanctification. "For this purpose were they called to be a church; to give pre-eminence to this central subjective truth was Wesley chosen by Providence to be chief in a religious movement scarcely second in majesty and importance to the Reformation under Luther." Referring to Wesley's own position on this subject he says, "With the calm courage of a divine conviction, sustained and inspired by personal experience, he solemnly committed the Wesleyan movement to the entire sanctification of a believer. . . . Whatever he did for Christian education, for Christian charity, for Christian civilization, he did to promote entire sanctification."

No one who understands the religious history of the past century is likely to think or speak lightly of the great Wesleyan movement and its beneficent influence on the life of mankind; nor will any one who understands the New Testament think or speak lightly of the doctrine of entire sanctification; that is, of the sanctification of the whole man, soul, body and spirit. Christianity proposes to control, not only a mere section of human nature, but the entire man. We may differ with the majority of our Methodist brethren in their understanding of when and how this sanctification is attained, but that it is the ideal toward which all Christians are to struggle is a truth which no one who understands Christianity will deny.

But, important as this truth is, it is not the whole of the Christian system. There are other truths and doctrines which need emphasis in order to a full, well-rounded Christian life. The sovereignty of God which our Presbyterian brethren claim it is their special mission to emphasize is another biblical truth, and the Presbyterians have done well to emphasize it. We believe, however, they have often carried it to an extreme, and have used it in a way to interfere with the symmetry of Christian doctrine and with human freedom and responsibility. We must not, however, because the doctrine has been abused, lose sight of it or fail to give it its due measure of emphasis. The doctrine itself, like that of entire sanctification, so far as it is taught in the New Testament, is to be accepted and taught along with other inspired teaching.

Even those religious denominations which are generally reckoned as unevangelical, such as the Unitarian and Universalist bodies, did not come into existence and gain adherents without some reason. They are the products, in the main, of extreme and hurtful tendencies among so-called evangelical churches. They have emphasized certain truths which needed emphasis and which have their legitimate place in the scheme of Christian doctrine. The dignity of man in his origin and nature, the universal Fatherhood of God, and His infinite love and tenderness; that God is no respecter of persons, that He always stands ready to receive the penitent—these are truths which any one acquainted with the New Testament will readily recognize. But they, too, have been abused and carried to unwarrantable extremes, and false and injurious conclusions have been drawn from them. But the religious teacher who fails to present any truth because it has been abused and carried to extremes is not declaring the whole counsel of God.

This tendency to take up particular truths or doctrines, and make them party shibboleths to the exclusion of other truths equally important, began to manifest itself in the churches founded by the apostles. At Corinth, for instance, there were some who said, "I am Paul," and others, "I am of Apollos," and others still, "I am of Cephas." There was something about the teaching of these different preachers that specially attracted certain ones of them, and incipient divisions were being formed on these lines. Paul rebuked this disposition to be satisfied with a part of the truth as if it were the whole truth, and said to them, "All things are yours, whether Paul or Apollos or Cephas," and then, perhaps, mentioning some of the things emphasized by these different teachers added, "or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." What Paul deprecated and rebuked was this tendency on the part of these Corinthian Christians to impoverish their intellect and religious life by being satisfied with a few doctrines as presented by some particular teacher, instead of keeping their minds and hearts open for the reception of all truth from every source whatever.

And this brings us to the glory of the position which the Disciples of Christ occupy. The creed we profess and teach is broad enough and inclusive enough to embrace all truth. The divinity and Lordship of Jesus Christ—what truth does that exclude? What religious truth of any value does it not include? Standing on this divine basis we may emphasize the New Testament doctrine of sanctification or holiness, "without which no man shall see the Lord;" we may declare with all boldness the sovereignty of God who rules among the inhabitants of earth and in the armies of heaven; we may give prominence to the Fatherhood of God and His infinite love on the one side, and His wrath against sin and ungodliness on the other; we may, in a word, accept and teach every truth uttered, not only by every apostle, but by every reformer and even those which pagan seers and prophets have taught. There is no surer protection or safeguard against pushing any doctrine to a hurtful extreme than that freedom of thought and breadth of vision which includes all related truths and doctrines.

This creed, inclusive of all truth and exclusive of all error, is the true basis for a growing and progressive theology. It is also the foundation for the widest, fullest and richest religious life. Let us rejoice in this liberty and seek to realize all the fullness of truth which it opens up to us. Let us, while holding fast to the basic creed-truth of Christianity, which commits us, unreservedly, to Christ, as both Savior and Lord, hold fast also the liberty wherewith He hath made us free, and be hospitable toward all truth, no matter through what avenue it comes to us. "All things" are ours as Christ's freemen. Let us see to it that no man rob us of this birthright.

SACRAMENTAL ETHICS.

The two interpretations of Christianity that like the spirit and the flesh are irreconcilably opposed to each other are the evangelical and the sacerdotal, or the spiritual ethics and the sacramental. Their is no mode or theory of reconciliation by which these two can be brought together. Their practical effects differ as widely as the conceptions that produce them.

Both the theory and practice of evangelical Christianity has for its center the most profound conviction that God makes himself known to man by entering into direct communication with his spirit. Unless there is this direct spiritual communion there is no real worship or service; and out of this comes holiness of character and righteousness of life. It has no consecrated temple but the temple of the Holy Spirit; it has no altar but the altar of prayer and praise; it has no sacrifice but spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ; it has no priesthood but that of the individual believer, who holds direct communion with God his Father.

The sacerdotal interpretation is the priest with his mystic orders and sacred rites, as the divinely appointed instruments and channels through which the grace of God is communicated to the human soul. There is a literal priest with a literal sacrifice to be offered on a literal altar in a literal temple, as in Judaism and heathenism, of which they are the faithful imitation, and through these and through him the soul is brought, into a condition of reconciliation and fellowship with God. This is the sacramentalism of priestcraft, of which Paul declares it has a show of wisdom in will-worship, and humility, and severity to the body, but is not of any value against the indulgence of the flesh. The apostle knew that the ceremonial, the spectacular, the scenic and the sensuous in religion made a great impression on the superficial and the unthinking. There is a seeming reverence, an apparent devoutness, a profound veneration, an impressive solemnity, an awe-inspiring appeal to the imagination, an air of mystery in the pomp and circumstance of a sacramental service that captivates the senses; but inspiration says that the fatal flaw in all this display is that it does not make men any better, it is of no value against the indulgence of the flesh, it is ethically valueless. The clear implication is that no religion is of God that does not cure worldly mindedness, and restrain men from the exercise of fleshly indulgences. And the next clear inference is that Christianity when rightly understood and really received produces these results.

Has the history of sacerdotalism confirmed the apostle's statement in respect to its ethical worthlessness? Let the experience of Latin Christianity, and the Latin races dominated by it, answer the question. Visit those countries where the priest is in evidence, and his sacramental religion is dominant, and what do you see as to its influence on the morality of the people? Go to bullfighting Spain, where ritualism completely holds the field, and see her tottering moral, social and political decrepitude, as the fruit of a thousand years of priestcraft and his sacramental teaching. Go to Mexico and the South American Republics, to Portugal, Austria, Italy,

France and the South of Ireland and the Philippines and Cuba, and the priest with his crucifix and his cowl is always in sight. The outward symbols of religion are conspicuous by their presence. The externals of a paganized Christianity are everywhere in evidence. The only man who succeeds in getting out of sight of a church, or a cross, or a priest, is a blind man. If there is a flight of steps up a hillside there is a cross at every step and a shrine at the summit. If you look to the top of a mountain some old fanatic has built a church there and the cross looms against the background of the sky. Images, relics, pictures and statues of saints and holy water abound. From early morn till late at night people are dipping their fingers in holy water, bowing at holy shrines, and holy fathers are standing in the smoke of burning incense. What is the effect of all this externalism on the morals of the people? It is well known that many who are zealous for these forms, and the most reverent in their observance, who cross themselves with consecrated water, courtsey to the image of the virgin and bow low before the great altar, will go outside the church and swear, gamble, get drunk and do whatsoever the carnal mind dictates. Their spirituality is only in appearance and their morality is non est. Out of 187 births in Porto Rico 157 are classed as illegitimate, because tne church fixes the fees so high that the people cannot afford to get married, and there is no more Sunday in Latin countries than there is in perdition. In holy Russia the men who crowd the churches in the morning of the Lord's day, carouse and debauch and carnalize in the afternoon. The whole history of man's seeking after God has demonstrated that this religion of forms, whether in paganism, Judaism, Latin Christianity or the Greek Church, is not of any value against the indulgence of the flesh.

Space can be spared for only one reason why this is so. Sacerdotalism perverts the ordinances of the New Testament, first by adding to their number, and second by disregarding their significance and purpose. As to the original ordinances of Christianity, baptism means that the believer is inwardly clean before God, and the Lord's Supper signifies that he is holding on to the truth that made him clean. Hence these ordinances as symbols are means to ends higher and more important than themselves. But sacramental religions multiply forms and hammer on the importance of their observance as conditions of salvation till men come to rest in them and to feel that this outward conformity to ritual ceremonies is the end and all of religion. Instead of using ordinances to strengthen faith and develop character they are submitted to as ending in themselves and leading to nothing higher. Form is substituted for the thing signified, and hence there is no spiritual power or ethical influence of any value against the dominance of the passions.

Is Protestantism practically any better? What about the worldliness, selfishness and carnality so prevalent in Protestant churches of all denominations? Evangelical Christianity certainly holds the field in the superiority of its ethical results, but historic Protestantism has made a mistake almost as serious as Romanism. While Romanists were trying to save people by doing sacraments, Protestants were trying to save them by believing doctrines, and the one is about as valueless as the other against the indulgence of the flesh. There is no more salvation in believing a dogma than there is in doing a ceremony. The Protestant creed has as little restraining influence over the flesh as the Catholic sacrament. Dogmatic faith in ideas has no more power to make character than outward observances have. The intellectual creed of Protestantism goes about the same length in redeeming the world from the dominion of flesh and blood that the sacramental ritual of Romanism does. Beware of taking the sacramental element out of Romanism and the intellectual element out of Protestantism, and reconstructing them into a legalistic dogma of the ordinances and a theoretic system of the plan of salvation! In contradistinction to both, this is New Testament Christianity: The life of God in the soul of man, and the righteousness of God in the character of man. Whatever tends to create and foster this is Christianity; whatever does not is something else.

Hour of Prayer.

THE REGIONS BEYOND.

(2 Cor. 10:12-18; Rom. 15:18-21.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Feb. 1st, 1899.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Increase in faith and spiritual life is followed by increase in missionary zeal and contributions for missions.

This is the monthly concert of prayer for missions. The Scriptures referred to above, and which should be carefully read, indicate Paul's desire and zeal, above all things, to preach the gospel of Christ to the regions beyond—to those who had never heard it before. He felt that the gospel of Christ was an inestimable treasure with which no earthly blessing was to be compared. It had done so much for him in rescuing him from the bondage of Jewish legalism and in enabling him to find peace with God; it had so filled his heart and life with new hopes, new aspirations, new power and new purposes that he felt himself indebted to all men who had not received this knowledge of Christ and of his salvation.

In the passage cited from his second letter to the Corinthians he expresses the hope that as the faith of these Corinthian Christians grows he shall be magnified in them, according to his province, "unto further abundance, so as to preach the gospel even unto the parts beyond you, and not to glory in another's province in regard of things ready to our hand" (vs. 15, 16). In other words, he hoped that this church which had been established by his labors, as its faith increased, would enable him, as a missionary, to preach the gospel unto the parts beyond them to those who had not heard it, instead of glorying in churches which somebody else had established.

This is the hope and reasonable expectation of our missionary secretaries and of all who are interested in the evangelization of the world—that, as the faith of our churches increase, as the spiritual life of the membership is deepened and their horizon widened, they will increase their contributions for the mission work so as to enable our missionary organizations to send missionaries unto the regions beyond, even to those who are dying without the knowledge of Christ. This seems to us not only a reasonable hope, but an inevitable result of that increase in faith and in spiritual life which we have a right to look for in our churches; so that the absence of this increased devotion to missionary work, both in gifts of money and of personal service, would be proof of the failure to make such growth. One of the things to pray for, therefore, is this increase of faith and of religious life among our churches, for out of such increase are sure to come the men and the means necessary for the enlargement of the work.

So fully is the apostle's mind and heart taken up with the victories of the cross that he says: "I will not dare to speak of any things save those which Christ wrought through me for the obedience of the Gentiles, by word and deed, in the power of signs and wonders, in the power of the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 15:18, 19). Here is suggested another object for our prayers, namely, that our missionaries may be so filled with the Holy Spirit, and that He may so work through them in word and deed, that they may be able to say concerning all the regions lying within their reach, "I have fully preached the gospel of Christ."

Paul felt that without Christ he could do nothing, but that with Christ he could do all things required of him. The success of the gospel through his preaching he speaks of as something which "Christ wrought through him for the obedience of the Gentiles." So every man of God should feel; every coversion, every soul lifted to a higher life and energized for more successful work through our preaching, is what Christ has wrought through us. The remembrance of this fact would keep us humble and would lead us into closer fellowship with Christ.

Let there be mentioned here the names of the missionaries sent out especially by our own brotherhood and their fields of labor until the whole great picture stands before the minds of those present. Let the needs of these great and whitening fields be mentioned, and then the heart will be stirred into earnestness and prayer for God's blessing upon them and for his blessing upon the churches in their co-operation for pushing forward this great work. Let the holy zeal and sacrifices of these men and women of God provoke us to larger sacrifices and to greater zeal in promoting world-wide evangelization.

PRAYER.

O God, our Father, we thank Thee that Thou didst so love the world as to give Thine only begotten Son, as the first Missionary for the redemption of the lost race. We thank Thee He has found so many who are rejoicing to-day in the knowledge of salvation and in the joyful hope of the gospel. Fill us with apostolic zeal for the world's conversion. Bless the missionaries who have gone out from us to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ to those who sit in darkness. May their labors be abundantly blessed, and may we share with them in this work by sustaining it with our means and our prayers. Wake up the whole church, O God, to a realization of its obligations in this enterprise, and may Thy kingdom come, and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. For Christ's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

The acceptance of the proposal of Czar Nicholas for a Peace Conference on the part of the leading nations assures the convening of such conference at an early date. The proposition that the various governments send representatives to a conference to consider the feasibility of effecting at least partial disarmament among the nations that are on a war footing with a view of relieving the overburdened people from excessive taxation and to give the nations an opportunity to devote their best men and the larger part of their resources to internal development and progress, is hardly one that a civilized nation can afford to disregard. Men may differ in their judgment as to how much good may flow out of such a conference, but the importance of at least considering the problem and making an attempt to do something ought to be apparent to every one. Nor do we see any sufficient ground for the widespread skepticism in the secular press as to the feasibility of accomplishing the results aimed at. There is not a nation on the face of the earth which would not be benefited by a prolonged period of peace, nor is there one of the European nations that would not be vastly relieved by partial disarmament.

Whatever may be the outcome of this remarkable conference, the proposition to hold it confers more honor on the ruler that made it than his crown and all his kingly prerogatives. The conception is a sublime one. One cannot contemplate such a scene as that presented by a conference of the nations of the world, looking toward peace and progress, and planning for the relief of their citizens, without seeing in it premonitory symptoms of the millennium. It looks as if men were coming to recognize, not only the Fatherhood of God, but the brotherhood of man, and to feel the ties of a common kinship. It looks as if reason were ascending to its rightful place so long usurped by passion and prejudice, and that even the world's rulers were willing to reason together and plan together for the best interests of their subjects. The ideal is altogether too grand to be lost sight of. If this conference fails another will be called, and the experiment will be continued until the "parliament of man" shall be convened and the battle flags of the nations be forever furled. A great idea, once advanced, can never be relinquished.

Nor is this all. While the nations are getting closer together and taking counsel for their mutual interests, the churches are doing likewise. Already there has been announced an ecumenical conference of the Mission Boards of all the Protestant religious bodies in the world to consider the great theme of the world's evangelization. This is another sublime conception. We are getting large enough to do these things now. It has been utterly out of the question heretofore. The attempt to evangelize the world has been a work of such magnitude that it has widened the mental and spiritual horizons of all who have engaged in it, until it has become possible for various religious bodies to meet together in friendly counsel as to how this work may best be accomplished. Who doubts that the Master looks with approval upon these great international and interdenominational conferences, looking toward peace and progress, and the advancement of the kingdom of God? Surely, no one who has His Spirit and who is in sympathy with his great purpose to bring the whole wide world under his dominion.

In connection with this great movement for unity and peace in the political and religious worlds there should be among the governments an international board of arbitration for the settlement of all misunderstandings between nations that can not otherwise be peacefully adjudicated. Something similar to that shonld exist also among the various religious bodies—a sort of clearing-house for the avoidance of denominational friction, overlapping in mission fields and unnecessary interference everywhere else. This interdenominational board or council could voice the united sentiment of the various religious bodies on all social reforms, and be able to concentrate a degree of influence in these directions that would make the religious sentiment of the country felt as it is not now. Protestantism can never have a pope to do this for it, but it can have a wise body of men made up of representatives chosen by various religious bodies to act in concert on all matters wherein the churches are agreed. It would have no power to control or regulate the churches, but the different religious bodies would have power to control such board and to make their voice heard through it. All this is in harmony with the spirit of co-operation which is so marked a characteristic of the age, as it is in harmony with right reason and Holy Scripture. When the various churches begin to keep step in these great movements for the advancement of the kingdom of God it will then become "clear as the sun, fair as the moon and terrible as an army with banners."

William Jennings Bryan, late Col. Bryan of the United States Army, recently quit soldiering and went lecturing. Personally speaking, we have a great admiration for Mr. Bryan, but really, if he couldn't shoot any straighter in the army than he has been shooting since he left the army, the Spaniards would have suffered no great loss if he had ever come in contact with them. In a speech at Denver, Col. Bryan compared the action of the United States in taking possession of the Philippines to the action of Ahab in coveting and in securing through murder and robbery the vineyard of Naboth. It is to be hoped that Mr. Bryan does not mean all that this charge implies. Charity would suggest that he has forgotten the circumstances connected with the expansion of King Ahab's domain, for a patriot could hardly accuse his country of playing such a part as Ahab did in the transaction above referred to. The cases are strikingly dissimilar. Ahab coveted Naboth's vineyard and used violence and fraud to obtain it for his own pleasure and benefit. The United States did not want the Philippines, made no war to get them, but when by the fortunes of war they came into our possession our government in its Treaty of Peace accepts them, not for its own good and benefit, but because there is no other course to pursue in justice to the people of those islands and to the nations of the earth. And yet, this is the scriptural incident which Mr. Bryan selects to represent the action of this government in becoming responsible for order, for liberty and for justice in these islands! Let us, at least, congratulate him that he left the United States service before he indulged in such grave charges against its honor and integrity.

Questions and Answers.

If God is the Father of all men, how can we reconcile that fact with the eternal punishment of a part of the human family?
Learner.

It is the abuse of the idea of fatherhood that raises this question. This abuse has led some writer to say, "Yes, God is the Father of all men, but He isn't their grand father!" Fatherhood is not inconsistent with punishment when the punishment looks to the good of the child. Indeed, it is fatherhood that prompts chastisement for offenses. Fathers are far more exacting of their children than mere acquaintances or friends are. As to the duration of the punishment, it is the nature of the sin that determines that. The soul that persists in sinning must continue to suffer the consequences. The divine Father will always be found ready to receive the returning prodigal. But what if some prodigals perfer to remain in the "far country" and feed with the swine? Does that fact change the nature of God?

1. From the lesson, "Christ's First Miracle," it would appear that Christ did not condemn the use of wine.

2. What explanation could you offer one who argued from this in favor of the moderate use of liquor? A Reader.

1. There is no proof that the wine Christ made possessed an intoxicating element. It may have been and probably was unfermented wine.

2. Every act must be judged in the light of the times in which it was done. The fact that Christ responded to the demands of hospitality in Palestine, nearly 19 centuries ago by supplying a light wine, fermented or unfermented, a common drink of the people, does not argue his approval of the use of wine or any other intoxicating drink now. The conditions are altogether different. If Christ should attend a wedding to-day, in this country, no wine would be used. No one would think it proper to drink wine as a beverage in his presence.

1. What is the difference between sects and denominations?

2. What is our relation to them?
H. N. Hieronymus.

1. The two terms when used refer to the same bodies, of course, but the term "sect" presents them in a more unfavorable light and is, therefore, objected to by most of the religious bodies. On this account we use the term "denomination" when speaking of these bodies, instead of sect, just as we use the term "confederate" instead of "rebels," when alluding to the Southern soldiers. Besides the word denomination more justly describes these various bodies. The people who now compose them are not responsible for their origin. They are, quite often at least, free from any sectarian spirit, and according to their understanding of their Lord's will are trying to be faithful. They represent one species, type or denomination of Christians.

2. That of brethren who are unwilling to wear a party name or to be bound by a human creed, and are seeking to persuade all others to abandon their party names and creeds and return to the simple original gospel, accepting the name and leadership of Christ and the Word of God alone as their rule of faith and practice, to the end that believers may be united in Christ and the world converted. Our only weapon should be truth, our only motive love.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

INTRODUCTORY PERIOD.

II. Alexander Campbell and his Co-laborers—The two Campbells.

BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

For a number of years after the Campbells had entered upon their advocacy of a restoration of primitive Christianity no man of note had been publicly won to their cause. Their associates were humble, private men—some of them, however, of a high order of mind. I knew them well in their advanced years. Others, preachers, who looked with attention and favor on their novel but attractive plea, went as yet no further. The first man of real power who united fully with the Campbells, and who was worthy to rank with them, was Walter Scott. For years these three valiant heroes led the cause. Such was the judgment of A. Campbell himself. Nearly twenty years after he had first met Scott he thus writes to him:

We were associated in the days of weakness, infancy and imbecility, and tried in the vale of adversity, while as yet there was but a handful. My father, yourself and myself were the only three spirits that could (and providentially we were the only persons thrown together that were capable of forming any general or comprehensive views of thingss piritual and ecclesiastic) co-operate in a great work or enterprise. The Lord greatly blessed our very imperfect and feeble beginnings.

There is something singularly striking in the order in which these three men appear in the historical development of the reform in which they were united; it is natural, logical, providential. Let us study this remarkable fact in the character and roll of each one of them, and in the order in which they appear on the stage of the historical progress of their enterprise.

The present paper will be devoted to Thomas and Alexander Campbell; the succeeding one to Walter Scott and Dr. R. Richardson. The latter, the youngest of the four, a convert of Walter Scott, was from an early date and in a very intimate way for many years a colaborer of A. Campbell. These four historic characters belong together in our history. They constitute distinctively the group of "A. Campbell and his Colaborers."

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

The inceptive thought and first scheme of this extraordinary movement had their origin with Thomas Campbell, the oldest, maturest and altogether best prepared of the first three to take the initiative. Wherein lies the value of this fact?

He was a man of large brains, of superior natural endowments. And what was notable in him in this respect was the well-balanced adjustment of these gifts. The form of the head at once indicated this (he was no roundhead), and familiar acquaintance with the man confirmed it. He had also received a liberal education and a rich literary culture. These natural and acquired abilities had been expanded and ripened by years of teaching.

His religious heritage through family training, his preparation for the ministry in the Scotch-Irish Presbyterian Church, years of activity in this sacred calling, as well as his inclination of mind and heart, all made him most reverent of the Holy Scriptures and widely and deeply versed in them. As with Luther and Calvin, "the Word of God" was to him the sovereign law of decision in religion and in the conduct of life.

Thomas Campbell, to the end of his life, held the profoundest evangelical convictions concerning the Bible and Christian doctrine. A valuable characteristic of this Christian hero was his firmness of conviction. He was not, as might be supposed from his marked courtesy and gentleness of disposition, ready to yield like Melanchthon under hard pressure; on the contrary, as all who well knew him testify, he had all the courage of the Scotch Covenanter. He never yielded when conscious of right in any important matter, especially when the Word of God was at stake. When excited in discussion, even in his old age, he revealed a spark of the temper of John Knox. I have seen him maintain his ground persistently in private argument for an hour against his son, Alexander.

Thomas Campbell's character was adorned with the charm of genuine courtesy and refinement of manners; he was a true gentleman, and these qualities were worth much to him as a Christian reformer, and to us also.

The crowning grace of the life of this eminent servant of God was his deep, unaffected piety. It was a piety that was true "godliness," and was like that of his great son, healthy and manly, free from every taint of pietism.

Let the reader study well the character-sketch here given, which can be relied on as accurately drawn, and then judge whether this man, so admirably endowed, was not worthy to be a chosen instrument in the hand of God to inaugurate with wisdom and effect an effort to heal the wounds of a broken church, to bring back the spouse of Jesus to the unity in spirit, doctrine and life, of its earliest days.

This was the father's task—to project the great reform. But to bring it to full development of purpose and constitution of life and then execute it with success, demanded qualities Thomas Campbell did not possess in the fullness of their required strength. This office fell providentially to his son. Let us consider the situation.

First, inevitably the reformation proposed would necessarily extend in its historic development far into the coming years.

Thomas Campbell was born in 1763, and was not far from fifty years of age when he wrote A Declaration in 1809, which was a prospectus of the reformation; and he had come to America in quest of health. The movements he initiated called for one of younger years and of more than ordinary enduring vigor of body and mind.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.

Alexander Campbell was born in 1787, and was therefore at the above date in the full strength of youthful manhood, stalwart in body and mind, capable of enduring the strain on both of these that through years of extraordinary labor awaited him. He possessed the indispensable energy, necessarily wanting in the father, to push forward the great undertaking in the face of great obstacles and opposition. He was moreover a powerful preacher, which his father was not, an advocate bold and puissant before the people, mighty in public discourse, in argument and discussion—just the man needed with effect to expound and vindicate in sermon and debate, by mouth and by pen, the new and extraordinary plea for a reform so broad and so thorough.

His was, moreover, by reason of his age and consequent vigorous mental action, a spirit less conservative, in which this cause would, as it demanded, receive fuller and rapider development to the fulfillment of its great purpose than it had yet attained or could possibly attain in the mind and in the hands of its original projector.

A. Campbell was qualified also by all the strong tendencies of his nature, being an ardent republican, passionately appreciative of the freedom of thought and life, and of all the grand opportunities of this new world, to adjust himself in all his efforts as a reformer to the favorable conditions of the land and the people to which God had brought him, much beyond what could have been expected of his father, who had grown up to advanced life amid the conservative old world of Ireland. The son was fitted in every respect and in fullest measure to be the man of strong action, who was to take up and carry forward to large and successful development the glorious enterprise so nobly and so wisely conceived by the father. A warrior, a general for great and enduring campagins, was needed, and A. Campbell was this man. The father in council, the son in the field, as well as in council.

These were the points of distinction between these two men of providence, but they were distinctions, not opposing differences; had these existed their hearty co-operation so needful, so complete and so marked in their entire history, could not have been maintained.

In all matters of essential importance to the cause to which they gave their lives they were one; they stood together. During the entire period of the Christian Baptist, that valiant pioneer, and through the first decade of the M. Harbinger, Thomas Campbell was at his son's right hand as writer and counselor; nothing important came from the latter's pen that had not first passed the judgment of the former. The immense moment for good to our cause of this co-operation cannot be measured.

Wherein consisted the important elements of unity of these two men?

A. Campbell was endowed, as already stated, with extraordinary mental power. He had also received a superior education and literary culture. He stood forth in this respect much above the men among whom he came forth as a reformer. He had been and ever continued to be a man of diligent study. He revered the Bible and was widely and deeply versed in it; he was profoundly pious, as his father.

His religious and theological views, while he early learned to reject the unscriptural language of the schools, were thoroughly evangelical. No "liberal" neologism, destructive of the Bible and of its faith, ever found acceptance with him. God be thanked for this! I can affirm this with perfect confidence, that if any changes in this respect occurred in him through his riper years, they were always in the direction of great conservatism on all points of Christian doctrine. This might naturally be expected of a man of such a faith and such religious training. He never would for a moment tolerate tendencies that weakened our faith in the deity of Jesus Christ. "The three persons in the Godhead" was with him a constant theme of discourse. Unitarianism, any form of Arianism, was always a offense to him.

As a man of large intellectual power, o rich knowledge, of learning and culture, of broad views that saved him from narrowness and fanaticism and gave him a generous appreciation of all that was true, good and great in the religious and secular world, as a man of high and noble aims, Alexander Campbell could "stand before kings," before the kingliest of audiences, and win—force if need be—respect for his cause.

This is a most extraordinary fact, that these two men of God so admirably adapted, the one to inaugurate, the other to execute the great reformatory movement, should be father and son, both inspired by the same spirit, urged on by the same holy motives, sustained by the same strong faith, united in the same fervent piety towards God and his Word; sharing in profoundest conviction the same perfect acceptance of all the great, fundamental, eternal truths of the doctrine of Christ; and laboring side by side in their exalted mission in clearest fellowship of mind and heart, and in reverent, loving respect for each other to the end of their days; for this perfect concord of these great spirits continued with the son even when the father had passed on to the higher life.

MR. JACKSON'S TWENTY REASONS.

J. B. BRINEY.

Fifth—The Hebrew word "tabal" means, according to Feurst, "to moisten, to sprinkle." This gives light on 2 Kings 14: "Then went he down and dipped himself seven times in Jordan." This word "dip" in the original Hebrew is "tabal." Now read Leviticus 14 7:16-27, and you learn that sprinkling seven times was the ceremonial of cleansing the leper. Israel having no priest at that time, Elisha sent Naaman to sprinkle or tabal himself seven times. The seventy learned Jews translated the Hebrew tabal into Hellenistic Greek, baptizo, meaning to sprinkle.

Mr. Jackson would have told the whole truth, and manifested fairness in the treatment of his subject, if he had said that Feurst was the only Hebrew lexicographer who says that "tabal" means to sprinkle. In this position he stands alone, and when Mr. Jackson conceals this fact from his hearers, he does that which is calculated to mislead and deceive them. Feurst is a good Hebraist, but the other masters are all against him, and he does not support his position by citing a single example in which "tabal" means to sprinkle. Feurst's theory is that "bal" is the root of the word and from this he derives sprinkle as a meaning. This is not the first time that ever a great man sacrificed fact to theory. To regard the terminal syllable of a word as its root is somewhat remarkable, to say the least of it. Other Hebrew scholars, with impressive unanimity, take "tab" as the root of the word, and define it to mean to immerse. Gesenius, Buxtorff, Castell, Schleusner, Davidson, Davies, etc., all treat the word thus, and give numerous examples in support of this position. Such learned Jewish rabbis as Kleeburg, Felsenthal, Wise, etc., concur in this view, and never for a moment think that "tabal" means to sprinkle. Is Feurst's unsupported assertions to outweigh the whole learned world? Mr. Jackson should inform himself on this question, and give those whom he pretends to instruct the benefit of the facts in the case.

There is a way of settling forever the meaning of "tabal" as used in the Bible. It is employed in the Old Testament sixteen times, and is translated "dip" fifteen times, and "plunge," once. Rather cold comfort for sprinkle! No scholar would jeopardize his reputation in the learned world by translating it "sprinkle" in a single instance. And yet Mr. Jackson says that it means "sprinkle!" On what sort of food has he been feeding, that he has grown so great? And even Feurst agrees with the other Hebrew scholars as to the meaning of this word in its Bible use. After defining it "to sprinkle," he says; "to dip, to immerse in anything fluid, with the accusative of the object and beth of the liquid." That is, when the object of the verb "tabal" is in the accusative case and the relation of that object to the liquid is shown by the preposition beth "tabal" means immerse. Now it so happens that this is exactly the construction in the very passage from which Mr. Jackson seeks to derive "sprinkle." Naaman "taballed" himself—himself being in the accusative case. He "taballed" himself in Jordan—in representing the preposition beth, and Jordan being the river in which the transaction took place. Thus we have precisely the construction in which Mr. Jackson's own witness, Dr. Feurst, says "tabal" means to immerse. Now, as "tabal" in this case means to immerse and not sprinkle, it follows that baptizo, which the seventy used to translate it, means to immerse and not sprinkle. Thus Mr. Jackson's case becomes a boomerang and returns upon him with death-dealing force. When Mr. Jackson intimates that Naaman was cleansed according to the Levitical law, he betrays a lamentable lack of information on the subject. That law required a lengthy process extending through several days, and Naaman was not ceremonially cleansed at all. He was simply healed, and returned home without ceremonial clensing.

Sixth—Immersion for baptism is first heard of in the third century, spoken of by Tertullian as trine naked immersion, and as being a work of supererogation. The single dip was invented by one Eunomius, 440 A. D.

This statement is utterly without foundation in fact. Here is Tertullian's testimony: "Hereupon we are thrice immersed, making a somewhat ampler pledge than the Lord has appointed in the gospel." Evidently Tertullian's idea is that the Lord appointed one immersion, and that was amplified into three immersions, which was done to emphasize the doctrine of the Trinity. If the Lord had appointed one sprinkling, three immersions would truly have been a "somewhat ampler pledge!" A man should blush for shame when he says to an intelligent audience that "the single dip was invented by one Eunomius, 440 A. D."

Seventh—The baptism of John was by effusion for four reasons: First, as a Jewish priest he knew no other mode; second, such expressions as "in Bethabara," "in Jordan" and "in the wilderness" designate place and not mode; third, the number baptized was too great to be accomplished by immersion; fourth, he applied the element to the subject and not the subject to the element—he baptized with water and not in water.

John did not baptize as a Jewish priest. He had a special commission from God to baptize. "In the wildernes" means IN the wilderness; "in Bethabara" means IN Bethabara; "in Jordan" means IN Jordan; "in the river" means IN the river. This looks almost like trifling, but I am dealing with trifling. John baptized in the wilderness, in Bethabara, in Jordan, in the river. Who told Mr. Jackson that the number was too great to be immersed? He had better not know so much, than to know so much that is not true! He applied the element, did he? Then he baptized with the Jordan and with the river. He applied Jordan and the river to the people. The relation of the people to the water is expressed by the Greek preposition en—en hudati. If that combination of words does not express the idea of being in water, will Mr. Jackson be kind enough to express that idea in Greek words. In his Grammar of the Idiom of the New Testament, Dr. Winer says: "Baptizein en hudati signifies, baptize in water (immersing)," etc. Perhaps the great German grammarian would blush if he knew that Mr. Jackson says that it signifies "to baptize with water (sprinkling)!"

Eighth—Christ was baptized by effusion. I give five reasons: First, that was the mode employed by John who baptized him; second, his baptism was a ceremonial, introducing him into his priestly office, and was prescribed by the law of Moses in Numbers 8:6, 7, and is by sprinkling water of purification; third, John said he needed to be baptized by Jesus, referring to Holy Ghost baptism, which was administered by effusion; fourth, because Jesus declared that John baptized "with water" (Acts 1:5); fifth, Jesus called the "pouring out of his soul unto death" a baptism (Luke 12:50 and Isaiah 53:12).

Effusion was not John's mode of baptizing. A negative assertion stands against an affirmative one, till the latter is proved. Christ's baptism was not a "ceremonial, introducing him into his priestly office." The idea that Christ entered into his priestly office by the ceremonial law of Moses is simply preposterous. According to Heb. 8:4 Christ was not a priest on earth. Furthermore, he was not a priest according to the law of Moses, for he was not of the priestly tribe. "For it is evident that our Lord hath sprung out of Judah; as to which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priests. And what we say is yet more abundantly evident, if after the likeness of Melchizedek there ariseth another priest, who hath been made not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life" (Heb. 7: 14, 15, 16). John did not say, "I have need to be baptized of thee," with reference to "Holy Ghost baptism," for the reason that at that time he did not know Jesus as the Messiah who was to baptize with or in the Holy Spirit. He was to be identified to John by the descent of the Spirit upon him, and that did not take place till after he was baptized. Mr. Jackson's stock of misinformation is immense! It is true that Christ calls his sufferings baptism, and nothing but immersion will satisfy the demands of that figure. To say that a slight effusion of water could possibly represent overwhelming agonies such as Christ experienced on the cross would be a glaring abuse of language. But when one sees the overwhelming which takes place in immersion, one discovers the force and beauty of the figure when the Savior speaks of his sufferings as baptism.

Ninth—The baptism of the three thousand at Pentecost was by effusion. I give five reasons: First, the size of the crowd; second, the water supply, found in two pools with sides of hewn stone and steps at the corners, made immersion impossible; third, the atttiude of the populace toward this new sect—the first time they taught they were placed under arrest; fourth, this was, in a sense, the fulfillment of Isaiah 2:15: "So shall he sprinkle many nations;" read of the nations present (Acts 1: 5-11); fifth, the Savior had just shown them that a baptizing element "poured out" or "shed forth" on the subject constituted baptism (Acts 2:23; Acts 2:15).

The following fact sets aside what Mr. Jackson says about the "crowd." In July, 1878, 2,222 people were immersed at a Baptist mission by six administrators in six hours, only two baptizing at a time! Only partisan special pleaders find any obstruction to immersion in Jerusalem on account of supposed scarcity of water. The fair-minded and scholarly Dr. Schaff (Presbyterian) says: "But immersion was certainly not impossible, since Jerusalem has several large public pools." "The attitude of the populace" was no obstacle to immersion, for the disciples are spoken of as "having favor with all the people" at that very time! When correctly translated Isaiah does not say "sprinkle many nations." The Septuagint renders it "astonish," and the Revised Version puts "startle" in the margin. The whole context shows this to be the idea. Mr. Jackson has the advantage of his auditors in what he says about the "shedding forth," and "pouring out" of the Holy Spirit, because so few people understand the principle that underlies the figurative use of language. Mr. Jackson commits the gross error of materializing the Spirit and destroying his personality. Surely he would not have us believe that a visible, material something was poured out upon the apostles! Those men were overwhelmed by the power of the Spirit who took full possession of all their faculties, even to the extent of thinking and speak- for them. It was not a doubtful, slight power, such as might be represented by a slight effusion of water. The figure demands immersion as its foundation. The Greeks spoke of a person in a state of deep intoxication as baptized in wine, and one in profound sleep was baptized in sleep. A person thoroughly dominated and controlled by the Spirit was baptized in the Spirit, as a person is completely under water in baptism.

The Religious World.

The passing of Palestine from Turkish rule is one of the probable events of the no distant future.

The Missionary Review of the World says that there is a demand for 100,000 missionaries in Africa.

Rev. Thomas Dixon, for four years pastor of the "People's Church," New York, has has resigned and will conclude his work March 1st.

Rev. B. F. Meyer, of London, is now visiting India and asks all of God's children to pray that his visit may be blessed abundantly to the glory of God and the extension of his kingdom.

The audience that gathered to hear Dr. Hillis on the occasion of his first sermon in the Plymouth pulpit, as the successor of Dr. Abbott, is said to have been the largest since the Beecher period.

Dr. Fairbairn's Haskell lectures, Bombay, India, on "The Interpretation of Nature and the Creative Ideas of Religion" seem to have made a good impression on the people of that city. The Dnyanodaya, published in Bombay, after giving the subjects of the lectures says:

These are grand subjects, and from the taste we have had of the first lecture, it is evident that India has a rich store in prospect. Dr. Fairbairn's style of speech is one that will be particularly intelligible to his Indian hearers. He uses short sentences, but containing all the substance that others would put into a long involved one. He speaks slowly and distinctly, and therefore will be understood even by those whose education in English has not been of the most advanced type provided they can follow philosophic thought.

In his report to General Brooke, of the religious affairs of Porto Rico, Father Sherman says:

The state of religion on the island is very unsatisfactory. Though in every town of any size there is found a large and handsome edifice, the services are very poorly attended. All the inhabitants of the island with few exceptions are, nominally at least, Roman Catholics. Very few of the men are more than Catholics in name. They are baptized, married and buried by the priests; that is the extent of their Catholicism. Now that the priests are deprived of governmental aid, many are leaving the country and more intend to depart before the winter is over. A moderate percentage of the clergy are of native origin, and these will be more inclined to stay, as they are more in sympathy with the new order of things and have a chance of procuring more desirable parishes, owing to the vacancies left by the departure of the Spanish clergy. The church in Porto Rico has been so united with the state and so identified with it in the eyes of the people that it must share the odium with which the Spanish rule is commonly regarded.

When the congregations have become accustomed to sustain their priests the Catholic religion will flourish much more in Porto Rico than it has under the Spanish rule. The bishop recently appointed is said to be unwilling to serve and there is need that our government should show an active interest in the matter. It would seem that a change in the ecclesiastical system was too sudden, causing a kind of paralysis and consternation among a body of men accustomed to lean on the government and find in it their normal means of support Religion is dead on the island. Whether it can be revived as a living influence is highly problematical. There is little or no observance of the sanctity of Sunday.

Current Religious Thought

The New York Observer concludes a very timely and practical editorial on "Personal Religion" with the following plainly told facts:

There is only one hope of deliverance from the grinding grasp of a modern mechanism, a present-day practicality which reduces everything to a linear dimension asking: "How far will it carry?" or to a cold figure reporting: "So big are its assets," and that is a vitalizing of the individual soul with the grace and genius of a Christ who, offered all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, declared for the spiritual worship and sole service of the Lord God, and who when he might have had the sceptre of the Cæsars and the control of the most closely articulated imperialism of ancient times, preferred instead a spiritual empire and a heavenly expansion, answering proud Pilate's challenge with the calm rejoinder: "My kingdom is not of this world." That empire of the one despised Nazarene is an invisible imperialism, and it is made up of individual souls which have one by one come under the sovereignty of the thought and spirit of Jesus Christ. If we are Christians to that extent, we build up that kingdom and constitute that empire. But if the grace and spirit of the Christ be not in us, if we have no personal sympathy with his aims and teachings, no amount of formal adherence to external forms of faith or passive acquiescence in the methods of modern institutionalism will do ourselves or others any real or lasting good.

The New York Observer thus distinguishes between fanaticism and enthusiasm in religious affairs:

Fanaticism is not so much an excess of faith as it is a misapplication of it, not faith running too far, but faith running in the same direction, with eccentric leaps and grimaces and distortions. But if fanaticism is foolish, faith at any rate is reasonable. There is a natural enthusiasm for Jesus Christ and his cause, which should properly actuate every believing heart. To be a believer in Jesus at all should mean to be an earnest, aggressive advocate of the truths he taught, and of the principles for which he died. The only Christianity which will impress the world is an earnest Christianity. A doctrinal learning which is a logic on fire, a moral character which is a close imitation of the ideals of the Nazarene, a life day by day which is both sane and serious, both rectilinear in its righteousness and tender in its human sympathy joined with an enthusiasm for the Christ of God which is whole-souled, unintermittent and contagious, constitute an evidence of Christianity which even this dull world cannot ignore, and afford a meaning and a motive for life, which elsewhere will be sought for in vain.

There is much truth in the following from the Herald and Presbyter's recent editorial on "The Spirit of the Age:"

It is a very pleasing and flattering fancy to many people that there is something quite peculiar in their constitutions, so much so that there needs to be a certain modification of the gospel in order to adapt it to their peculiar case. They would like to have some high-sounding name given to their unbeliefs, such as their intellectual or temperamental attitude. They do not like to be classed as unbelievers or rejecters of Christ. They do not like the old classification where God "concluded them all in unbelief," or said, "There is none that doeth good; no, not one." They would rather be flattered and told that theirs is a remarkable an exceptional case, presenting special difficulties and perplexities and lying outside the old rule laid down by Christ, that "except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God." But, it may be, the conceit is gotten out of them, at some time, and they learn that they are just common sinners, after all, for whom Jesus came to die, and who may be saved if they will come to God in repentance and faith.

Many a minister has made a mistake in attempting what he vainly imagined was an adapting of the gospel to the age or the community in which he lived. Having in mind certain worldly or unbelieving elements, he came to preach what he thought would be effective in reaching them and insensibly came to take their attitude in reference to the gospel, and finally, to present what he thought would be acceptable or pleasing to them. And then, the real heart of the gospel being eliminted, it ceased to be the power of God and the wisdom of God unto salvation, and came to be the wisdom of man to the confirming of the unregenerate in their unsaved life.

"A Crisis in Christian Endeavor."

Responding to our invitation for an expression of judgment on the issue presented by J. Z. Tyler's article, a large number of brethren have responded. We present the following this week:

It Must Be Done.

Have just read Bro. Tyler's article, "A Crisis in Christian Endeavor." I was among the first to advocate his employment as national superintendent, at a fair remuneration. It must be done. The money will be raised by one plan or by another. I will pledge $2 per year for five years toward his support—$5 if necessary. Will expect our society here to have a share in it. Let the call come so heartily that Bro. Tyler will see the hand of God in it. We need him. No other man amongst us will be thought of in connection with the work. W. S. Priest.

Atchison, Kan., Jan. 13.

We Must Do Something.

I am heartily in favor of employing Bro. Tyler so that he can give his whole time to Christian Endeavor work, and I so wrote him several months since. I think the plan suggested for raising the money for his support all right. However, I had thought of asking each society to pledge a definite amount. Either plan will do. But we must do something, and do it at once. We are facing a "crisis," and we will go forward or backward, according to the way we meet it.

M. M. Davis.

Dallas, Tex., Jan. 13.

Call for the Pledges.

Have just read your note to Bro. Tyler and his reply. His letter is certainly a timely one. Why not through the Christian-Evangelist call for pledges to maintain and carry on the work? I think the money can be easily raised. Put me down for $5, for two years. Who will follow? Your brother in Christ,

C. H. White.

Must And Can Be Secured.

The article in the last issue of the Christian-Evangelist, "A Crisis in Christian Endeavor," is before me. I am surprised and disappointed at the decision of the acting board. We must not permit a work so nobly begun to fall behind. A compensation, sufficient to keep so thoroughly qualified leader as Bro. Tyler, must and can be secured. This article referred to I believe will awake the Endeavorers and their friends to meet this need.

Suggest a plan and the faithful hosts will fall into line. The First Church responds, HERE!

F. O. Fannon.

Entirely Feasible.

The timely note of the editor to J. Z. Tyler and his admirable reply will find a deep response in the hearts of all who appreciate the Endeavor movement and who want to see it continue its career of usefulness. As state superintendent I have felt the need of some one to give his whole time to this growing work. There are many and various reasons why J. Z. Tyler should be secured for this place. The method he suggests for raising the required funds seems entirely feasible. For one I will endorse any arrangement that is made to secure J. Z. Tyler for the work and to pay his salary. N. M. Ragland.

Fayetteville, Ark.

Give it a Two Years' Trial.

(1) There is, in my opinion, no more important work among us than that of properly fostering Christian Endeavor; (2) the one man above all others among us suited to this work is Bro. J. Z. Tyler, who has so bravely borne the heat and the burden of the day for us in this work; (3) I believe Bro. Tyler's whole time should be given to the direction of our Christian Endeavor, and (4) I am of the opinion that the method he has suggested for raising the funds to maintain this work is a feasible one.

I am in favor of giving the plan two years' trial. Proper work done among our young people will result in immeasurable good to our cause. The Bethany Reading Courses are capable of endless development. Our Church Extension work is a good example of what can be done under a competent secretary giving all his time and strength to one line of work.

S. T. Willis.

Leave it to the Board.

I would like very much to see Bro. Tyler retained as superintendent of Christian Endeavor for all his time, if it can be done safely. But as the matter was committed to the acting board of the Missionary Society, I am disposed to leave it to the judgment of that board, at least till the meeting of the next general convention. J. H. Hardin.

Eureka, Ill.

Time is Opportune.

I have read with deep interest Bro. J. Z. Tyler's article and I most heartily concur in all he says. I have had not a little serious thought along that same line and I believe the time is most opportune for heroic action. J. Z. Tyler is the man to take hold of and push that work. No man can do it and do it successfully and at the same time be encumbered by a pastorate. The plan for raising necessary funds to carry on the work, as indicated in his article, is feasible, and perhaps as good as any. I think of no other plan, unless it might be a stated sum from each member monthly, as dues, similar to the regular dues of our auxiliaries to the C. W. B. M. I believe our Endeavorers would cheerfully accept such arrangement. At all events the time is at hand, and what we do ought to be done quickly. Bro. Tyler is surely awake to the demands of the hour.

Delay is Fatal.

The crisis in C. E. work among us is undoubtedly at hand. It must be met, like all crises, at once. Delay is fatal. I know of no plan more feasible than the one suggested by Bro. Tyler. No doubt the "acting board" had good and sufficient reasons from its viewpoint for not acting just now. I am ready to act. I hereby pledge $1.00 toward a special fund to be used in obtaining pledges for the support of Bro. Tyler or some one else to devote all his time to this work. I also pledge $1.00 a year for two years to support the "national superintendent" in devoting all his time to promoting the interests of Endeavor work among us. Chas. M. Fillmore.

Peru, Ind., Jan. 13.

The Work is Urgent.

Bro. Tyler's "Crisis in Christian Endeavor" is a clear statement of our needs and shows that he grasps the situation. The work is urgent and his plans plausible. Our young people must have a competent, consecrated leader who can give them all his time. J. Z. Tyler, by his long connection with the work, is the man for the work. I second the Christian-Evangelist's motion Our Endeavor Society will take a share in the enterprise.

Must Enlarge our Methods.

I have carefully read the article entitled, "Crisis in Christian Endeavor," in the last issue of the Christian-Evangelist. The article is wisely headed. A crisis is upon us. This is not alarming, but it means that we must enlarge our methods or fail to fulfill the mission to which I believe God has called us in Christian Endeavor. We should by all means secure Bro. Tyler's services for his entire time. The method proposed by him appears to me to be feasible. Let us give it a trial. It will, at least, serve a useful purpose in demonstrating to what extent we can depend upon the brotherhood to aid us in meeting the present crisis. We must have their help or fail.

Jubilee Year no Time for a Backward Step.

Your letter in the Christian-Evangelist and the reply of Bro. Tyler on the crisis in Christian Endeavor demands immediate action upon the part of the friends of this great movement amongst our young people. It is only such a condition as we have all anticipated, but it must be met. We are not the people to take any backward step, any way, in our Jubilee Year. It is a rare opportunity that we can secure the labors of a man so well equipped for the work as Bro. J.Z. Tyler. By all means let us engage his services. I like the plan he suggests regarding the pledge blanks to be sent each society and that the pledges be made for two years. Get this before the societies and Bro. Tyler will be sustained in that great work.

J. J. Morgan.

Warrensburg, Mo.

Now is the Tide.

It seemed to be the undivided sentiment of the delegates to the Chattanooga Convention that Bro. Tyler be set apart to the special work of advancing the Christian Endeavor movement among us. Such ordination will meet the approval of our entire brotherhood.

I cannot criticise our acting board for not making financial provision for the inauguration of this new work. The board consists of wise and good men, better known to all the facts than we who are disappointed by their decision.

I approve Bro. Tyler's recommendation, that a popular subscription be taken for the salary of a general secretary of Christian Endeavor of the Christian Church. I will gladly make a personal subscription for two years and will endeavor to secure others.

I suggest the acting board appoint a committee of responsible persons to secure an adequate salary pledged for the next two years and get Bro. Tyler started in this work at once. For you know—

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our venture."

A National League of Endeavor.

The desirability of a superintendent of Christian Endeavor to give all his time to this interest of the brotherhood, I think none will question.

As to the method of securing his support I would suggest the following: A National League of Endeavor, composed of all societies paying an annual membership fee of, say $3, membership in the league entitling the society to one delegate at the annual national assembly. Whatever amount was received above the support of national superintendent from this source could be used by the general society in aiding mission points, to be known as Enedeavor Missions. It would give impetus to the missionary spirit of our young people to know that they had half a dozen missions looking to them for support.

Only Needs a Head.

Bro. Tyler's article has been read with interest. No one acquainted with the facts will question the truth of Bro. T.'s statement regarding the present crisis in Christian Endeavor work, nor will any one care to call in question the wisdom of the eight suggestions which he makes as the lines along which progress should be made. It is acknowledged by all that Bro. Tyler is the man for this work; history teaches us this lesson. Now as to his plan for defraying the expenses of the work, I have this to say: First, I think it is a feasible plan. Second, if some one will appoint some one to act with me, I shall gladly undertake the work of sending out the calls for aid, and I know of no one better suited to do this appointing than "Bro. Garrison." Give us a committee of five or seven and let us meet in some convenient place and put it into execution. I should count it an honor to assist in helping to success so worthy and so important a cause. I believe the brotherhood feels about this matter as you do—that it is urgent and important—and I feel confident that we can have a hearty support. All the movement needs is a head. Wait a minute; I have another thought: I nominate the editor of the Christian Evangelist as the chairman of a committee which he shall appoint to "act as agent in securing, collecting and applying these pledges," and with my mind's eye I can see a host of hands up as the affirmative vote is called for, and see no one voting in the negative. You are unanimously elected; so appoint you a committee and go to work, or put it to work, or both. The work must not fail, and with the Christian-Evangelist to lead and a loyal and liberal brotherhood to follow, it will not fail. Put me down for $5.00 as a nest egg.

Rob't. G. Frank.

[If a committee is to be appointed—and we think there should be a sort of Executive Committee of Christian Endeavor, in order to relieve the office of the Home Board of extra work—the Acting Board of the A. C. M. S. should appoint it, we think, that all our work may be properly articulated.—Editor.]

A Circuit of the Globe

This excellent missionary production is being pushed during the summer months through the various C. W. B. M. Auxiliary Societies of the brotherhood. Our sisters are making this the open door through which to replenish the overdrawn Treasury of the National C. W. B. M. If your Auxiliary has not yet received the information in reference to the plan, the terms and the excellent opportunity offered for raising a nice sum of money, write to the Christian Publishing Co., 1522 Locust St., St. Louis.

Our Budget.

—If all diseases exist only in the mind, and all material things exist only in the eye, then must Christian Science be only a mere matter of sound.

—The 19th century will go into history as the most remarkable of all centuries for the number of its great discoveries and great inventions. The catalogue of these is a long one.

—The recommendations at the close of our Budget paragraph on the report of the Missouri State Board of Charities and Corrections last week were made by the state board and not by us as appears. There is a line missing at this point. We, however, heartily concur in the recommendations of the board.

—The new church building in Boston was dedicated Jan. 22nd, by Benj. L. Smith, corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society. This church assumed self-support from the time of its dedication and became another star in the crown of our Home Missionary Society.

—The Religious Review of Reviews tells us that in Spain to day there are but 56 Protestant pastors, 35 evangelists and 116 places for public worship. The number of regular communicants is 3,442, and regular attendants reach 9,194. We do not wonder at her national d wnfall. There is a religion that killeth and there is a religion that maketh alive.

—The January 21st issue of the Christian Standard is devoted largely to Hiram College and its Jubilee Endowment movement. The Standard is doing a good work in thus endeavoring to arouse the Disciples of Christ in Ohio to the support of their leading school in that state. The time has come that our historic colleges must be properly endowed or close their doors; and in this movement the Disciples of Christ in the state in which one or more of these historic institutions exist are naturally expected to take the lead, as Illinois is doing toward Eureka, and Missouri toward her several schools. Not that the work should stop at state limits, but that there should be a just state pride in the interest of each of our present historic and worthy colleges.

—We have often recommended the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as one of the best papers printed in America; and we shall continue to do so notwithstanding the fact that the editors never seem to see the little Index. Probably they are waiting for us to "run the gauntlet" and prove that we have a right to live.—Christian Index.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST conceded the right of the Christian Index to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" when it was born, and bade it God-speed in its mission. It has also quoted from its columns, at times, since, with credit, notwithstanding the imputation of blindness upon our part. But having an Iowa correspondent, we do not have the occasion to quote from it as frequently as we do from some other papers, but we seldom fail to scan its pages each returning visit, and are always glad to note the excellent service it is rendering to the churches of Iowa. We certainly wish the Index the support it justly deserves from the great brotherhood of Iowa.

—The success of the March offering will depend largely upon the preachers. If the congregations are iustructed, if the claims of the work are pressed home to the hearts and consciences, they will respond with liberal offerings. If the matter is touched upon lightly or not at all, the churches will do little or nothing. Every church in the land should recognize that its supreme duty is to help send the gospel to all the ends of the earth.

—The Indiana Christian is now under the editorial management of E. B. Scofield and has appeared in new form and dress. In its present form and with such an array of strong names on its editorial staff the Indiana Christian ought to become an arm of power for the cause of Christ in that state whose name it wears and are sure will honor in its future career.

—Cardinal Gibbons, in a letter to Rev. W. E. Crafts, Washington, D. C., in answer to the proposed passage of a law by Congress against Sunday work in the government's mail and military service, etc., says:

I am most happy to add my name to those of the millions of others who are laudably contending against the violation of the Christian Sabbath by unnecessary labor, and who are endeavoring to promote its decent and proper observance by legitimate legislation. As the late Plenary Council of Baltimore has declared, the due observance of the Lord's day contributes immeasurably to the restriction of vice and immorality and to the promotion of peace, religion and social order, and cannot fail to draw upon the nation the blessing and protection of an overruling Providence. If benevolence to the beasts of burden directed one day's rest in every week under the old law, surely humanity to man ought to dictate the same measure of rest under the new law.

An encyclical letter to the Roman Catholic Church in the United States on this subject and to the same purpose would be now in order and probably of great service—if enforced.

—In the Christian Courier for Jan. 19, J. B. Sweeney gives his reasons for his resignation from the Bible Chair of Add-Ran University, the chief of which seems to be for want of sufficient funds, or, at least, in the interest of economy on the side of the University. On Feb. 1st he becomes the pastor of the church at Gainesville and his university work will be divided up among other professors, but chiefly shouldered by Pres. Clark. Bro. Henry will take his place as financial agent for the university. Bro. Sweeney states that during his work in this field he has secured in cash and pledges for Add-Ran, about $30,000. In thus severing his entire official connection with Add-Ran University it is that he may devote his time wholly to the work of the ministry. But his interest, prayers and preaching for the school are to continue without abatement.

—The Foreign Society has appointed the following for the fields specified: Miss Carrie E. Goodrich, of Cleveland, O., to go to Japan; Geoge Manifold, of Prince Edward Island, to go to Japan; Albert Buxton, of Fairbury, Neb., to go to Cuba; Melvin Menges, of Stanford, Ill., to go to Cuba. The Executive Committee has acted in faith. The treasury at the present time is empty. The society is borrowing money to pay current expenses. The going of these will depend upon the March offering. It is believed that with the increase of work there will be a corresponding increase in the receipts.

—The 20th Century Quarterly published at Washington, D. C., at 50 cents per year is a strong advocate of a legal Sunday as a day of rest and religious observance. Other reforms are ably advocated, but it is chiefly for the defense of the "Sabbath" of our religious forefathers. Any number of the 20th Century Quarterly may be had of the publishers at $1.00 per 100 for distribution.

—Quoting from the Literary Digest, the Religious Review of Reviews for January makes mention of a new religion that originated in Persia during the present century. The author of this new faith was born at Shirza in 1820 and put to death for his religious and social heresies by the Persian Government in 1850. He is said to have been a man of great learning and of excellent character. He called himself "Bab," meaning "the door to the true knowledge of God," and his doctrine was called "Babism." The doctrine is said to differ essentially from Christianity, but if a more modern use of the term "babism" is allowable it must certainly bear a strong resemblance to many of the religions of our own country, especialy of the newer class.

—From the newsy Texas Letter this week we learn of the consolidation of the Practical Christian, Houston, Tex., and the Christian Courier at Dallas. The editor of the Practical Christian, Bro. Mason, becomes associate editor of the Courier. We are glad to hear of any combination that strengthens the Christian Courier.

—At the request of a number of readers who have been delighted with the Children's Department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, we present a picture, this week, of Bro. J. Breckenridge Ellis, of Plattsburg, Mo., who conducts that department. Bro. Ellis is a young man, as his picture shows, and the editor of this paper has known him from his childhood. His parents, Dr. J. W. Ellis, and wife, once lived in this city, but for many years they have been in Plattsburg, where Dr. Ellis has been connected with college work. Breckenridge has always indulged in literature as his favorite pastime, and has already become an author of some note. His "In the Days of Jehu" and his "King Saul" have received the highest commendation. He is showing fine ability as a writer for children.

—E. W. Wallis, of Manchester, England, says that "Spiritualism is not based upon Bible statements." There is nothing new in this declaration. Orthodox Spiritists have no use for the Bible. They reject it for its contradictions, and yet have the face to ask faith in that which has not yet acknowledged the first principle of harmony. If there is anything more contradictory and fraudulent than modern spiritistic phenomena we have yet to even hear about it.

—The Daily Leader, Lexington, Ky., recently contained a somewhat extended report of a sermon delivered in that city to a large audience by I. J. Spencer at the Central Church on "The Saloon Question." Reference was made to the young who had visited the open saloons on Sunday, in order to have them indicted by the grand jury, and to the influence the saloonkeepers brought to bear on the employers of some of these young men to have them discharged. The heroism of the young men for their action was commended and their moral right to so do defended by the preacher, and also by Prof. C. L. Loos who interrupted the speaker by saying that he had advised the young men to do what they did. Some may question the right of such methods of warfare, but if so why raise such a question at this point? Why not raise the previous question of the moral right of the saloon to exist at all. It is just at this point that our business men, as Bro. Spencer said, need more backbone; so also with our "Christian" men.

—The encouraging growth in the number of contributing churches during the past five years ought to nerve us to undertake to enlist every church in the March offering this year. There has also been a large gain in the number of missionaries during the past five years in foreign lands. New fields have been entered and a number of new stations have been planted. Times are now better and still larger advance should be made.

—According to "The Hiram House Life" a new bi-monthly published in the interest of Hiram House, Cleveland, O., the city of Cleveland has 135,204 adults, 46,313 children, 20 schools, 137 churches, 941 saloons and 541.56 park acres. This ratio of saloons to churches is one of the alarming conditions of every municipality. It would be bad enough if these numbers were reversed. But that crime-producing schools will thus be permitted to exist in a city at all, is one of the mysteries of this mixed and mottled civilization in which we are living.

—All Disciples of Christ interested in Foreign Missions and the collection thereof, on the first Sunday in March, ought to take a special interest in the distribution of the special literature of the Foreign Society. The Missionary Intelligencer and the Missionary Voice are edited with great care and full of selected information on all phases of the Foreign Mission questions and would do good if liberally distributed in the churches. They can give so much more space and attention to these matters than is possible in a church paper and ought to be used liberally for that purpose. The facts stated in these missionary journals for this month alone ought to secure the entire amount asked for from the churches alone this year by the society. Send to F. M. Rains, Cincinnati, O., for a large supply of these journals and distribute them in your churches.

—There is one trust which would be a great blessing to the world, if it could be brought about under the leadership of the Spirit; if all of the churches would combine for Christian work in such a way as to exclude unworthy rivalry and the unnecessary multiplication of agencies, and then would work together harmoniously for the evangelization of the world, such a trust would be fully worthy of the enterprise which Paul speaks of when he says that he was "allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel."—The Advance.

Never spoke the Advance truer words. Why not at once call a conference of all the leading missionary boards in this country to take such action as indicated above in relation to the islands but recently opened to religious liberty? We have suggested this before and we hope our own mission boards will take the initiative in calling for such unity of action.

—G. W. Muckley, of Kansas City, Mo., our Church Extension Cor. Sec., has just informed us of an unusual gift to that branch of our missionary work. Sister Sisera Threlkeld, of Fulton, Mo., has given a pair of diamonds to A. B. Phillips, her pastor, to be sold and the proceeds given to Church Extension. The diamonds are estimated by a competent jeweler to be worth at least $200, but will of course be sold to the best advantage possible for the benefit of the Church Extension Fund. This unostentatious example of self-sacrifice for the Master's kingdom is not only worthy of emulation by other disciples, but also beautifully expressive of that silent but sweet influence of the Holy Spirit upon the life of those who love and serve the Master.

—The Advance quoting recent statistics from the Chicago Tribune tells us that there has been a decline in suicides for the year 1898 of 680. There were 6,600 suicides in 1897 and 5,920 in 1898. Physicians are said to still lead the list. The decrease in the number of murders is still more marked, dropping from 9,520 in 1897 to 7,840 in 1898, nearly 30 per cent. There were also fewer lynchings in 1898 than in 1897, another favorable omen. But one of the most singular revelations of these statistics for 1898 is the falling off of charity gifts. In 1896 and '97 these gifts amounted to $33,600,000, but in 1898 to only $23,984,000. That it should be so seems strange in view of the fact that the past year is regarded as a far better business year than those which immediately preceded it, when benevolent contributions reached high-water mark. In the shining list of contributors Cora J. Flood, of San Francisco, stands first with a gift of $2,250,000 to the University of California, and Oliver H. Payne, of New York, comes next with two gifts to Cornell which rounded out $2,000,000. The bulk of the gifts went to education. The country believes in higher education.

—The Galveston Tribune quotes Mr. Reid, a representative of the exporting firms of Louis Dreyfus & Co., and Eli Berney & Co., of New York, as saying that grain is better handled at the Galveston Harbor than any other place in America, that the inspection is admirable and that Galveston, in a few years, will be to the West what New York now is to the East. Mr. Reid also predicts the largest grain crop this year in the history of the United States. The West thus seems to be a continual revelation to Eastern politicians and business men. The World's Fair, to be held in this city in 1903, will be as much of an eye-opener to some of our Eastern people, in all probabilty, as to some of the foreigners who will then visit, not our shores only, but our great inland country and metropolis. St. Louis is not envious of this fine compliment to Galveston, but rejoices in the prospective interest in the mutual outlook of the two cities.

—The ringing, pointed address of W. J. Wright, of Washington, D. C., delivered before the Christian Convention at Chattanooga last October, has been published in a tract and may be had in any desired quantity for missionary purposes by addressing F. M. Rains, Cincinnati, O. It makes a splendid missionary document.

—The Australian Church of Christ Almanac for 1899 contains a large picture of A. McLean for its central figure, around which, in striking colors, are grouped facts and figures about the church. At the bottom of the very large sheet is the calendar for the year. Taken together this is a very novel way of advertising the Australian Church of Christ, the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the gospel of Christ Jesus our Lord.

—I have just finished reading "Spiritual Teaching and Education" in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Jan. 12. I desire to express my appreciation of its statement of our condition and needs, and the remedy. I have been sorely puzzled to know how to overcome the ignorance of the people concerning God's Word that exists in the churches for which I have preached, and which seems to prevail in all churches. It seems as though the pride of many of our people in "our plea" benumbs their sense of its real meaning and their consciousness of our obligations. Nearly a year ago I advocated the same plan of morning service in the church here as is suggested in the above article, but did not succeed in getting the people to take hold of it. Would be pleased to hear more in your paper on this remedy or some other.

Cortland, O. G. W. MOORE.

—Some very strong sermons have been preached recently against the liquor traffic by our St. Louis preachers. Two of these we heard—one by F. G. Tyrrell and the other by F. O. Fannon—and they were both strong and stirring appeals. Let the fight go on. There is no compromise to be made with King Alcohol.

—R. A. Hopper, Tempe, Ariz., standing alone in that part of the state, is seeking to raise $1,000 to erect a building, and is at work on the foundation. The Extension Board has promised him a loan of $500 when the $1,000 has been raised. There is not a good church building of ours in the whole territory. There can be no better man for that great field than Bro. Hopper, and his appeal for help should fall upon sympathetic ears and receive encouraging response.

—A young preacher of approved character and ability, who can work for $600 a year for a congregation which has just completed a beautiful new church in a Western state, can be put into correspondence with the parties by addressing the editor of this paper with proper references if unknown.

—The following note, received just before we close the paper for this week, gives us the only information we have received concerning the departure of this good brother. Our sympathies are extended to the bereaved:

Our Bro. J. H. Bauserman died at the home of his sister, Mrs. J. C. Evans, Valley Falls, Kan., Wednesday night, Jan. 18, and was buried at Leavenworth Friday, Jan. 20th. At his request I will write at greater length concerning his life and work as soon as his sister furnishes me some needed data. I am sure you will sorrow with his friends.

Very sincerely,

Indianapolis, Ind. HELEN E. MOSES.

—The St. Louis Advocate of last week points out a new danger to life—the danger of murder by the use of microbes administered in some way by an enemy with intent to killl. The ease with which the germs of deadly diseases may be cultivated and transmitted, and the difficulty there would be in detecting the criminal—the editor thinks—will constitute a new danger to society. Perhaps the editor is right, but let us hope that the microbe is yet an unknown quantity in disease-producing causes, and that a better acquaintance with its nature in the near future will remove our fears of his life destroying power.

Clergyman's Statement

Nerve Strength Gained by Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

BRIGHTON, IOWA.—Rev. Bernard M. Shulick of this place, owing to weakness of the nerves, was for a time unable to attend to his duties. He makes this statement: "I have suffered for a long time from weak nerves. After I had taken a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla I became quite well again. The weakness of the nerves has now wholly disappeared and I am able to attend to my duties again. I am therefore grateful to Hood's Sarsaparilla and I recommend it to everyone who suffers from weak nerves."

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

—The editorial by our contributing editor, J. J. Haley, entitled "Spiritual Teaching and Education," is receiving much commendation from our readers, who are a very appreciative and discriminating class of people. They call for more of the same kind, and they will be sure to receive it, for our whole editorial staff are a unit on that and all other leading subjects.

—The Christian preachers of this city enjoyed an unusually interesting meeting here on last Monday. Bro. McLean, of Cincinnati, was present and gave a delightfully encouraging talk on the present and future of our Foreign Mission work.

—Dr. Joseph Baldwin, Prof. Emeritus of Pedagogy, of the University of Texas, died Jan. 13th, 1899. From the funeral address, which was delivered by J. W. Lowber, pastor of the Christian Church at Austin, in the presence of a large audience, we glean the following facts of his life: Dr. Baldwin was born in New Castle, Pa., in 1827, graduated from Bethany College in 1852, married the same year to Miss Sophia Fluhart, who survives him, became well known in Missouri and in Indiana as a distinguished educator, established the Normal School at Kirksville, Mo., in 1867, in September 1881 became president of the Texas State Normal School at Huntsville, and in 1891 was unanimously called to take charge of the School of Pedagogy in the University of Texas. The address further states that Dr. Baldwin had been an elder in the Christian Church for more than forty years and leaves a splendid record as a Christian, as well as an educator. His daughter, Dr. Baldwin, became one of our missionaries to India and is known throughout all the churches for her zeal in the cause of Foreign Missions. Thus closes in the death of Dr. Joseph Baldwin a useful and honored life.

—The Winchester (Ill.) Times contains an obituary of Mrs. Jeannette Black, the wife of Elder B. C. Black. Funeral services were conducted at the Christian Church, of Winchester, by J. H. Coats and J. M. Riggs in the presence of "the largest audience ever assembled at a funeral [in that city] for many years." The remains were taken to Milford, Ind., the home of her childhood, for interment. She was born Dec. 26, 1864, married to Elder Black, Sept. 7, 1887, and departed this life Jan. 7, 1899. Of her Christian faith, work, life and relations few have called forth more earnest praise or were more deeply mourned by Christian friends at death than was Sister Black, of Winchester, Ill.

—The Christian Missionary Magazine for January, edited and published by T. A. Abbott, 712 Commercial Building, this city, contains the annual list of preachers in the state of Missouri. Of course every preacher in the state will want a copy of this number of the magazine as it aids in securing a clergyman's permit on the railroads of the Western Passenger Association. The secretary has taken great pains to get the name of each preacher in the state and to get it right. So if your name is not there it is because you have been careless about responding to the secretary's call for it. This number of this magazine also gives full instructions in securing a clergyman's permit in the passenger railway associations.

—On another page of this paper will be found a number of responses to our invitation to the brethren to express themselves concerning the issue presented in Bro. J. Z. Tyler's letter on "A Crisis in Christian Endeavor." As we have fully as many more letters on hand, and all of them of the same tenor, we reserve our further comments on the situation until next week. It is easy to see, however, what is necessary to be done and what can easily be accomplished.

—John B. Briney, whose counterfeit we present on our first page, is a Kentuckian by birth. He was born Feb. 11, 1839, and like many another great man, spent his boyhood on the farm. He spent four years in Eminence College in that state, and after serving a number of churches and editing The Apostolic Times two years, he removed to other fields of labor. He spent two years as pastor of the Linden St. Church, Memphis, conducting while there a Southern department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and removed to Springfield, Ill., in 1888, where he remained as pastor of the church in that city until January, 1891. He is now, and has been for several years, pastor of the church at Moberly, Mo., where he has done a valuable work, and where his labors are still appreciated. He is a frequent contributor to our religious journals, the present number of this paper containing an article from his pen. He recently said to the editor of this paper that he could never read more, study harder, learn faster and preach better than at the present time.

—The war which has been waging in Lexington, Ky., between temperance people and saloon men over the Sunday closing law, recently came to blows. Some of the students of the Bible College have been visiting saloons on Sunday nights, securing evidence against their keepers, and it is said that over one hundred indictments have thereby been secured. This has made the saloonkeepers hot, and on Jan. 15th the spies were stoned and in some places badly beaten up. Just what course the war will now take is not known, but the saloon men are likely to get the worst of the fight before it ends. In a paragraph on Bro. Spencer's sermon in that city on the subject, in another place, it will be seen that the students are supported in their course by the faculty of the college and leading citizens of the city.

"Little Jo."

The accompanying message from our faithful pastor at Nora Springs, Iowa, will strike a responsive chord in many hearts that have gone through similar affliction:

JAN. 17, 1899.

Little Jo answered the Master's gentle "Come unto me," last night. We will bury him at Jacksonville, Ill., and we want you, if it is convenient, to come over and say a few words to us, for he loved you so. Yours in His name, W. W. and MARY WHARTON.

Tenderly we laid his fragile form to rest yesterday, and fondly shall I cherish the memory of the dear little boy who, in the short years of his life, and through much suffering, taught all who knew him to love "Little Jo." God's blessing be upon his parents and grandparents in this great loss. A. P. COBB.

PERSONAL MENTION.

R. L. Lotz is holding a protacted meeting at Minerva, O.

J. K. Cornell, of Murray, Ia., began a meeting recently at Fremont.

C. A. Lockhart filled the pulpit at Waterloo, Ia., on Jan. 17th.

The new church at Stewart, Ia., will be dedicated on Jan. 29th. The dedicator has not yet been announced.

The adddress of Samuel Traum is now Nevin, O., instead of Wilmington.

A. M. Hootman, of Union City, Ind., will assist T. A. Hall in a meeting at Milton, Ind., beginning Feb. 10th.

T. A. Hall has resigned the work at Milton, to accept the work at Oxford, Ind., where he will move about March 1st.

Prof. Lee B. Millikan is now the chorister of the Tabernacle Christian Church, Decatur, Ill.

J. M. Hoffmann has accepted a call from Boone, Iowa, and will take the work there March 1st.

F. O. Fannon, pastor of the First Church, this city, is assisting Levi Marshall in a meeting at Hannibal, Mo.

M. Rice, pastor of the church at Southwest City, Mo., says that in six months the Endeavor Society of that church has read 71 books.

A. M. Harvout, pastor Central Christian Church, Cincinnati, is to assist F. G. Tyrrell, Central Christian Church, in a meeting, beginning his work on the 30th inst.

J. Z. Tyler, we learn, is expected to assist F. O. Fannon in a meeting in this city, beginning about Feb. 15th St. Louis means to win her share of the 100,000 souls.

Clark Braden, of Harrisonville, Mo., J. G. Scott, of Toronto, Canada and B. F. Slusher, of Decatur, Ill., recently dined with Geo. F. Hall and wife at their home, Decatur, Ill.

H. A. Easton, singing evangelist, is assisting in a meeting at Paris, Ill. Correspondents may address him there for a s ort time. Permanent address is Danville, Ill., Lock Box 220.

L. Swindle, of Glendora, Cal., requests every one who will to send him the very best clipping or quotation from any source whatever on any phase of the subject of Christian union.

Geo. F. Hall has been unanimously continued as pastor of the Tabernacle Christian Church, Decatur, Ill., this being the sixth year of his service in that relationship to the church.

C. H. Van Law, of Marshalltown, Iowa, though a lawyer, is frequently called on as pulpit supply. He spoke at New Sharon two Sundays and did it well. He is president of the eighth district Y. P. S. C. E.

W. J. Brown and P. B. May are the editors of a new four page paper called The Church Record. No. 4, Vol. 1, has reached our table and the strong articles in it indicate that a journal of no mean ability is contemplated by the founders. May their hopes be more than realized, is our best wish for their enterprise in religious journalism.

Dr. Albert Buxton, of Fairbury, Neb., called at this office last week, on his way to a meeting of the Foreign Mission Board at Cincinnati. Dr. Buxton encouraged us with a very kind expression of his high appreciation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Geo. T. Smith, pastor of the church at Albia, Ia., can be secured to hold one protracted meeting with some church in need of such a meeting. His experience in evangelistic and pastoral work will enable him to do good work for the church that may secure him for this one meeting only.

J. E. Lynn, pastor of the Christian Church at Springfield, Ill., opened the new year with a series of four jubilee sermons on "What the Disciples of Christ Plead for." The sermon on "The Union of all Christ's Followers" was printed in full in the daily papers of that city.

W. H. Waggoner, Eureka, Ill., who is making a specialty of holding missionary institutes, writes encouragingly of the growing interest in his work as it comes to be better understood. With his maps, charts and facts he is doing much to awaken interest in the subject of missions. He should be kept busy this Jubilee Year in holding institutes.

S. D. Dutcher, of Cincinnati, but for many years one of our highly esteemed Missouri preachers, has received a unanimous call from the church at Mexico, Mo., and has accepted the same and will begin his work there in a few weeks. This will be good news for all our Missouri preachers, who will welcome Bro. Dutcher to their ranks most heartily. We congratulate the church at Mexico upon its good fortune, and predict a prosperous future for the congregation.

When The Stomach

refuses to work it means that every digestive organ in the body is unable to perform its functions properly. Through lack of proper nourishment the entire system thus becomes impoverished and weakened. At the first symptom of digestive trouble take the old reliable

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer

the old Swiss-German remedy. It regulates and strengthens the digestive organs while it purifies the blood and invigorates the system.

It was discovered by an old German physician and has been in use for over 100 years, though not extensively advertised. It seldom fails to cure all diseases caused by impoverished or impure blood or from disordered stomach.

No Drug-Store medicine; is sold only by regular Vitalizer agents.

Persons living where there are no agents for Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer can, by sending $2.00, obtain twelve 35-cent trial bottles direct from the proprietor. This offer can be obtained only once by the same person.

Chas. Blaisdell, student of the University and Bible College of Missouri, has been called to preach for the congregations at Yates and Tulip, the former in Randolph and the latter in Monroe Co., Mo.

S. J. Phillips, Sugar Grove, Wis., has the names of two experienced, successful, educated preachers whom he wishes to locate in good, live, missionary churches in good railroad centers. Salaries asked, from $600 to $800. Any such churches in need of preaching would do well to correspond with Bro. Phillips.

The Monthly Christian Blade, Topeka Kansas, says that J. W. Hilton, financial agent for Cotner University, is succeeding nicely. The outlook for our debt-burdened colleges generally seems to be improving. The same paper says that A. M. Haggard, who now has charge of the Bible Department of Drake University during the sickness of Dean Everest, contemplates a trip to Europe for evangelistic purposes.

We publish in this paper a short article from Bro. Bakewell, of Carondale, Ill., on "The Blessed Hope." Bro. Bakewell is now in his 87th year. Bro. Bakewell has been intimately associated with the restoration movement from the first. He at one time worked on the Christian Baptist and Millennial Harbinger as a printer. He was also for a time the proprietor of the "Steward's Inn" at Bethany, during which time Prof. Pendleton and his wife were among his guests. He did also clerical work for Alexander Campbell for a time before coming West. These historic associations will add great interest to the few words from his pen at this age, referred to above.

New York Letter.

On Lord's day morning January the 8th, Bro. Wallace C. Payne presented his resignation as pastor of the Church of the Disciples of Christ at 323 West 56th St., New York, to take effect July the 1st next. Bro. Payne has worked with earnestness and zeal to build up the cause, but the field is a difficult one, as is every city work where the forces are inadequate to cope with the peculiarities of the situation. Institutional or open church methods must be applied sooner or later in down-town church work in order to reach the people. Bro. Payne has been quite anxious to adopt some of the open church features, but it seems the necessary means is not in sight and consequently it cannot be taken up for the present at least. Personally we are very sorry to have him lay down the work at 56th, for he has proven a delightfully sweet spirited Christian gentleman. No doubt he is ready to negotiate with churches in need of a pastor. May he not be permitted to lose a single day between pastoral engagements.

The people of the 169th St. Church continue to be good to me—and mine. We had scarcely recovered from their lavish kindness at Christmas when they attacked us a second time. It was on this wise: Things so happened that on the first day of January ten years ago, at Knoxville, Tenn., the daughter of my mother-in-law and I became one and on the first of the October following came to this church to labor in the gospel. Our tenth wedding anniversary had come and gone and by us was about forgotten; but not so in the minds of the Christian Endeavorers of our church. For on the 12th they held a sociable in the lecture room, and at a certain point of the evening's enjoyment, called the innocent pastor and his innocent wife conspicuously to the front and proceeded to be-tin them with all manner of queer accoutrements. This was kept up for about the space of half an hour when the pile of tin was so large that we were pleased that it discon-tin-ued to grow. The good young people were thanked for their great kindness, but were told their pastor would expect a pile just as large at his silver and golden anniversaries. These tokens go far toward filling a preacher's life with joy and uniting him more firmly to the people he serves, not because of the intrinsic value of the gifts, but for what they represent of love and good will.

The annual conference of the missionary secretaries of the mission boards of the United States and Canada met at the Episcopal Mission Building, 22nd Street and Fourth Avenue, this city, January 10-12 and had one of the largest and best meetings in the history of the association. These conferences are mutually helpful to the various mission boards because they bring the secretaries and others deeply interested in the promotion of the cause of missions into sympathetic personal touch with one another. These men learn to know and love one another and as a result they respect and honor each other's work. Methods and means are freely discussed; successes and failures are studied and general co-operative plans are agreed upon. Bro. A. McLean represented the Foreign Mission work of the Disciples in the conference; and he and S. T. Willis are to serve their interests on the committee to arrange for the great Ecumenical Missionary Conference of the world which meets in New York in April 1900. It is believed this will prove to be the greatest representative gathering of missions yet assembled on earth. The Discipes of Christ will be known and felt in this conference, we trust. We are sorry that neither Miss White nor Miss Pounds could be present at the conferences of the Woman's Boards, to represent our C. W. B. M., which was held at the same time in the Broadway Tabernacle. The American Board gave a reception and dinner to the representatives of thirty-four missionary societies at the Hotel Manhattan, on Wednesday evening, the 11th. The banquet and the addresses were enjoyed by about 200 distinguished guests.

If the present program is carried out the new church of the Disciples of Christ of Boston will have been dedicated before this is published. The day set for dedicatory services is January 22nd, and Bro. B. L. Smith, Cor. Sec. of the American Christian Missionary Society, delivers the sermon. Sometime since this church sold its old property, corner of Madison St. and Shawmut Ave., and bought a new site at 18 St. James St., Roxbury. The new property comprised about 8,000 feet of land, a dwelling house that did not have to be moved and will be used as a parsonage, and a sufficient quantity of Roxbury stone to build the new chapel. The New England Messenger says: "The chapel is finished in cypress and has besides auditorium, pastor's study, robing rooms, Sunday-school room, ladies' parlor, library, etc. The entire building was heated by steam, lighted by gas, and a fine pipe organ has been put in." Dr. W. A. Belding will preach for the church until a pastor is secured. We wish to congratulate the Boston Disciples on their success, and hope they have entered upon an era of greater prosperity than ever before enjoyed by them.

Kansas City Letter.

It has been my privilege to enjoy glimpses of the life of our boys in blue in far-off Manila through the eyes of one of themselves, which is more satisfactory than the stories that fill the newspapers, some of which are manufactured for the occasion, no doubt. A nephew, who has for several years been in the regular army and whose regiment was in the front at the attack on Manila, has written me several most interesting letters, from which I purpose giving a few extracts for your readers. No doubt, some of the things he writes will hardly seem credible, especially as regards the hardships imposed upon the people by the Spanish Government and the Roman Catholic Church, but he assures me that his statements are strictly true, and I have every reason to accept them:

The country is only half civilized. The Spanish have never made a geographical survey of the island. I hope that the United States will keep this island, as it is very fertile and the timber alone would make it worth while to keep it. It is heavily timbered with mahogany, rosewood, ebony and lignum vitæ. The land is very fertile. Oranges, bananas, pineapples and cocoanuts grow wild in abundance. Also breadfruit.

We have about 6,000 Spanish prisoners in the city, and they have liberty to go where and when they please. They are very peaceable and seem to take their defeat very coolly. Their officers are quite impudent and will not give an American soldier any part of the sidewalk when they meet him. But we give them half the walk, and if they are not satisfied with that we shove them off into the street. But you can hardly blame them, for they have been used to shoving their own soldiers off the walk, and habit is a great thing.

The old city of Manila is surrounded by a wall and moat. The wall is about thirty feet high, twelve feet thick at the top and twenty-six feet thick at the base. It is built of concrete, and is very old, some of the archways at the entrances of the city bearing the date of 1620, and some are even a little older yet. The walls are full of dungeons, some of which are terrible places. The main dungeon, the Black Hole of Manila, is in our fort, which is situated in the extreme northwest corner of the walled city. This dungeon is about forty feet long by thirty wide, and ten feet deep. The entrance to it is near the top, and is four feet square. The prisoners are forced into it through this entrance and then have to jump to the bottom. Then the entrance is closed and the poor prisoner is in absolutely inky darkness. Then the water from the river is turned on and the dungeon gradually filled to the top, drowning the poor victims. Talk about cruelty! Can any one conceive a more horrible death than that? The other dungeons are not so bad as this. They are only foul-smelling, damp and full of reptiles and vermin. They are what the Spanish had ready for the "American pigs" who dared to come over to fight the "brave Spanish gentlemen!" The Spanish soldiers and officers were very much surprised at the way they were treated by the Americans. They expected cruel treatment, but we even gave them rations out of our haversacks. They are now better fed than when in the service of Spain. A great many of them have tried to get into our army, but they could not enlist, as they are citizens of Spain and they cannot speak English.

I don't see how any man could be a Catholic after seeing how the priests rule this country. They are trying now secretely to get the natives to fight the Americans. The natives are all Catholics and are afraid as death of the priests. I have seen more brutal-looking priests here than anywhere I have ever been. Some of the churches here are the finest I ever saw, but such superstition I never witnessed before. I saw a fine old oil painting in a church here, and an explanation of it was written in Spanish underneath it. The following is the inscription translated into English: "This is the picture of the twelve saints [the names followed] who used to be hermits in the forest of Brittany. They were attacked by 300 Britons and cut into four pieces. They were cut through the center of the body, and then cloven from head to groin. Owing to their past piety it was impossible to kill them; and when the Britons left the pieces crawled together and grew back into their original bodies, and they became saints and converted the Britons to Christ!" The natives here believe such stuff as that. Looking over the prison records the officials found where there had been prisoners in the penitentiary here for twelve or fourteen years, with no other charge against them except "confined by order of the church!" When the priests wanted money they levied tax on the people, and if they did not pay it they were cast into prison. One young man, a native, was brought up for trial, having laid in jail for seven years without being tried. The charge was, "Confined by order of the church." The evidence showed that his crime consisted in objecting to the seduction of his sweetheart by the priest. This is one case of thousands. Is it any wonder that God has visited his vengeance on a nation that will allow such practices under the cloak of his beloved church? I was on patrol the other day and saw a priest knock a native woman off the sidewalk because she was in his way. I promptly stepped up to him and touched him lightly on the head with the butt of my gun, and consequently the nuns have one more father on their sick list! The Spanish soldiers and natives who were around opened their eyes in wonder that God did not strike me dead for lifting my hand against one of his servants, but you see he did not!

But I cannot give further extracts, though there is much more as interesting. May the American people never abandon the Philippines until they have brought the natives out

Are you preparing for the March collection, brother pastor? It is not too early to begin your planning for the Jubilee Year offering. The preachers of Kansas City and vicinity devote their monthly meeting, the first Friday in February, to a symposium on that subject, which will be conducted by Bro. B. F. Clay. Let every preacher within reach of the city attend it.

A good preacher, who can give the best of references, desires to find a field of labor in Missouri. Any churches wishing to correspond with him may write me, enclosing stamp, and their letters will be promptly forwarded to him. He has been successful where he has labored in the past.

Bro. Carey E. Morgan, of Minneapolis, is assisting the writer in a meeting, the results of which will be reported at the close. Already he has won the hearts of all by his strong, sweet, spiritual sermons.

Texas Letter.

Railroad building has had so much to do with the development of this country that watching its progress is not a bad method of noting the general progress of the land. In 1898 not less than 3,018 miles were built in the United States. And but for the early and severe winter, which has hindered the work, these figures would have been larger. But as they are they exceed any year since 1892, when 4,192 miles were built. But five states, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Kansas and Nevada, have failed to build any road during the year. Thirteen states have built more than 100 miles each, Minnesota heading the list with 250 miles. While the work is well distributed throughout the country, the bulk of it is in the SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST. Texas stands second in the list of states, with 182 miles.

The oil fields of Corsicana are assuming substantial proportions. The Standard Oil Company shows its faith in them by the erection of a $150,000 refinery, besides other large investments. This refinery will have a daily capacity of 1,000 barrels of crude oil. It is now in operation, and before these lines are in print the people of that city will be testing the first refined illuminating petroleum from a Southern refinery.

The Practical Christian, published in Houston, by J. C. Mason, has been consolidated with the Courier, and Bro. Mason becomes associate editor of the Courier. I feel like congratulating both papers. The Practical Christian was a vigorous and useful paper, and we folks of the Courier are glad to have its editor aid us in the work on our hands.

Dr. J. W. Lowber and wife are now beginning to see clearly the end of their splendid fight for a new house. This elegant structure, the best in the city, will be dedicated not later than the first of April. And, as this scribe is to assist in the dedicatory services, your readers shall know all the facts concerning the work in our capital city.

Champ Clark, one of our brethren, and a Missouri congressman, turns prophet and thus speaks of our part of the United States: "The canal (Nicaraugua), with a deep-water harbor on the Texas coast, will revolutionize railroad freight traffic and the ocean-carrying trade. When it is known beyond cavil that such a harbor has been secured, every railroad in the trans-Mississippi country will head for it. Physical facts compel that result. From the middle of North Dakota to the Gulf it is a 'downhill pull.' In fifty years on the Texas coast a city will arise, rivaling New York in population, wealth and commerce. The next census will give trans-Mississippians thirty additional congressmen and Presidential electors, with sixty additional votes in national conventions. The coming years are ours." So it looks to Southern eyes, and "so mote it be." (Remember that I do not own an acre of land in the South.)

Here is a good definition of la grippe. And now, while this disease is holding high carnival all over the land, and the doctors and the common people are not agreed on a definition, it would seem an opportune time for one on which all can agree. Ed C. Smith, Jr., the three-year-old son of one of our deacons, has had la grippe a few days. His father one morning said to him, "Ed C., how do you feel?" The little fellow's lips quivered as he answered, "I feels like I ain't got no pa, and no ma, and no clothes, and no nuffen," and he began crying as if his heart would break. Now, this definition may not, according to the doctors, be "regular," but that it is true I can testify from my own sad experience, as doubtless can thousands of others.

It is not too soon for us to begin to get ready for the March offering for missions. Let us think of it, talk about it, and pray over it, and strive to enlist a larger number of our people in it.

Prof. Joseph Baldwin, father of Dr. Olivia Baldwin, one of our foreign missionaries, died at his home in Austin, Jan. 13. He was a prominent educator, having been for twenty years principal of the Sam Houston Normal, and later a professor in the State University. Bro. Baldwin was an active worker in his home church, and also a prominent factor in all our conventions. A good man has fallen; the earth is poorer, but heaven is richer.

Am Interesting Letter.

I have just finished the rich and varied literary and spiritual repast furnished in the last number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Having spent twenty-five years in Missouri, and having become thoroughly identified with her enterprises, in many of which I have taken an honored part, and having learned to love the Missouri ministry as I can hardly hope to love those of any other section, and having an acquaintance very dear to me all over the state, is it not most natural that I have a deep and abiding interest in all the enterprises of the Missouri brotherhood?

The loan of myself to Kentucky for a time does not in the least lessen my interest. A number of Missouri papers, and letters many, keep me in touch and sympathy with every movement; and when I read your convention programs, I long to go up to the gathering of those I love.

While these Kentuckians are treating me well, and are a grand people (but for which last-named fact Missourians would not be the people they are), yet I feel myself largely a stranger here on my native soil.

A few days were recently spent in Lexington with my aged parents, to be near whom for a time had much to do with my coming to Kentucky. Here where I once knew nearly every one, familiar faces are now in a painful minority, a changed minority as well. Pres. Graham, the old man eloquent, has retired from active service; Profs. Loos, McGarvey, Shackelford, Patterson and others are hoary-headed and look through double lenses.

But since I think of it, Bros. Procter, Jones, Haley, Plattenburg, Garrison and others in Missouri are white-haired and spectacled too; but this does not seem so strange, because of our frequent and regular meetings for years.

Well, well—no, I will not moralize, even if it is hard to help it.

Speaking of these brethren suggests the capital idea, which to the delight of many, you have conceived, viz., The Christian Portrait Gallery. The faces and work of our pioneers should, from ever consideration, be handed down to coming generations. An acquaintance with the heroic spirits of the past will be of lasting benefit to our children and our children's children.

I thank God that my father's home has ever been the "preacher's home," and that it has been my privilege to know Campbell, Scott, Smith, Johnson, Raines, Rogers, Ricketts, Gano, Challen, Hayden, Richardson, Pendleton, Pinkerton, Anderson, Lard, Hopson and a host of younger men.

I was, of course, too young to understand much that the oldest of these grand men of God said, but each of them made a lasting impression upon me. Hundreds of times have I fed the venerable and palsied John Smith, and and having indelibly stamped on my memory some of his sayings, I would give a good round sum for even one of his sermons.

Has even one of all he preached been preserved? If so, who has it?

Yes, transmit to coming generations at leat the faces and spirit of our pioneers.

I congratulate the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the brotherhood on the "Nine Decades of History of the Restoration Movement" to appear in this, our Jubilee Year of missions.

We have multiplied thousands who know next to nothing as to the origin and progress of this the greatest movement of the nineteenth century. Our editors as well as our preachers have all the while taken too much for granted. The people generally are not as well versed in the fundamentals of the gospel or in the distinctive principles of the Disciples as many have supposed.

All of the generation who figured in the inauguration of the the Restoration have passed away. Most of the second generation are gone. Even the third one is fast thinning. Comparatively little is known by the rising generation of the inauguration and progress of our movement.

It is hoped that the writers selected will do their work as thoroughly and authentically as possible, and that the series of articles may finally be put in book form at such price that thousands will be bought and read.

I cannot close without expressing my pleasure in what seems a wise solution of our Missouri educational interests.

May preachers and people rally speedily to raise the amount asked, and may heaven's blessing rest upon the man to be selected to visit the brethren to quicken their interest in the schools and to look after endowment. No man could ask a higher or holier task.

"Poor France."

This heading has become here well-nigh stereotyped in the current publications whether daily, weekly or monthly, whether religious or secular, educational or commercial, civil or military; in a word, no matter what the character of the publication may be, this note of despair forms the constant refrain, nor is it limited to any one class; the professor, the clergyman, the public lecturer, the editor, the politician, everybody is discouraged. This single adjective sums up the universal sentiment of the French people at the present time. Even the most patriotic seem to have lost heart in the face of the antagonistic conditions of their political life, which seem to menace from day to day the very existence of the republic. Glorious past, humiliating present, a future full of pitfalls. Left alone by the inglorious defeat of Spain, the destiny, the dignity, the honor of the Latin race is in the hands of the French nation They feel to the very last ounce the burden which the course of events has placed upon their shoulders. They recall the past glory and their race when all Europe was subject to the court of Versailles, when the French language had no competitor, when France had no dangerous rivals. To-day, no matter where they turn their eyes, their ancient subjects have become their powerful, invincible enemies as well commercially as from a military point of view. They see it, they know it, they feel it. They cry out in their national anguish. Some deny it, others admit it with an oath, with imprecations against their rivals, with vows of vengeance which they are incapable of realizing. They are not left alone in their woes. The press of every nation is continually reminding them of their plight, of their degeneracy. "You are a degenerate race," "you are dying," that is the daily message which every foreign land sends to "poor France." A terrible message to send to forty millions of human creatures, descendants of glorious ancestors. Nor does it arrive in an envelope of "human kindness," of "Christian charity." No, the wrapper is made of irony, satire, the contemptuous smile, the goading laugh, the biting wit and sarcasm, the victorious shouts of ancient foes. France, left wounded and bleeding by the roadside, finds no good Samaritan. The German stalks up and down the Rhine on both shores, cracks his military boot, spurs his steed, brandishes his sword and fires off his cannons in sham battles, displays at every point the victorious armies of Prussia. John Bull sails up and down the English channel in the midst of innumerable ships, in order to show wounded and dying France what it is necessary to have in order to save its colonies, in order to avoid the inevitable conflict. Apropos, an editor has just made the assertion that it is impossible for "poor France" to have colonies and have England for enemy. Another discovers that the only reason English statesmen decline or postpone a war with Russia or Germany is that neither have any colonies to pay for the powder burned, that France has and that England wants war with her for the sake of the colonies to be had at the end of a campaign, that the English have in store for "poor France" the same inevitable humiliation which has fallen to the lot of Spain, that England would not hesitate to profit by the example set by the Germans in 1870 and by the Americans in 1898. And as a matter of fact it would be as easy to assert the incompetency of France to develop its colonies as it has been to prove the insufficiency of the Spanish colonial administration.

According to the opinion of many distinguished patriots in different professions, who seem to be seeking the salvation of their race and their native country, France is not only badly administered, but the victim of too many "bureaus" of social and governmental system which reduces the individual to a degree of subjection incompatible with the progress and upbuilding of a nation. There is a most decided tendency to insist on the doctrine of individualism as the only salvation for France. The newspapers and magazines imbued with this idea are zealous in presenting the Anglo-Saxon as the fruit of this social theory. Look at England, look at the United States, and be saved, is the admonition of a school of distinguished economists represented by M. Demoulins. Others no less convinced of the desperate condition of their country are waging a bitter warfare against all attempts to restore the French nation by an injection of Anglo-Saxonisms contending that it is absolutely impossible for a nation so radically and constitutionally different to adopt the ideas of another race, that it is necessary to maintain all the traditions, religious, social and educational, of the Latin races, and if need be to die loyal to their ancient origin. Prof. Doumic and others of the University of Paris represent with intense enthusiasm this conservative but probably very sensible and possibly the only practicable movement.

As an illustration of the zeal of the party demanding the freedom of the individual, the following summary of an editorial in yesterday's issue of the Journal des Debats, will suffice and serve at the same time as an example of the method of agitation followed by the school of which Demoulins is the head. The article in question has for text the recent donation of 500,000 pounds for charitable and scientific purposes made by the English brewer, Lord Iveaugh. What would we do in France? asks the editor, in such a case. Suppose some generous Frenchman wanted to follow the example of Lord Iveaugh. If he decided to put his gift into the hands of some existing society it would be necessary to have the permission of the state, which would place upon him certain restrictions; if he wanted to create a new organization the permission of the state with even greater restrictions would be necessary; nor would he be allowed to direct the organization and administration of the society founded according to his own free will. At every step he would find rules and regulations, administrative complications and bureaucratic hindrances in his way. If he had any independence of character, any desire to determine the manner in which his liberalities should be employed, he would probably give up in disgust and keep his money. He would have learned that nothing is more difficult in France than to do good when the donor wants to act in any other way or by any other medium than the state, its functionaries and institutions. That isn't all. When he asks how much it costs to be charitable, to give away one's wealth, he finds that according to laws already existing concerning donations and legacies, the state and municipality will have to be paid something like 12 per cent. and that laws passed by the Chamber of Deputies and now before the Senate propose to increase the rate to 16 1-2 in the case of donations and to 20 per cent. for legacies. The rate is less if the organization be charitable in the strictest sense of the term, which excludes museums, libraries, laboratories and other like institutions. In case the present bills become laws, the generous donor would find himself compelled to pay about 200,000 francs for every million which he might give to public institutions other than those strictly charitable. Needless to say that in France these are strictly Catholic, for of the more than 40,000,000 inhabitants of France not more than 600,000 could be counted as Protestants. Evidently, concludes the editor of this most reputable journal, which disputes first place with Le Temps.

The originators of all these administrative formalities and fiscal exactions considered every attempt to render service to one's fellow-creatures, except by the intervention of the state, as a public evil. This kind of legislation results in discouraging and disgusting many generous souls. It fills the treasuries of all manner of Catholic institutions, the politicians who say they hate these give them a monopoly of all legacies inasmuch as they render every other form of benevolent enterprise practically impossible and treat every person as "suspect" and as subject to be taxed without mercy who is guilty of wishing, even after death, to ameliorate the misery, increase the well-being or cultivate the intellect of his neighbor.

Gethsmane Gleanings.

The day before Christmas my brother, B. F., from Philadelphia, with his wife and two little boys, and my brother, Hugh W., with his wife and her brother, Mr. Earl Sellers, of Richmond, came to the parsonage to spend the holidays with us. That night the ladies fixed a tree in the parsonage dining room and the children were wild with delight the next morning when they beheld it. We had two most excellent services Christmas day. Monday night we had a most helpful and soul-inspiring prayer-meeting at the residence of our good young brothers, Elmore Tucker and John Melton. Tuesday evening my brother, B. F., whom we call "Frank," requested me to baptize him. So the three families of us, including all the children, and Bro. G. W. Wright, one of our deacons, repaired to the pool at the rear of the church, and just as the sun sank in the western horizon, painting the sky in tints of gold, and the soft breezes sighed through the tall pines, as though some Eolian harp sounded the requiem of earthly things, he was buried with his Lord and rose again to newness of life. Wednesday night a large congregation met at the residence of Bro. Wm. Waters and held an excellent prayer-meeting. Thursday night there was another large prayer-meeting at Bro. Robert Martin's. As Sister Martin is consumptive it was a great treat to her to have an enthusiastic meeting in her own home. Saturday afternoon, after a beautiful week, black clouds o'erspread the sky and rain fell for some hours, which changed to snow at nightfall. When I retired at 11 P. M., the snow was still falling, and the cold wind whistled around the house in so dismal a manner that a sad, subdued feeling crept o'er the spirit, and one could almost hear the bitter moans of the departing year. Sunday morning the snow was still falling, but ceased ere long, and the bright New Year sun came out in radiant glory to behold the earth clad in a mantle of white, like the spotless paper upon which no mark of the pen had yet been made. Instead of preaching at the morning service, we had New Year's resolutions, and the meeting was, to me at least, exceedingly interesting. My relations left Sunday afternoon, making the parsonage appear "lone and drear." On Monday, at a church meeting at Gethsemane, two of our deacons were selected as elders, and two other brethren selected as deacons to fill the places thus made vacant. And thus closed one of the most delightful holiday seasons I have ever known. May we gird up our loins for the work of the new year, and may the blessings of God make our efforts far more fruitful of good than they were in the year 1898.

Bina Church Dedication.

Lord's day, Dec. 4th, 1898, was a great red letter day in Bina, C. P., India. The new church building was dedicated with appropriate exercises at the morning meeting.

The dedication of a Christian church in India is no ordinary event. To dedicate a church built without the aid of home societies or government is an agreeable exception to the general rule.

This was a remarkably happy occasion to all of us who had the privilege of attending. The Christian mission in India was well represented from Mahoba, Deogarh, Damoh and Hurda, while families that had been converted in Bina came from Bhopal and Jhausis. Others who could not come sent letters and telegrams full of Christian greeting.

The history of this first Church of Christ in Bina is well worth telling and repeating, but I can only give a few brief notes in this letter. When Bro. Ben Mitchell and his good wife, with Miss Ida Kinsey and Miss Burgess came here, less than five years ago, there was not a single member of the Christian Church in Bina. There was not a church building of any kind in the place. In this time a large stone bungalow has been built for a home for the missionaries, and Bro. and Sister Mitchell have made it a beautiful home of good cheer and sweet fellowship for all weary travelers. A church of 54 immersed believers has been organized, with a present membership in Bina of 47 members, several of whom were formally Roman Catholics. In the last twelve months the church building was erected. It is a stone and brick edifice, substantially placed on a stone foundation. The inside of the house measures 50 x 30 feet, costing Rs 5550, or $1,800. The entire cost has been paid and provided for in India. Such Indian church propagation is a good omen for the future of Christianity in this great empire. This English church has established and supported a native day and Sunday-school which also has a building and grounds of its own. I would be leaving out one special feature of the dedicatory exercises did I not say that just before the dedicatory prayer Rs 818 were offered towards the payment of the cost of the building, leaving only $600 yet to raise.

Bro. Mitchell and the Christians in Bina deserve great credit for their sacrificing, persevering spirit which has made this successful work possible. As a reward they have souls saved, a good church and the Word of the Lord sounding forth in every direction. To those who know this field, it is nothing less than the fulfillment of the prophecy, "The desert shall blossom as the rose," and one of the sweetest roses in this desert is the Christian fellowship of loving, redeemed hearts in Christ Jesus.

"The Blessed Hope."

Reader, do you know what "the blessed hope" is? I have asked several Christians to tell me, but they could not. They have said it is to be in heaven. But it is something more than that. Please let me invite your attention to it as declared by the apostle Paul in his letter to Titus, as given in the translation by Campbell, Macknight and Doddridge: "For the favor of God, which brings salvation, has appeared to all men teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, expecting the blessed hope, namely, the appearing of the great God, and of our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity and purify to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. These things inculcate and exhort, and reprove with all authority; let no one despise you."

"The blessed hope" is to see the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ, and to be with them through the wasteless ages of eternity.

Let us inquire, What are the attributes of the great God? They are his eternity, omnipresence, infinite knowledge, infinite wisdom, omnipotence and boundless beneficence. It has been affirmed that "God is a being whose centre is everywhere, and whose circumference is nowhere."

We shall notice his omnipotence. Omnipotence is that attribute of the Divine Being by which he can accomplish everything that does not imply a contradiction, however far it may transcend the comprehension of finite minds.

It is claimed that the sun is one million three hundred thousand times larger than this terraqueous globe. And it has been considered, with good reason, that every star is a sun no less spacious than ours, surrounded by a host of planetary globes which revolve around it as a center and derives light and heat from it. Nearly a thousand of these luminaries may be seen on a clear winter night by the naked eye; so that a mass of matter equal to a thousand solar systems, or to thirteen hundred and twenty globes of the size of the earth, may be perceived by every common observer in the canopy of heaven.

It has been computed that nearly one hundred millions of stars might be perceived by the most perfect instrument, were all the regions of the sky thoroughly explored. And yet all this vast assemblage of suns and worlds, when compared with what lies beyond the utmost boundaries of human vision, in the immeasurable spaces of creation, may be no more than as the smallest particle of vapor to the immense ocean. Immeasurable regions of space lie beyond the utmost limits of mortal view, into which even imagination itself can scarcely penetrate, and which are doubtless replenished with the operations of divine wisdom and omnipotence.

Reader, have you "the blessed hope?" If not, why procrastinate? Think of the eternal honor and happiness of being in the presence of the great God and his Son, the Lord Jesus Christ.

SORE HANDS
CURED BY CUTICURA

My sore hands commenced with a burning on my fingers. When I rubbed them you could see little white pimples, and I felt like twisting them out of their sockets. I had high fever and cold chills, nights I had to walk the floor until I fell asleep. My hands peeled like an onion, the finger nails got loose, the water ran out, and there the burning fire was. My hands puffed up worse than a toad, the water ran through the bandage on to the floor. I went to a doctor for a year. I got CUTICURA RESOLVENT and CUTICURA SOAP. The nails hardened up, peeled off, and my hands are now cured.

Getting Close to Christ.

We get close to Christ—

1. In prayer. Prayer is the highest act of the soul. When we pray truly, all that is best, noblest, most exalted, purest, heavenliest in us presses up toward God. But Christ is the way to the Father. And Paul, in Col. 3:17, says: "And whatsoever ye do, in word or in deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father through him."

2. In obeying his Word. Christ himself assures us in John 14:23, "If a man love me he will keep my Word, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." (Read 1 John 2:24.) Here, then, is the essential condition of Christ dwelling with us.

3. In Christian service. He does not leave us to work alone. He sends us forth to service, but says: "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:20). In all holy ministries we come so close to him that we touch his loving heart. Does he not say, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me?" (Matt. 25:34-40.) How sweet this nearness, and how blessed is this promise of our Master. He will not leave us nor forsake us. We must always add resources to our own, when making our calculatisns. Then let us ever say:

"Closer to thee, my Savior, draw me,
Nor let me leave thee more,
Sighing to feel thine arms aroud me,
And all my wand'rings o'er.

Closer by thy sweet Spirit, draw me,
Till I am wholly thine;
Quicken, refine, and wash and cleanse me,
Till pure my soul shall shine."

Foreign Missions.

There is nothing God so honors in results as labor spent in missions.

There is nothing which so alleviates the woes of humanity as work done in missions.

There is nothing which pays so well to the commercial world as money spent for missions.

There is nothing so necessary for the life and success of the church as a zeal for missions.

There is nothing that will so hasten the coming of the millennium as the success of missions.

There is nothing so essential for the preservation and elevation of this country as the work of missions.

There is nothing our Master commanded more explicitly, and with so much emphasis, as for the cause of missions.

There is nothing that will help more to unite a divided Christendom than a grand uprising for missions.

There is nothing which will so determine the future destiny of heathen nations as the immediate advance of missions.

There is nothing which so claims your support and sympathy as does the cause of missions. We care not where you would place the emphasis, upon temperance, education, philanthropy, or patriotism, the cause of missions underlies and supersedes them all. And why longer dally with this question, forever deferring the conflict for other generations to face? We beseech you, brethren, in the name of a common Savior and a common humanity, do something quickly. Now is the crisis.

Send for March offering envelopes, the Missionary Voice and pastoral letters at once, and make the March offering the greatest in our history.

Enlisting for the March Offering.

It is gratifying to know that a goodly number of the churches and preachers have already agreed to take the March offering. We are encouraged to believe that a larger number of new churches will take the offering this year than ever before. This ought to be the case as the enlargement of the work makes it necessary to have a great increase in the funds of the society.

Our preachers can materially aid in this work by visiting one or more churches in their county or even adjoining counties and giving them a first-class sermon on Foreign Missions. Get these churches to take the offering in March. This will do both church and preacher good. If one-half of the ministers of the state of Missouri would do that we could easily double the number of contributing churches and the receipts from the state.

At present not one church in four in the state of Missouri has given anything to Foreign Missions. There must be a cause for this. We do not believe that three-fourths of the churches are opposed to this work. In fact, a very small number belong to that class. In most cases where churches fail to take the offering it is due to indifference. Some one has failed to call their attention to this matter. Dear reader, you may be just the one to enlist your own church this year. Try it.

A group of churches could have a series of rallies with great profit and with ease. If the pastors will exchange work and will visit and preach for each other such rallies can be made very successful and helpful. By this means each pastor will generate an enthusiasm for his his brother preacher and will gather inspiration for his final effort on March 5th when he takes the offering.

In many churches a few good men and women who are not preachers can work wonders by systematically visiting the membership and talking up the March offering. Tell the brethren what is meant by it. Explain to them the need of the gospel among all heathen and pagan nations. Let them know that the Foreign Christian Missionary Society is trying to preach the gospel in India, China, Japan, Turkey, Scandinavia, England and Africa. And tell them that they would go to every nation and to every creature if only they had the money and men.

Open Doors for Missions.

The command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," is of course, universal. Yet, the apostle Paul himself sometimes ran up against a solid wall while carrying out his part of the work, and turned aside to find open doors. At Antioch in Pisidia, when the Jews interfered, he said to them: "It was necessary that the Word of God should have been spoken to you, but seeing ye put it from you and judge yourselves unworthy of eternal life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles" (Acts 13:46). The universal command does not bind us to try to preach to men who will not hear. If they "judge themselves unworthy of eternal life," we may turn to other people, where we may find willing ears. One reason why our devices "to draw" people into our churches do no succeed better is, that they have passed this judgment upon themselves. We cannot reach all the people in this country, simply because thousands of them have rejected the gospel. From these thousands who will not hear, we should turn to the millions who are glad to listen.

Now is the best time there has ever been since Jesus gave the command. Many "great doors and effectual" (1Cor. 16:9) are opened unto us.

India with her three hundred million people has come under civilized government. Missionaries may go there and work with quite as much safety to their persons as here in the United States. Japan is opened to us with almost equal promise of success. Parts of China and of Africa are also accessible; and all parts are likely to be opened up long before we shall get ready to enter them. The results of the war with Spain have brought more millions of souls into touch with Christian civilization and opened a wide and promising field for evangelization. The policy of the United States may be "imperialism," "annexation," or "protectorates;" but in either case the Philippines, Porto Rico and Cuba will be so near us as to become fields for "Home Missions." Unfortunately these millions will swarm into these islands ten of them for every missionrry we can send. In these islands are multitudes of innocent and docile people who are heathen and who may be easily enlightened if we can reach them soon enough. There are also many thousands of almost equally ignorant and priest-ridden Roman Catholics. These are the dominant people in the Philippines, Porto Rico and Cuba. Spain is a Catholic country, which has made no advance for two or three centuries. The tyranny which these islands have been resisting is, in their minds, associated with the Catholic priesthood—a fact which will open their minds to better representations of the gospel. The papal authorities will be quick to see this; and if we do not hasten, they will make concessions in line with the advancement of the people, and the priests will be reingratiated. Now is the time for Protestant missionary enterprise in these islands.

But the still greater danger and which demands very prompt action on the part of European and American Christians is the speedy debauchery of their people by conscienceless Europeans and Americans, who will swarm into these islands to trade with the natives. The emissaries of the devil move with greater celerity than the missionaries of the cross. We have not yet fully realized the open doors of our opportunity, but the great brewery syndicate has whole shiploads of their goods en route, or already landed. The degradation of the American Indians by the "fire-water" of the English, and of the East Indians and Chinese by opium, is history sure to repeat itself in the islands that have been transferred from Spanish to American dominion.

"Now is the accepted time," in a new application of this utterance. In this "jubilee" of our missionary enterprises let us arouse ourselves to prompt and vigorous action. We should enlist many thousands more and enlarge the offerings of those who are already contributing.

Of all the disciples of Christ, we who are intent on the restoration of the simple New Testamant Christianity should be most actively concerned. The New Testament church was emphatically a missionary church. When by persecutions the disciples were driven out of Jerusalem and fled for their lives, "they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word." Nothing but death could quench their zeal for "sounding out the Word." Let us work, and pray, and hope that during this "Year of Jubilee," we may restore this feature of "the ancient order."

March Offering Notes.

The annual offering for Foreign Missions is the first Lord's day in March.

Place a March offering envelope in the hands of each member of your congregation.

The One Dollar Crusade should be pressed vigorously this year; that is, aim to secure an offering of at least $1.00 per member.

The number of March offering envelopes prepared was 300,000. Already more than 100,000 have been ordered and they are going out rapidly every day.

The March offering number of the Missionary Voice is an interesting one. A copy should be placed in each family represented in the churches.

Only about one-third of all our churches gave anything for Foreign Missions last year. A determined effort should be made this year to enlist every church.

Times are much better how. The financial skies are clearing up. Every line of business is taking on new life. It will be much easier to raise money this year.

Last year the churches averaged only $15.00 for Foreign Missions. Evidently he churches are not impoverishing themselves by giving to this cause.

Missions are the very heart of church life. Missions are not a phase of Christianity; they are Christianity itself.

Remember that the churches are asked for only one offering during the whole year, to preach the gospel in the regions beyond.

What They Say About the Apportionment.

We accept our apportionment and will strive to do more.—MRS. PEARL L. DEERWESTER, Warrensburg, Mo.

The Boys' Mission Band of the Shady Ave. Church pledge one share and will do as much more as they can.—EMMA A. HERMAN, Allegheny, Penn.

At our meeting last month we pledged two and a half shares toward the building fund and as much more as we can.—MISSION BAND, Bruceville, Ind.

We will do our best to raise our apportionment of two shares. We had agreed at our October business meeting to strive for that amount.—MRS. ELEANOR WARNER, Palouse, Wash.

The Busy Bees have accepted their apportionment of one share ($10) in the Builders' Fund and have promised to work faithfully to raise that amount.—ANICE WILSON, Gibsonburg, O.

We will try to raise our apportionment of two shares; I feel sure we will, for the children are becoming more and more interested all the time.—MRS. LULU ZIMMERMAN, La Belle, Mo.

Our Society has pledged two shares. Besides this eight have promised to raise $1 each, so feel sure we will succeed in bringing our offering up to the $30 asked of us.—MRS. A. LYON, Evansville, Ind.

You apportioned our Junior Society one and one-half shares ($15). I know we can raise our two shares and will pledge ourselves for that much and will try to raise a half share additional.—MRS. W. A. SMITH, Macon, Ga.

At our meeting yesterday our Juniors promised to pay for three shares in the Builders' Fund this year. I feel very sure every member will be willing to make a silver offering for the silver anniversary.—CARRIE MORROW, Clinton, Ill.

We desire to support an orphan child, but we will do this aside from our regular dues. Our dues during the year will amount to enough to pay for one share in the Builders' Fund. Perhaps we can do more.—MRS. M. E. HAGIN, Pekin, Ill.

We are ready and anxious to do our best for the work and heartily join in raising the "nine thousand in '99." We will do more than you have asked of us.—MRS. F. J. CLIFTON, Pittsburg, Penn., (Knoxville Church).

We have decided to accept our apportionment of three shares ($30) and will work with renewed zeal to increase it if possible. We have but twenty-one members in our mission band, but we desire to do all in our power.—MARY D. HARPER, Milwaukee, Wis.

Our band will do its best to raise its apportionment, although $25 is no small sum for us to raise, considering our strength. But to raise $9,000 will require each organization to do its part, and our band would dislike to fail in this matter.—ARLA B. CORNELL, Allerton, Ia.

We are pleased with all the recommendations concerning the young people's work made at the National Convention, and our boys and girls will certainly try to do more than last year and will reach our apportionment.—MRS. E. J. TEAGARDEN, Danbury, Ct.

Our Junior Societv and Mision Band gladly accept their apportionment. In fact, the band had taken action before your letter was received to pledge two shares, the amount of one which I enclose. The Juniors will not be able to pay theirs so promptly, as they must provide for their Hindi sister Ruth first.—MRS. W. O. DARNELL, Lebanon, Ind.

There are only seven members, but I have a "Penny Helper" which was sent to me as a sample; I send the money for half a dozen more. I thought by this means we could make $7 anyhow. I am the oldest member of the band and I am not thirteen years old yet.—FLONNIE C. HAMMOND, Hubble, Ky.

The above are a few of the many words of approval that have been sent us about the apportionment of shares in the Builders' Fund made to the Societies and Bands in the Young People's Department of the C. W. B. M. The watchword for this department this year is, "Nine thousand in '99 in the Builders' Fund."

Notes and News.

The second annual directory of the Church Street Christian Church, Decatur, Ill., Geo. F. Hall, pastor, is of neat design and work.

At the First Church, Covington, Ky., of which George A. Miller is pastor, a lunch was given to the men of the church on the evening of the 12th. Sickness kept many from attending yet, there were fifty-six at the tables. Isaac Selby begins a meeting with this church on Jan. 15th.

C. P. Williamson reports a membership of 806 in the church at Atlanta, Ga. There were 87 additions and 17 dismissions during 1898. The total amount of money raised for all purposes was $5,300, of which $1,149.90 went for missions. The Ladies' Aid Society raised $1,065.53. One new church was organized, and all are happy and full of large purposes for 1899.

H. P. Dyer writes that he has settled at Stuart, Ia., because of its many advantages. The Christian Church there is about 100 strong and just finishing a new $2,500 house of worship. He invites all homeseekers to visit Stuart, a thriving town of 2,000 inhabitants, situated on the Rock Island Railroad, 41 miles west of Des Moines.

After the successful annual roll call meeting of the church at Hamilton, Mo., on a rainy night, H. S. Gilliam reports the way clear for an aggressive movement for the year 1899. He says that "the most helpful and inspiring agency in a pastor's work are our religious papers, but to get the people to take and read them—there's the rub." And so it is, but like all other good works it must be persistently pushed.

The chapel recently built for the Church of Christ at Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, will be dedicated on the 22nd of January, 1899, by C. G. McNeill, the state missionary of Wisconsin. Services commence at 10 o'clock A. M. Brethren are hereby most heartily invited to attend.

JULIUS STONE.

An Annual Report.

The First Church for the ten months of our work ending Dec. 31st raised $2.949.68. The offering for missions was more than double the offering for last year. There have been 93 added to the church since I became pastor in March. In addition to my work here I have delivered 25 addresses and seven popular lectures outside of the city and dedicated two churches.

New York.

I came into this state Oct. 27, 1897. Up to Dec. 31, 1898, I held twelve protracted meetings, preached 382 sermons and distributed 18,000 tracts, 212 members were added, 162 by obedience and 50 otherwise. I organized two churches, one of 50 members at Pitcairn (not included in the 212 additions) and one of 31 members at Gloversville. I organized two C. E. societies of 15 members each, and one Bible-school of 40 members. All of these are growing. I raised in the field for state and local work, cash, $836; pledges, $635. I am pleased with the Empire State as a mission field for us. I have not been able to count so many converts as in former years in the West, but the year was a difficult one everywhere. New York with its millions who never heard us is a wonderful field for sowing the seed. The brethren have been kind, responsive and liberal. By unanimous request of the state board, I continue as state evangelist. I am now in a meeting with Bro. J. A. Egbert at Forest Ave., Buffalo. Yours in Christian love,

J. M. MORRIS.

Illinois Endeavorer.

The corresponding secretaries of all societies in Illinois are asked to send their names to the undersigned. The list in the hands of the superintendent has not been revised for two years and doubtless contains many mistakes. As statistics are to be gathered soon it is necessary that we have a correct list of names and addresses. Any Endeavorer noticing this is asked to send in the names of the corresponding secretary of the society of which he is a member.

Notes of Travel.

I am now visiting the Iowa churches, but find everywhere la grippe. Bro. M. S. Johnson has been kept from his pulpit for two Sundays. I preach for him to-morrow.

Last Sunday morning I was with Bro. A. E. Cory at Boone. I found the church very much alive, notwithstanding many were absent because of sickness. Bro. Cory has done a good work at Boone and the church parts with him only on his own motion, as he accepts a call from the church at Oskaloosa, Ia. Upon the presentation of the work of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, the people responded with a collection of forty dollars and a home for a boy from the Orphans' Home. Everywhere in fact when the churches learn that the B. A. C. C. belongs to the whole church there is a hearty response. A large number of churches are preparing to observe Easter in behalf of our benevolent work. There ought to be $5,000 raised on that day.

Iowa is proud of Drake University, and her children are coming into its halls. The attendance is largest in its history.

Several good meetings are in progress in the state. Bro. A. P. Cobb at Nora Springs, Bro. S. M. Martin at Mason City, J. V. Updike at Ottumwa, E. B. Cross at Kellogg, Edgar Price at Mt. Ayr and I. N. McCash at University Place Church, Des Moines.

The Benevolent Association have arranged to accept gifts on the annuity plan and will pay six per cent interest semi-annually. Now let us send in $50,000 or $100,000 to care for the aged and homeless.

One good sister gives $100 to start an old people's home, if we can get nine others we will begin. Who will help us? Write to the writer or to Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, 5018 Cabanne Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Convention of Colored Disciples in Arkansas.

The writer in company with Bro. Hudspeth, of little Rock, attended the convention of colored Disciples which met with Pea Ridge Church, Lonoke County, Ark.

The order, zeal and desire to learn and advance were a revelation to us. They report twenty-seven churches, thirty-one preachers, between six and seven hundred members, a number of Sunday-schools, one auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. of thirty-three members; Mrs. Sarah Bostick, of Kerr's Station, president. The white people living in the neighborhood speak in terms of highest praise of the colored Disciples of Lonoke County. They have at Pea Ridge a church of 153 members, a good house and forty acres of land.

Henry Martin, of Kerr's was chosen state evangelist, to devote not less than one-half his time. By resolution, the attention of Bro. C. C. Smith was asked to the work of these Disciples and to Arkansas as a fruitful field of work among the colored people. Time and place of next meeting left to descretion of state board.

Minnesota Matters.

Times are busy in St. Paul and much work is to be done, so "news" from this quarter will be short at times. Appeals come on all hands to urge missions. I do urge them.

Prepare now, churches, for the March offering to foreign work. Every church, however poor and struggling, should give to foreign work. We save ourselves by saving others.

Let us join the ranks for $150,000 for Foreign Missions in this our Jubilee Year?

Bro. Hill has left Mankato. We are sorry to lose him; he was needed in this state.

Evangelist Samuel Gregg will take work again in Minnesota.

Bro. C. M. McCurdy is in a meeting at Litchfield. Some few additions to date. There have been about 175 additions from meetings held under state board direction since Sept. 1st, 1898.

Where are the churches and individuals we have written to so often concerning church apportionments and individual pledges?

Brethren, we must have the money due us. We are working on your promises and our evangelists can't keep warm in Minnesota on pledges. This is our copartnership with God; let us not be slack.

Redwood Falls is holding a meeting. Their pastor is doing the preaching and R. A. Givens, the singing. Bro. Goodacre, the pastor, is doing good work there.

The Austin church has at last a building dedicated to the Lord. January 1st was a happy day to them. The meeting closed with 55 additions; 45 by primary obedience, eight from other denominations and two reclaimed. There were a number of "whole families" and "no babies." The church is increased, not only in numbers, but in strength and influence. The evangelist, J. S. Miller, delivered the dedicatory sermon. R. A. Givens led the chorus of about 20 voices. He also rendered a solo. Officers were elected and the work well set in order. They have raised nearly $600 toward a pastors salary and have extended a call to Bro. J. S. Miller. Your corresponding secretary represented the state board and enjoyed the occasion very much. Austin has had a long, hard struggle and their good times now have been worthily won. Bro. A. B. Moore first started the tabernacle and the money was largely raised by him. A basket collection of $103 was taken at the conclusion of the services Sunday. Resolutions were also passed thanking the evangelists, Miller and Givens, for their untiring labors; also extending thanks to others who had helped in a special manner. The state board was included, and its help has indeed been appreciated. Sincerely,

E. T. GADD, Cor. Sec.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Morton H. Wood, one of our evangelists, has just closed an interesting meeting at Ozark, reviving the brethren to the extent of reorganizing their Bible-school and putting them to work again. There were several additions also.

The work at Rockville is very difficult, but many hearts will rejoice to learn that the papers are now being circulated and liberally signed for a mecting house at that place. The Lord bless John Giddens.

Plattsburg and T. H. Capp are workers from the word go. When I was with them H. A. Northcutt was helping in a meeting. Geo. T. Winn remitted us the three quarters of their school pledge. Bro. Northcutt gave us a "Christmas" gift of five dollars, with words of cheer.

Miss Susie Browning, one of those taking the normal course, has just completed another one of the books and has sent in her examination papers, with which I am so well pleased that I cannot refrain from urging others to this good course. Have you examined the parts, five of which are now out, and if so, are they not good? Then why not organize a class and prosecute the course this winter?

J. H. Coil, another of the Canton boys, saw to the raising of the school apportionment at Prairie View, Ralls county, five dollars in full.

Edgarton is one of the schools that has as many or more older people than children. Bro. Christman keeps up to date. The young ladies had the church in nice shape. Edgarton always gives to this work, no matter as to times.

East Broadway, Sedalia, only a year ago was a struggling mission, new it is a flourishing church, with a Bible-school enrollment of 325, only 100 of whom came from the First. In the primary there are 105, while the average attendance in both departments is most remarkable. Mrs. C. D. Hubbs superintends the latter, while F. L. Cook, pastor and leader, sees to the former. The singing is above common, and the life it puts into the school is contageous. The offerings of the school are very good and go to furnishings so badly needed. The church house cost $8,000, and the remaining indebtedness is $3,300. When this is lifted East Broadway will take her place among the contributors to all good works. The church has called F. L. Cook for another year.

At Tarkio the pastor and leader has introduced the home department and the influence is for good, while the band is getting stronger in its work for Christ. So long as J. M. and H. W. Hurst and their wives are in the town, so long will the pastor have efficient help. They always remit their apportionment.

Barry is one of the appointments of E. C. Davis, one who is in heartiest and fullest co-operation with us, and of course he would see to it. It is also the home of my dear old friend, Judge Dooley.

Our committee on program for the Plattsburg convention is T. S. Ridge, R. B. Jones, A. N. Kokendoffer, S. B. Redd and J. M. Vawter. Have you any suggestions for the coming program? Write to T. S. Ridge, 910 Main St., Kansas City, or any member of the committee, and it shall have full consideration. The committee desires it, are anxious for the best program of the year, and you can help by your suggestions. Will you? Write now; don't defer, for the program will be ready by the middle of March.

That New Feature: What They Think of it.

Wo recently published, with editorial commendation, a suggestion from J. Z. Tyler, concerning a new feature of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses. The substance of the suggestion was that something like the University Extension method be used in connection with these reading courses. Selecting those points throughout the country, as radiating centers, where the Disciples are strongest, specially equipped men and women would be sent out to weaker points to give courses of popular lectures on the three lines of study. In making this suggestion Bro. Tyler requested those who might be interested in the matter to send him an expression of their opinion and we are permitted to give a few brief extracts from letters he has received:

Burt L. Hickok, Cleveland, O., says: That new feature in the Reading Courses, about which you write in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, is fine, fine. I read about it with delight. It is the proper method and should be inaugurated immediately.

Leslie W. Morgan, Atlanta, Ill , our state superintendent of Christian Endeavor, says: Your extension plan for the Bethany work is entirely feasible, in my opinion, and would be an important step if taken. You may remember that we made some moves in that direction in Illinois last year. A number of our best men offered their services and a few lectures were given.

J. H. Hardin, President of Eureka College, says: Your idea is certainly a good one, provided you can secure efficient persons to take charge of the work at such radiating centers as you may choose. In order to get this before the brotherhood and to make it effiective, some kind of superintency over the whole scheme will be necessary.

Frank G. Tyrrell, Central Christian Church, St. Louis, says: I think the plan of organizing for lectures on the subjects of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses an admirable one. The "radiating centers" should be distributed as widely as possible and the points chosen will be determined largely, I should think, by the degree of interest exhibited, and the co-operation offered.

Burris A. Jenkins, Indianapolis, says: Your idea for applying University Extention methods to the C. E. Reading Courses is an admirable one We have quite a number of men who could do this kind of work and I think the suggestion is both excellent and feasible.

Herbert L. Willett, Berlin, Germany, says: I know of no better way to promote the enterprise than through the Extention work which you suggested. I am more than ever convinced that the ultimate success of our endeavor work and of these Reading Courses lies in the direction of your whole time being devoted in that field.

M. M. Davis, Central Christian Church, Dallas, Texas, says: As to definite methods of reaching the end you desire, I do not feel able to speak. But I believe these methods will be forthcoming when we have a national C. E. superintendent giving his whole time to the work as McLean and Rains give their time to Foreign Missions, and so forth. In fact, I am beginning to fear that we are losing ground as Endeavorers, just because there is not a strong man to lead these young soldiers in this great warfare. I have been hoping that you would take up the work, and devote your ripe manhood to the systematic developement of our young people.

J. D. Forrest, Butler College, Indianapolis, says: I have been thinking for somet me of the necessity of some such work as you suggest among our churches. A great many churches have lecture courses of some sort every year or so. These are usually of a popular sort, and while many of them may be of condiderable value, their total effect in developing the people is practically nil. These churches usually expect to make something off of their lecture courses, but except the Akron church—where peculiar conditions prevail—I do not know of a single one which has made anything worth considering. I have always felt that if the plea of church support had not been made, and courses had been arranged to which the people could be urged to come, simply for their own good—the profit, if any, being used for strengthening the lecture course itself—much more could have been done. I have been on the lecture corps of the University of Chicago, Extension department for several years and am thoroughly convinced of the practical value of that kind of work.

The foregoing extracts are sufficient to show that Bro. Tyler's suggestion meets the cordial approval of thoughtful men among us.

A GOOD PRACTICE.

If You Want a Good Appetite and Perfect Digestion.

After each meal dissolve one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in the mouth and, mingling with the food, they constitute a perfect digestive, absolutely safe for the most sensitive stomach.

They digest the food before it has time to ferment, thus preventing the formation of gas and keeping the blood pure and free from the poisonous products of fermented, half-digested food.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets make the complexion clear by keeping the blood pure.

They increase flesh by digesting flesh-forming foods.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the only remedy designed especially for the cure of stomach troubles and nothing else.

One disease, one remedy, the successful physician of today is the specialist, the successful medicine is the medicine prepared especially for one disease

A whole package taken at one time would not hurt you, but would simply be a waste of good material.

Over six thousand men and women in the state of Michigan alone have been cured of indigestion and dyspesia by the use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

A Song of Cheer.

BY WILL H. DIXON.

Does the night seem dark and drear,
The future filled with doubt and fear?
Cheer up, these clouds will pass away,
The darkest night will change to day;
Tho' the future now seems dark and dim,
Look up and put your trust in Him
"Who heareth His children when they call,
And noteth even the sparrow's fall."

Does your heart seem crushed with care,
Life's burden greater than you can bear?
Cheer up, these, too, will pass away,
There soon will dawn a brighter day;
Soon will pass the night of gloom,
The birds will sing, and flowers bloom;
Look up, dear ones, there's light above,
Look up to Him for light and love.

After the clouds, the mist and rain,
Sunshine and flowers will come again;
Storm, night and darkness will fade away,
And after the night will dawn the day;
The hours of gloom will soon be past,
Sweet peace and joy will come at last;
Tho' now you bow beneath the rod,
Look up and put your trust in God.

Then look above and dry your tears,
Trust God thro' all the coming years;
He'll lead thee, tho' the way seem dark,
Thro' the tempest wild He'll guide thy bark;
He knows the way; He holds the key
To all thy future destiny;
Cheer up, once more the sun will shine,
Look up and trust your God and mine.

MRS. BELLAMY: THE ONE WE KNOW.

"Though thy name be borne abroad
Like winged seed from shore to shore,
What thou art before thy God,
That thou art, and nothing more."

When Mrs. Bellamy appears before an audience with that saintly smile upon her free, and gives one of her soul-stirring talks, her delighted listeners are likely to come to some very rash conclusions. Indeed, I have heard some of her most ardent admirers say that the pearly gates had certainly been left ajar for a brief time that an angel might slip down to make this old world better. Alas, and alas! we know, to our sorrow, that there is not as much truth as poetry in that. When good Bro. Brown first came among us Mrs. Bellamy took him under her wing at once. He was invited to her beautiful home. As they sipped the fragrant tea from the rare china she managed to give him a very fair idea of her greatness. She told him of her travels that had extended from coast to coast, from the land of snowflakes to the home of orange trees. She didn't say it in so many words, but Bro. Brown gathered that she considered herself the head and shoulders of the Glendale church. Of course he went away feeling that the lines had fallen to him in pleasant places. What a joy it would be to work with this brilliant, talented woman! For a time all went well. Bro. Brown, like all new ministers, was anxious to please everybody, and run things just the way they wanted them. He and Mrs. Bellamy were so congenial, and she never tired of singing his praises at home and abroad. But those of us who knew Mrs. Bellamy of old were afraid that this w too good to last long. Sure enough, it was not many days until a cloud appeared on the horizon. It was only about as large as a man's hand, but it began to assume larger proportions. Things were not going Mrs. Bellamy's way, and she proposed to enter her protest. She had a catalogue of grievances to recite to every one that would listen. Bro. Brown's preaching wasn't plain enough. He didn't preach on card-playing and dancing every Sunday. As a result, the young people were growing worldly minded and were on the downward road to ruin. Now, we thought we had a set of as well behaved young people as you'd find anywhere. Strange as it may seem, these stories of their frivolity didn't reach any one's ears but Mrs. Bellamy's. And oh my! such dreadful things as she did hear. Some of the purest and most Christlike characters were guilty of the gravest misdemeanors. The Sunday-school was going down; the Endeavor Society was not as it should be and the Missionary Society was sadly demoralized. In short, everything was going to destruction. The new minister was certainly to blame for all this, for as she would explain in her bland way, "Everything was so harmonious when dear Bro. Stanly was here." She heaped so much abuse on the poor man's head that he was almost distracted, and wondered if he hadn't missed his calling when he entered the ministry. He could see now that his first snap shot of Mrs. Bellamy was sadly deficient. It had been undertimed. A longer exposure brought out some ugly little details that he never dreamed were there.

Those of us who were not as wise as Mrs. Bellamy were simple enough to believe that things were moving along nicely and that Bro. Brown was just the man for the place. But Mrs. Bellamy made the case so plain that some of the doubting Thomases discontinued to give the new pastor the loyal support they had been giving him. Of course she had a remedy for this sad state of affairs. Order could be brought out of chaos by putting her or some member of her family in all the available positions in the church. Let them run the choir, the missionary society and the various other organizations, and dictate to Bro. Brown just how he should preach. So, with her at the helm, the shepherd and his flock doing as she directed, the ship of Zion would safely ride the troubled billows, and sail at last on calmer seas. But somehow we didn't see it that way. At least those who knew all the meanness she'd been up to in her day, didn't have enough of faith in her to try her fine-spun theory.

Queer, isn't it, that persons holding high positions can't be elected to a single one right in their own town? She had a pretty little story fixed up, and this, together with a few tears to make it more effective sounded very nice to a certain few. But the sober ones, the ones who have stood by the church through all its checkered career, turned a deaf ear to her pathetic appeal. Then such a volley of words as would pour forth from that woman's tongue! She could think of more mean things in a minute than the rest of us could in a year. Indeed, it is a wonder that some of the Glendalians are living and enjoying good health after these attacks. She had done so much for the cause that she felt they ought to reward her by letting her have things her own way. As a last resort, she would make numerous threats, thinking this would bring them to terms. But she missed it, when, to cap the climax, as she thought, she declared they would leave the church. For dear knows we would have hailed with joy such a proceeding as that. When Mrs. Bellamy found that she could do nothing with the church people in general, she took it into her head that it was all owing to Bro. Brown's influence. Her next move was to dispose of him. This accomplished, she believed she could sway the church as she willed, and have everything her own sweet way. But 'twas easier said than done. True, for a time the future did look dark. All sorts of tales were circulated, and some accepted them as true.

Our faithful pastor was almost ready to fly to the uttermost parts of the earth, where church quarrels are unknown. Then it was that we felt with Lowell that "truth is forever on the scaffold, wrong forever on the throne." When the church fathers saw there really must be something done, they put their heads together and sat down on Mrs. Bellamy so hard that she has scarcely recovered from the shock. She bobs up once in awhile, but she realizes that she has lost her hold on the Glendale people. As we look back at this chapter in our church history, and remember how we trembled over what the result might be, we chide ourselves for forgetting that "God was in the shadow, keeping watch above his own." Is it any wonder, think you, that we do not gush over Mrs. Bellamy quite as much as the world does? They think we don't appreciate her and quote the Master's saying, "A prophet is never without honor save in his own country." Well, it's our opinion that a good deal depends upon the prophet.

How to Live One Hundred Years.

Sir James Sawyer, in a recent lecture at Birmingham, England, gives the following rules for living one hundred years:

1. Sleep eight hours a day.
2. Sleep on the right side.
3. Open the windows of one's bedroom at nigh.
4. Put a screen in front of the door.
5. Place one's bed away from the wall.
6. Take a bath in the temperature of the body every morning; not a cold douche.
7. Take exercise before breakfast.
8. Eat little meat and make sure it is thoroughly cooked.
9. (For adults.) Do not drink milk.
10. Eat much grain in order to nourish the cells which destroy the germs of disease.
11. Avoid intoxicants, which destroy these cells.
12. Take daily exercise in the open air.
13. Keep no animals in living rooms. They may have the germs of disease.
14. Live as much as possible in the country.
15. Drink water, avoid humidity and the neighborhood of sewage pipes.
16. Vary one's occupation.
17. Take from time to time a short holiday.
18. Limit one's ambitions.
19. Restrain one's natural character.—St. Louis Republic.

Christmas Once is Christmas Still.

The silent skies are full of speech
For who hath ears to hear;
The winds are whispering each to each,
The moon is calling to the beach;
And stars their sacred wisdom teach
Of Faith and Love and Fear.

But once the sky its silence broke,
And song o'erflowed the earth;
The midnight air with glory shook,
And angels mortal language spoke,
When God our human nature took
In Christ the Savior's birth.

And Christmas once is Christmas still;
The gates through which He came,
And forests wild, and murmuring rill,
And fruitful field, and breezy hill,
And all that else the wide world fill,
Are vocal with his name.

Shall we not listen while they sing
This latest Christmas morn,
And music hear in everything,
And faithful lives in tribute bring,
To the great song which greets the King
Who comes when Christ is born?

THE THREE ARISTOCRACIES—BIRTH, MONEY AND INTELLECT.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

* * * * And there is no respect of persons.—Col 3:25.

In imagination I was present at a conclave held by three aristocracies—Birth, Money and Intellect.

Birth had the floor and harangued his listeners with airs galore:

"Without birth," said he, "there is no use for one to even try to get along in the world. It is time wasted to study and be industrious, for he can never achieve anything. He can never rise, because of his low origin," and he dusted his dainty fingers with his daintier handkerchief, and drew the skirts of his broadcloth coat a little closer, that he might not come in contact with anything plebian.

Then Money spoke. With supreme scorn he looked down upon the rivals:

"Why," said he to Birth, "should you value yourself so highly? Nobody seeks you, you come unasked and unsolicited by your possessor; indeed, many people after reaching mature years do not thank you that you ever came to them at all. You are the merest accident, to say the very best of you, whether you come to palace or hovel. While I," drawing himself up proudly, "I rule the world. Men bow down before me and do me homage. No matter how degraded my possessor, no matter how polluted and steeped in sin, yet is he greatly sought after and looked up to because of me. Verily, I cover a greater multitude of sins than does charity."

"You are both insignificant," said Intellect, "when compared with that which I represent. You," addressing Birth, "are of course a necessity, which to exist we must have in the beginning, but from which your possessor is not in the least responsible, whether you come to me in cellar or mansion. But you," addressing Wealth, "you are a snare and a temptation, inasmuch as you lure men on and on, until they lose sight of their own souls in you.

"Let me illustrate my superior worth by calling your attention to a well-known story of the childhood of the great Thorwaldsen. You remember he was once allowed to peep through the chink of a partly closed door at a crowd of beautifully dressed children at a children's party. He was not allowed to enter because of his lowly station in life and this peep was a rare treat to him. But presently he was made to feel sad enough by a conversation he heard within. The daughter of wealthy parents boasted of her riches; the daughter of a great writer boasted of her father's intellect; while the child of well-born parents declared that it was no use to attempt to achieve anything without birth, and especially must the people whose name ended in 'sen,' be forever down in the world.

"This was quite enough to render miserable the poor boy peeping through the chink, for he knew that his name ended in 'sen.' And then, 'birth,' thought he. 'What can that mean? Are we not all born in the same manner?' And as to money, why, he had not even a penny. Of the meaning of the great writer's daughter he had not the slightest idea, therefore it seemed to him the least of the three.

"But time passed, and it was found that this boy possessed that which had seemed to him of the least consequence that night when he peeped through the doorchink—that which is independent of both birth and money, the mighty giant, intellect. And in his case it brought its reward—though I regret to say that it does not always do so—for it came about that this child of poverty grew to be the famous Danish sculptor of the present century. When it was found that he had intellect, money poured into his coffers, and when it was found that he had both money and intellect, then it pleased people to speculate about his birth, and they came to believe that he was a descendant of the illustrious Snorri, supposed to have been a child of the ancient Northmen, and the first child born of European parents on the shores of New England so many centuries ago.

"But all this glory came about through the mighty monarch, Intellect."

Left to myself I fell to pondering upon the strangeness of it all. How prone is mankind to judge his brother by mere outside appearances, or to hold himself aloof because of some fancied superiority. With God there is no "respect of persons." Why cannot we be sufficiently Christlike to look beneath the rough surface to discover the soul and seek to develop it, saying: "Behold the diamond!" Is not the soul of earth's humblest as precious in the sight of God as that of the rich and migty? Truly, "six feet of earth makes us all of one size."

And then I fell to wondering what it is that is required to constitute a truly acceptable life; whether it is not simply living each day as near as circumstances will permit and as well as we know how, whether if after all, it is not the effort—the purpose—that God sees.

There is an old legend of a monk who painted pictures of martyrs and saints and the beautiful Christ-face in an old convent cell. They were but poor daubs, and many a taunting word fell upon them, but the good abbott allowed him to thus adorn his solitary cell. And—

"One night the poor monk mused: 'Could I but render Honor to Christ as other painters do;
Were but my skill as great as is the tender
Love that inspires me when his cross I view.

'But no—'tis vain I toil and strive in sorrow;
What man so scorns still less can He admire,
My life's work is all valueless; to-morrow
I'll cast my ill-wrought pictures on the fire.'

He raised his eyes, within his cell—oh, wonder!
There stood a visitor—thorn-crowned was He;
And a sweet voice the silence rent asunder—
'I scorn no work that's done for love of me.'

And round the walls the pictures shone resplendent
With lights and colors to this world unknown,
A perfect beauty and a true trascendent,
That never yet on mortal canvas shone.

There is a meaning in the strange old story—
Let none dare judge his brother's worth or need.
The pure intent gives to the act its glory,
The noblest purpose makes the grandest deed."

The Power of Influence.

BY IRENE JOHNSON.

It has been truly said that "no man lives to himself, and no man dies to himself." Whether one's life be good or bad, he will have an influence. No man is so insignificant as to be sure his example can do no hurt. Death itself is powerless to stop influence. Is not the sin of the first man working still? Will it not keep on as long as the world stands? The truly righteous live in a higher and deeper sense after death than before. By their holy living they have impressed their likeness on their age, and linked their influence with all that is brightest in human destiny. "Their memory cannot die, and their deeds furnish inspiration to the living." I am afraid we girls do not rightly estimate the influence we exert. Evil is more often wrought for want of thought than for want of heart. But that would be a very poor excuse to offer for the downfall of a human soul. How many a young man has died a drunkard's death, who drank his first glass of wine in a young lady's parlor! The same may be said in regard to card-playing. It has grown very popular, but it has ruined and is still ruining many a young heart. Girls, see what a sin we may have to answer for, if we allow such an influence to start from our homes. Let us be very careful in these and many other ways.

We as young Christians should live so that our lives may show that we are Christians. In many ways can we exert an influence to draw others toward the Christian life. We do not need to be able to preach great sermons, or make eloquent speeches. A gentle word and little kindly deeds have often done more than an eloquent sermon. It is the little constant sunbeams, not the flashing lightning; the little streams that go forth on their missions of refreshing, not the mighty river rushing with its torrent, noise and force, that does the good. We are now building our own characters, and at the same time we are molding and fashioning the characters of others by our own actions and by our own associations.

Those of us who build for heaven and eternity will not suffer loss. Those who build for this life only are the foolish ones. Life is too short to make such a mistake. Let us continually remember that we do not stand still in the Christian life. We are either advancing or retreating. Which is it? How many of us have made it a fixed rule, like that of the Medes and Persians that changeth not, never to lie down at night without being able to say, "I have made one person a little happier or a little better this day." This may be easier than we are apt to think; then the joy and pleasure that would come to our hearts when we should feel our lives were having an influence for good upon some one would be indescribable. Some lives are lived so quietly that their close causes a vibration in few hearts, and yet they are lives that are rich in results felt by those who have known their influence. They remain in the memory like the odor of violets. No newspaper records their history; that is written on the hearts of those who knew them. What has been their history? They have been to those with whom they were associated a true friend and counselor. Poverty has not been as crushing, for their sympathy and help have lightened it; sorrow has been borne with calmness, for the spirit of faith and patience has entered with their friend; joy has been intensified, for the friend "rejoiced with those who rejoiced." Such an influence as this let us endeavor to have. No star ever rose or set without influence somewhere. No life can be pure in its purpose, and strong in its strife, but that many lives will be made purer and stronger by its influence.

Use of Arbitration.

"Now, then, sir, I think we have a little business with each other. Suppose we settle it right here."

"I know what you mean. Say, look here! You and I are courting the same girl, and naturally we don't like each other. That's the trouble isn't it?"

"That's it, and we don't need to waste many words over it, either."

"We won't. I would like to occupy your time just about two minutes, however, and if we can't settle this thing without fighting, I'm your man, from a Cuban machete to a Philippine parang or any other weapon belonging to either normal or to expanded America. Suppose you kill me. You couldn't marry the girl. Even if you escaped hanging it wouldn't do you any good. She would never look at you again. Suppose I kill you. I couldn't marry her either. But you wouldn't get much satisfaction out of that. You wouldn't be in a position to do any crowing. Suppose we kill each other. If the girl cares for either of us, it would break her heart. So what's the good of fighting? Why not arbitrate the case?"

"Arbitrate it?"

"Yes. It's a toss-up, anyhow. One of us stands as good a show as the other, and it wouldn't muss things up as a fight with deadly weapons would. We can state our case and leave the decision to the arbitrator."

"But, great Scott! Whom could we get to do the arbitrating?"

"Suppose we leave it to the girl herself."

"All right; I hadn't thought of that."—Family Physician.

A New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Rheumatic Diseases.—A Free Gift.

A short time ago our readers were made aware of a valuable new botanical discovery, that of the Kava-Kava Shrub, or as botanists call it, piper methysticum, found on the banks of the Ganges river in East India. From a medical standpoint this is perhaps the most important discovery of the century. The use of the Kava-Kava Shrub, like other valuable medical substances, opium and quinine, was first observed by Christian missionaries among the natives as a sovereign remedy for Kidney diseases and other maladies caused by Uric acid in the system. Since its general introduction, Alkavis (the Kava-Kava Compound,) has wrought many remarkable cures of Kidney and Bladder and Rheumatic diseases.

THE KAVA-KAVA SHRUB (Piper Methysticum.)

Mr. R. C. Wood, a prominent attorney of Lowell, Indiana, was cured by Alkavis of Rheumatism, Kidney and Bladder trouble of ten years' standing. He writes:

"I have been treated by our home physicians al without the least benefit. My bladder trouble became so troublesome that I had to get up from five to twelve times during the night to urinate. In fact I was in misery the whole time and was becoming very despondent. * * * I have now used Alkavis and am better than I have been for five years. I know Alkavis will cure bladder and kidney trouble. * * * It is a wonderful and grand, good remedy."

And even more wonderful is the testimony of Rev. John H. Watson, of Sunset, Texas, a minister of the gospel in thirty years' service, stricken down at his post of duty by kidney disease and cured by Alkavis. Mrs. James Young, of Kent, Ohio, writes that she had tried six doctors in vain, that she was about to give up in despair, when she found Alkavis, and was promptly cured of Kidney disease, and other ailments peculiar to woman. Many other ladies give similar testimony.

So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 420 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, difficult or too frequent passing water, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative powers.

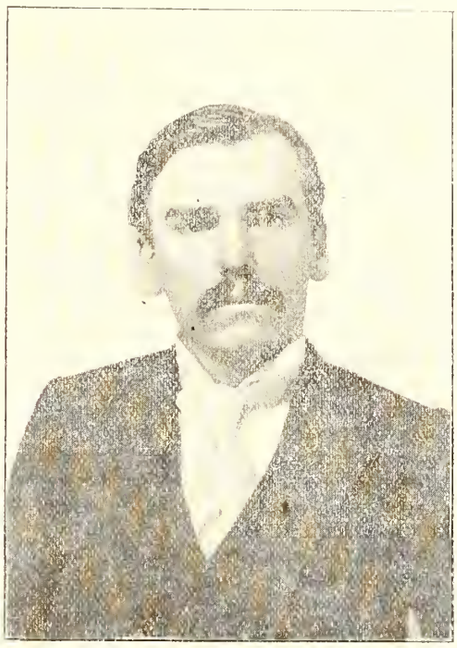
Books Children Prefer.



I have often wondered what kind of books are best loved by children. Of course I knew my favorites, but everybody has an idea that he is different from everybody else. I decided to leave the matter to the members of our Advance Society. As there are 266 of us, it is safe to conclude that the books we like are those which all healthy-minded children admire. I asked those not yet fifteen years of age to name the ten they prefer, not counting the Bible. They have named books which I am sure young people even to the age of 17 and 18 would have named; which shows that younger children like the very books that older children like. Although many named the same book, there were 205 different books named. What a glorious library for young or old, those 205 volumes would make! Just think of them strung along on your own bookshelves! I wish I had 'em all.

I kept a list of all the books, and when the same one was named by a different person I put the name of the voter after it. In this way I kept an accurate account of how many votes each book received. I cannot tell you the ten which are best liked, because there was a tie vote on some of them. The first nine are clearly indicated. But when it came to the tenth, five books got exactly the same vote; so I will have to give you the first 14 which are favorites of children, with the vote each received on the scale of a hundred. The first nine are: Little Women, 100; Uncle Tom's Cabin, 68; Robinson Crusoe, 48; Old-fashioned Girl, 48; Black Beauty, 48; Little Men, 44; Under the Lilacs, 36; Longfellow's Poems, 29; Dickens' Child's History of England, 23. The following five received 20 votes apiece: John Halifax, Gentleman, Pilgrim's Progress, Joe's Boys, Little Lord Fauntleroy, Titus.

There was only one member who named as many as six of these most valuable books. Her name is Mary B. Chastain, and she lives just on the other side of the Christian Church from me. She is 10 years old. This does not mean that she has named the best books, but the most popular ones. You will want to know her entire list. She named Nos. 1, 3, 5, 6, 7, 12, of the books above, and in addition, Standard Fairy Tales, Helen's Babies, Dulsie's Promise and Æsop's Fables. Last summer when we were holding a circus (it was an amateur affair, and there were no lions), Mary B. and I held a big, rusty, iron hoop while the other performers jumped through the hoop and barked their legs upon the edge. She is not called "Mary," but always "Mary B.," because she is so busy I suppose.

Those who named five of the most popular books are Macie Randall (12), Paris, Mo.; Beulah A. Woodside (11), Stronghurst, Ill.; Homer Slaughter, Raytown, Mo.; Madge Masters (12), Ozark, Ark.; Lina Pike (10), Nevada, Mo.; Madge F. Daily (14), Harg, Mo.; Ione Glass (14), Holden, Mo. I cannot tell you the second 10 books that were most popular, on account of tie votes; but I can give the next 11: David Copperfield, Eight Cousins, Rose in Bloom, Barriers Burned Away, Sarah Crewe, Last Days of Pompeii, Ten Nights in a Bar-room, Swiss Family Robinson, The Lamplighter, Helen's Babies and The Wide, Wide World. So there you have the 25 most popular books. Others which came close behind these are: Green Mountain Boys, Lady of the Lake, Ivanhoe, Jane Eyre, Æsop's Fables, Elsie Dinsmore, Oliver Twist, The Prince and the Pauper, Lamb's Tales from Shakespeare and Alice in Wonderland. One which received as many as some of these, but which I prefer to name here by itself (because it is written by one of our own men) is, On the Rock, by D. R. Dungan.

Here are just a few which received only one vote, yet which are standards: Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, Prince of the House of David, Deerslayer, Wonder Book, Thaddeus of Warsaw, Old Curiosity Shop, Adam Bede, Jack and Jill (Miss Alcott)—but I have not space to give the great array of choice works which failed to come into the class of the 36 most popular, as given above.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

But this is enough about books. Children, have you noticed that, in the continued story, the name is sometimes put Jennie, then Jenny, and Weston becomes Watson, once in awhile? Don't let those type-setters down in St. Louis lead you astray. Jennie doesn't spell her name with a "y," and she is still Weston. They are trying to get you mixed up, but you take my word on this matter. Did you see that poem in this paper, week before last, dedicated to the Advance Society? Did it make you feel proud? It did me. I am sure we are grateful to Mrs. Mattie D. Dever, of Hume, Ill. You know her son, Gerald, belongs to our society.

Look how long this piece is getting, and I promised to give you letters from different members! I had better begin right away, or there won't be any room for that advertisement of Singer's sewing-machine on this page (I get nothing for this "puff"). I will get out my letter bag (in reality it is not a bag but a big brown paper sack), dump the letters upon my table, and begin to make selections.

Bonnie was eating dinner with his auntie on his fourth birthday. Suddenly he laid down his spoon and said, "Last year my head was only this high," measuring with his hand, "but now it is this high, but" he added with a look of wonder, "it's the same hair!"—(Nora Taylor (13), Manton, Cal.) Gertrude D. Slater (11), Norwood, Kan., writes this story: At church one Sunday morning, when mamma had taken the communion, my brother—three years old—whispered, "Mamma, don't they have any potatoes?" Vesta Peak (10) and her mother, Des Moines, Ia., have joined. This is Vesta's true story: A little girl came home from Sunday-school and said: "Mamma, Jesus wasn't at church, to-day." Her mother said, "Oh, yes, he is always at church." "No, mamma, for they sang a song, 'Jesus is Calling To-day.' "

"When my brother Reid was about four," writes Clarissa E. Bonton (9), Holden, Mo., he found a cartoon representing Satan roasting men suspended on huge forks. One morning mamma found Reid before the base burner with our rag doll on a big meat fork, holding her to the fire. Mamma asked him what he was doing. "I am playing the devil," he answered solemnly; "old Sal has been telling lies, and I am roasting her." Myrtle Sims, (9), Nevins, Ill., lives in the country with her mother and sisters. She has two dogs, Bobby and Queen, which she dresses up in doll's clothes, and little bonnets, and she takes them riding with her in the buggy. Gerald Dever tells of a little boy who wished to die young, because if he became large he would be clumsy when he got to heaven.

Once we were cleaning the church. A muddauber's nest fell upon the Bible and broke. My brother happened to pass, after awhile, and caught sight of a young muddauber. He exclaimed, "Oh, papa! Come here and see this little gospel worm!"—(Frank Reid (12), Madison, Cal.) Katie McPherson (13) and her sister (11), Wichita, Kan., joined the church last fall. Katie wants some of the members to write to her. She begins with the new year to keep our resolutions. Two new members from Raytown, Mo.: Mary Pierson, who belongs to the C. E. of that place, and Wm. M. Slaughter (12).

Such a stack of letters there are before me! But I must put them back in the sack, because I haven't told you about the authors who are your favorites. You were to name the three you like best. In all, 48 were named. The most popular (that is, those who received the most votes) are in this order: Miss Alcott, Longfellow, Dickens; then a tie vote between Whittier, Scott and E. P. Roe; then come Miss Sophia May, Mrs. Stowe, Mrs. Burnett, Bryant, Trowbridge, Martha Finley and James Whitcomb Riley. Some other favorites are Irving, Kate Douglas Wiggin, Mary E. Wilkins, Eugene Field, Hawthorne, while one member is stanch for Solomon! There were only three members who named the three most popular. These are Rowena Eston (13), Berkeley, Cal.; Nellie V. Campbell (12), Escondido, Cal.; Lillie Oliver (12), Greenwood, Neb. Here's a letter from Minnie B. Snyder (11), Milton, Ky.:

"I am very much delighted with the Advance Society, and so glad you succeeded. I am reading the New Testament through. I want to get acquainted with some of the girls who live away off, so they can tell me how their homes look; and get their pictures, for I do love friends so much. I am called a bookworm, because when I get a new book in my hands, I read it through without stopping. I live with my father and mother in the country; I don't have much company, so I can read as much as I please without being disturbed. My favorite books are," and she names Nos. 1, 6, 7, 13, 15, 19, 23, 25 of the most popular, and "Five Little Peppers," and "Two Little Pilgrims' Progress." Her favorite authors—Alcott, Dickens, Burnett.

Next week the continued story, telling about George Weston's dangerous adventure; in two weeks a lot of letters and names of members.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The two days spent in Samaria were full of rich experiences for Jesus. The joy of his nature was always aroused at the exhibition of faith in him, and though he was only at the threshold of his career he he had seen enough of the skeptical and indifferent spirit of the nation to appreciate any display of appreciation for himself and his work. We may well believe that the seeds sown by him during tbis short stay in the despised district of Samaria blossomed in a little circle of believers, which was suddenly expanded to a community of the faithful when in later days Philip came down to Samaria and preached (Acts 8). But Jesus could not remain here. The requirements of his ministry took him to Galilee where the people were recognized as of strictly Jewish character, though regarded as somewhat provincial in comparison with the residents of Jerusalem. The necessity for this retirement of Jesus into a district more remote from the capital brought to his mind the truth which all religious experience has taught, that "a prophet has little honor in his own country." He had come unto his own, and his own received him not; for he must have regarded Judea and Jerusalem as his own in a particular sense. He was born in Bethlehem; he was of the royal stock, and all his interests centered in the nation whose metropolis he was now leaving because of gathering dangers. This proverb regarding a prophet and bis honor at home is quoted in connection with Jesus' two rejections at Nazareth (Matt. 13:57; Mark 6:4; Luke 4:24). But the application here is different. The scene of the ministry of Jesus in the Synoptic Gospels is almost entirely laid in Galilee, and in that district Nazareth would be considered especially the home of Jesus. The Gospel of John emphasizes the Judean ministry, and the necessity of Jesus' retirement into Galilee makes appropriate the application of the proverb to his rejection in Judea.

When he arrived in the north the people received him with demonstrations of joy. Many of them had been at the recent feast at Jerusalem and had seen his miracles. The Galileans were more impetuous and enthusiastic in their disposition than were the Judeans; their Messianic hopes were more ardent; they came into more frequent conflict with their political superiors, the Romans, and they were less under the restraining influence of the Pharisees and Scribes, who were the chief cause of Jesus' departure from Jerusalem. His reception therefore was something of an ovation, and especially was this true as he came into the village of Cana where his first miracle had been wrought. This was the home of Nathanael, and here probably lived the circle of relatives in which the wedding had occurred.

While he was in this city the report of his presence in Galilee and of his miracles in Judea reached Capernaum and was the cause of an interesting visit to Jesus. A man related in some way to the Herod family and probably occupying an official position under the Herodian government was in deep trouble. His son was very ill and probably the ordinary means of recovery had been exhausted in vain. The reports regarding Jesus determined him to try what the prophet from Judea would do, and his position as a man of importance gave him confidence that the request would not be denied. Nothing could be more in harmony with the desire of such a preacher as Jesus seemed to be than to make friends with those in authority, and thus pave the way to his own success. He therefore came in person from Capernaum to Cana, so anxious was he regarding his son, and besought Jesus on the score of what he heard regarding his miracles that he would come and heal the boy.

The response of Jesus to the entreaty of the nobleman discloses something of that divine sadness with which he always regarded those approaches to himself which were based upon purely external motives related to his healing, and not on an appreciation of his character and teachings. It was evident that what the nobleman had heard was wholly regarding the miracles, or as John calls them, the "signs and wonders" of Jesus' work. He had come, not because he was interested in the mission of our Lord, but because he had a favor to ask and was willing to try the experiment of calling upon Jesus as he would try any other means which promised his son's restoration. But he was only typical of a class which included a great majority of the people. They followed Jesus because they saw his miracles and wondered, not because they understood or desired his teaching. It was, therefore, to the whole prevalent attitude of the age that Jesus addressed himself in the words which bear some slight burden of impatience, "Except you see signs and wonders you will in no wise believe."

But the father seems to have been sincere enough to have gained the consideration of Jesus, who preceived at once that he had believed the reports brought to him sufficiently to make trial of the Master's power. While acknowledging the justice of Jesus' words he still proffers again his personal request with a humility that won for itself the divine approval. Jesus saw that he had at least the beginnings of faith, and dismissed him with the assurance that his son should recover. Taking him at his word the noblemman departed confident of the result.

His faith was rewarded, as faith always is. It was this quality which Jesus sought in men. His joy in its discovery is almost pathetic. Surrounded as he was by people who watched him out of mere morbid curiosity and had no further interest, it gave him a deep satisfaction when he encountered one who really trusted him as able to deliver from sickness or from sin. How often in his ministry he said that his help was evoked by the call of faith. While the nobleman was still on his journey home he was met by members of his household who reported that his son was alive and recovering. The father had left the bedside of his child scarcely expecting to see him again. What was his joy, therefore, to find that his health was assured? Upon comparison of time with the servants the father found that the amendment dated from the very hour of his conversation with Jesus. Nothing could be more convincing than this Not only himself, but his whole household believed. Of the nature of their faith we can only surmise. They at least believed in Jesus as one who could heal, and this was the basis of what may bave grown to be a larger and truer faith, Jesus' first miracle had convinced the disciples of his power; this second miracle in Galilee, indeed in Cana itself, convinced this influential family of the power of the young prophet whose fame was so soon to spread into all Galilee.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

The two days inSamaria were days of rest, and yet of labor; Jesus was never idle, even when he rested. Those who are nearest us are perhaps least appreciated by us. The things that Jesus does for men and in them are the best proofs of his power. Where he has once conferred a blesssing he is always after a welcome guest. All Jesus asks of those who would be healed of sin is to come and let him cure them. It is after all efforts at self-help have failed that the power of Christ to save is best seen. The signs and wonders of Jesus' life were always a means to an end, never an end in themselves. Faith is the key that unlocks the divine treasury of blessing. Men can always date the beginning of their salvation from the moment when out of a full heart they cry to Jesus to be saved.

Washington, D. C. The following news from the capital of the United States may be of interest to many of our readers. We therefore call particular attention to it. Mr. John Sellner, of 1827 Weltberger St., is our authority for the following: "To my delight I can report to you that Mrs. Foster, one of our neighbors, called upon us last evening and told us full of gratitude that her daughter, who had been a subject of epilepsy for over 20 years, had been completely cured by the use of Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. We had previously advised the use of this remedy, but they claimed tbat the ailment was of too long standing to even permit of relief, far less a cure. Nevertheless, we finally persuaded them to use the remedy, insisting that a trial could do no possible harm, and now they have seen the results." Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer has puzzled many by its peculiar efficacy in blood and constitutional disorders. It is a puzzle to doctors and laity alike; although attempts have been made time and again at explaining its peculiar power, it is still unsolved. It is not sold to the drug trade, but to the people direct through local agents by the proprietor, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Christian Endeavor.

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 5.

IDLE IN THE MARKET-PLACE.

(Matt. 20:1-16.)

Life is work. Life is strenuous. Endeavor is not only the title of our society, but also of our life. He who will not work cannot eat—of the bread of life.

"Awake, my soul, stretch every nerve,
And press with vigor on.
A heavenly race demands thy zeal,
And an immortal crown."

Some people think that when they have come into the church by the regular methods, and been "saved," they can then fold their hands and the work is over. But the parable teaches that every one must work, and work hard, even from early morning.

In tropic lands men sit or lie in the shade while food drops from the trees into their laps. There are no tropics in the Christian world and no breadfruit. The kingdom of God is a temperate zone. The bread of heaven must be won in the sweat of the face.

The parable of the penny wages has caused uneasiness in some minds, that the idle workers who wait till the eleventh hour should receive equal pay with the diligent. Is this justice? No. It is mercy. God is not just, thank God. He is merciful. The purpose of the parable is to teach that the early laborers get what is their strict due, but that the late laborers get what is not their strict due. It is not that the first get less than they have earned, but that the last get more than they have earned.

Would you rather deserve what you get, or get what you do not deserve? Would you rather your employer should, out of the goodness of his heart, pay you more than he feels you have earned, or would you rather receive from him what you and he both know you are altogether worthy of? Take heed, then, Endeavorers, that we none of us stand idle all the day and receive into unworthy hands what we have not fairly won.

God wants the old. He wants those who have stood idly by in the heat and burden of life till the eleventh hour. Perhaps he may not refuse to accept men even on their dying beds; but O, he wants the young! He wants their young brain and brawn, their young nerve and sinew, their young boundless enthusiasm. Will you refuse to give your life to God in the green leaf, and wait till the sear and yellow? Will you refuse him the branch filled with the sap and strength of life, and give it to him dead and rotted and brittle with age?

An idle brain is the devil's corner grocery.

Two boys with whom I was so intimate as to sleep with all through childhood were set by their father to cut the weeds out of a two-acre lot. They took their little sickles and cut about four feet apiece, then sat down to figure up how much they had done. They then cut two feet further and repeated the process; then one foot, and so on. They earned no honest blisters and no pennies. When the sun went down the weeds were still up. They looked back too much upon what they had done. Not so Paul. "Forgetting the things that are behind, and reaching forward unto those things that are before, I press toward the mark."

From Solomon to Malachi.

By J. Z. Tyler.

Those who are taking our first year's course in Bible study will find, by reference to the direction sheet, that during the present quarter we are to pass in rapid review those books and parts of books in the Old Testament which treat of Hebrew history, from the reign of Solomon to the close of the sacred record. This portion of history is replete with stirring incidents, deplorable apostasies, heroic struggles, temporary reformations, national deportations, and a remarkable restoration. In order to aid our readers, we present a bird's-eye view of the entire field to be covered during the quarter. I follow closely Prof. B. S. Dean's admirable "Outline of Bible History."

I. The Division.—With the close of Solomon's reign we reach a point where the widening current of Hebrew history parts into two streams. The disruption of the kingdom was not the work of a day, but the growth of years. Tribal rivalries had manifested themselves from the very first, and the tribe of Ephraim had repeatedly shown a proud sense of superiority and independence (Joshua 17:14-18; Judges 8:1-3; 12:1-6).

It has been said that while Solomon had a thousand wives, he seems to have had only one son, and he was a fool. His name was Rehoboam. Upon his accession the people petitioned to have their taxes lightened, and upon his reckless and unjust refusal to grant their reasonable request the ten northern tribes revolted, with Jeroboam, of the tribe of Ephraim, as king.

The northern kingdom is known as the kingdom of Israel and the southern as the kingdom of Judah. The territory of the kingdom of Israel was not only far larger, but vastly richer, both in natural resources and in historical association. As time went on, however, Israel lost, by the migration of the Levites, and other more spiritual elements to Judah (2nd Chron. 15:9, 10). From first to last the kings of Israel were idolatrous, and the people grew to be more and more so. Yet it is interesting to note that nearly all the great early prophets either belong to Israel or were sent on missions to that kingdom. Judah, though often idolatrous, was far more loyal to Jehovah. It was far more stable. Israel continued only two hundred and fifty years; yet in that time nine dynasties with nineteen kings sat on the throne. Every new dynasty began in a bloody revolution, only to be itself blotted out in blood. Judah endured for nearly four hundred years with only twenty sovereigns, all, save the usurper, Athaliah, belonging to the line of David.

II. The Kingdom of Israel.—The history of the northern kingdom may be divided, religiously, into four unequal periods. (1) Idolatry Taking Root: Fifty years, Three dynasties, Five reigns. The leading character was Jeroboam, founder of the kingdom. (2) Idolatry Triumphant: Fifty years, One dynasty, Four reigns. The founder of the dynasty was an army officer named Omri. He was succeeded by Ahab and Jezebel, of infamous memory. Elijah belongs to this period. (3) Idolatry Checked: One hundred years, One dynasty, Five reigns. Jehu, the founder of this dynasty, exterminated the house of Ahab in a whirlwind of revolution. This is the period of the little kingdom's greatest prosperity; but it was the last flicker of the flame, "the Indian Summer of Israel." Jeroboam the II. reigned forty-one years, and raised the kingdom to its present power. Near the close of this period the prophet Hoshea raised his eloquent voice against the idolatries of Israel. (4) Idolatry Ending in Ruin: Fifty years, Four dynasties, Five reigns. The Assyrians begin the work of deportation in the reign of Menahem. The end comes when King Hoshea revolts from the Assyrian yoke. The ten tribes are carried into captivity, from which they never return. Assyrians, imported into the land, mingled with the remnants of Israel and this mixed race, with a mongrel religion, continued for centuries and constituted the Samaritans of the time of Christ.

III. The Kingdom of Judah.—Judah lasted nearly one hundred and fifty years longer, making about 400 years in all. Her history may be divided into four periods of decline and revival, each closely connected with the character of the kings reigning at the time. It should be remembered that Judah, unlike Israel, had but a single dynasty throughout—that of David. Its four periods may be summarized as fololws: (1) First Decline and Revival: Four reigns, Ninety years. The pagan tendencies begun under Solomon continued and increased for the next twenty years. Heathen altars sprang up all over the land and gross immoralities spread among the people. Asa's reign of forty-one years was in marked contrast with the two preceding ones, both in purity and vigor. He removed heathen altars and reorganized the worship of Jehovah. Jehosaphat, his son, carried these reforms still further and provided for the regular religious instruction of the people. (2) Second Decline and Revival: Nine reigns, Two hundred years. Jehoram, Jehosaphat's son, succeeded to the throne. He married Athaliah, daughter of Ahab, and she carried into Judah the fierce spirit and gross Baal-worship of her mother, Jezebel. Idolatrous influences deepened until, in the reign of Ahaz, they ripened into open and general apostasy. The revival came under Hezekiah, aided by Isaiah, and other prophets. (3) Third Decline and Revival: Three reigns, Ninety years. The decline came under the reigns of Manasseh and Amon. The reforms of Hezekiah and Isaiah proved only temporary. After this decline period there came a revival under the reign of Josiah, aided by Jeremiah and other prophets. (4) Final Decline and Captivity: Josiah's reforms had evidently not been rooted in the convictions of the nation at large. They were rather enforced by royal authority, and fell as soon as that authority was withdrawn. Four kings followed Josiah; three sons and a grandson. A succession of invasions and captivities of Judæa by Nebuchadnezzar, the powerful king of Babylon, closes the drama.

IV. The Captivity.—The captivity has been repeatedly foretold by such prophets as Isaiah, Micah, Huldah and Jeremiah. (2nd Kings 20:17; 21:10-15; 22:14-17; Jer. 25:11-19; 34:2, 3; Micah 3:8-22). These prophecies were unconsciously fulfilled by Nebuchadnezzer. He made three invasions of Judea, each time carrying away captives to Babylon. Among these were Daniel, Ezekiel and other men prominent in Old Testament history.

V. The Post-Exilic Period.—This extends from the return under Zerrubbabel to the close of Old Testament history. The return from the Babylonian captivity was as distinctly foretold as was the captivity itself. This return of a captive nation is something unique in history. There were three distinct periods of return: (1) The return under Zerrubbabel. (2) The return and reforms under Ezra. (3) The return of Nehemiah. The beautiful story of Queen Esther seems to fall in between the first and second returns. In Nehemiah's time, or soon after, the last note of Hebrew prophecy was uttered by Malachi. So closes the volume of Old Testament history. For nearly four centuries following the voice of prophecy is silent, until the voice of the harbinger of Christ is heard crying in the wilderness of Judea.

Literature.

MYSTERY OF THE GOLDEN CLOTH, or The Riven Veil. By Jasper Seaston Hughes, Chicago. White Star, publishers, 1898.

The world is indebted for the progress that has been made along almost every line of human thought to men who have thrown their hearts and lives into some particular subject, and sought to master its meaning and convey it to others. The author of this volume has for many years made a specialty of this worderful book that constitutes the close of our New Testament canon. Circumstances, as explained in his introductory chapter, turned his attention in this direction, and he has devoted many years of patient thought and research, studying, lecturing and writing, and then rewriting, and this volume is the result. It is not a book thrown off at first-hand without any cost to the writer, and consequently of little value to the reader. One can trace the results in this volume of mental toil, and even of heart-struggle, as the author has sought to attain to the true meaning of the book.

It is difficult in a brief notice to give the reader anything like an adequate idea of the author's method of treatment. The ordinary reader separates in his thought the letters to the seven churches from the other chapters as forming no part of the highly symbolic plan and structure of the book. Not so the author of this volume; the letters are a very significant part of the general plan of the book which, according to him, is based on the cryptic theory, which makes the order of the new creation follow the record of the original creation in seven days. Considerable use is made of the significant numbers 7, 4 and 3. The whole gospel history, according to the theory of interpretation here adopted, is reproduced here by John in symbols, to greatly heighten the effect of the mere statement in words. The book recounts the struggles between the great world-powers represented by the number 4 and the heavenly powers. The sixth seal represents Christ's personal ministry and the seventh, Pentecost, and the trumpeters which follow represent the work of the apostles. We are now, according to the author, living under the sixth seal; that is, we are now living in that period of the church which corresponds to the closing period of Christ's ministry, and the Sabbath cometh on apace, with its new resurrection and Pentecost.

We have not yet completed the reading of the volume because it needs to be studied as well as read. We are satisfied, however, the author has gotten a deeper insight into the meaning of this wonderful book than most of those who have written on the subject, and perhaps his book embraces the best of all that has been written, although he quotes from no other book, but gives us the result of his own reading and thought. It is wonderfully interesting reading and cannot fail to greatly stimulate interest, not only in this book, but in the whole Bible and in the great movements of history. We do not believe any one can afford to miss this book who has any special interest in the apocalyptic literature of the Bible. We sincerely wish that this volume may be extensively read among us, believing that such reading and study will do much to increase faith in the inspiration of the Bible and in the glory and perfection of the Christian system.

"The Rise and Decline of Ecclesiasticism" is the title of a 16-page tract, envelope size, by G. O. Nations, B. S., just from the press of the Christian Publishing Co. For a concise outline statement of a vast historic subject you will find few things better than this tract.

"The World's Great Movements and the Coming Revolution" is the title of a 16-page tract, book size, by O. H. Truman, Superior, Neb., predicting a revolution in America by ballot or bullet.

The price of A. P. Stout's "Chronology of Christ's Life," reviewed in this column in our issue Jan 5th, by B. B. Tyler, is $2.00.

St. Louis readers of the Youth's Companion will be interested in Gen. F. D. Grant's contribution to the January 19 issue, "General Grant as a Father," in which he recalls the General's home life in and near St. Louis in the late 50's, where he was engaged in the real estate business and also held office in the Custom House.

THE FAMILY DOCTOR.

Thousands Of Families Have One in The House at All Times.

The Same Exceptional Opportunity Offered Here to All Readers of This Paper.

A prominent citizen remarked recently, to the publisher of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, "It may seem surprising to you, but in my house we have a family doctor there all the time. Nor am I the only one who has this great blessing," said he. "I know of many families who have this same doctor always within reach."

"Do I mean a man, a physician, in flesh and blood?" he asked. "No, not exactly that; the family doctor that I refer to is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy. We have not had to call a doctor to our house since we have used it."

This is the testimony of thousands who know swamp-Root for what it is. This famous medicine is the absolute conqueror of kidney and bladder diseases, and many a man and woman who walk the streets to-day in the complete possession of health owe their lives to the power of this great discovery over kidney and bladder ills and uric acid disturbances. In diseases of the blood, no matter from what source they arise, Swamp-Root goes right to the source of the trouble, and cures by first removing the cause, and sends the blood leaping and bounding away in quest of bright eyes and rosy cheeks.

Constipation and liver troubles, urinal weaknesses and the torture that goes with them, rheumatism, stiff joints, in fact, diseases arising from any wrong conditions of the blood, liver, bladder or kidneys, are promptly overcome by Dr. Kilmer's famous discovery, Swamp-Root.

None but those who have made a study of the subject realize what an immense amount of work the kidneys perform every day. They are the sewer of the system, and once they become clogged up, poison runs riot und disease has full sway. Just as a choked sewer breeds pestilence in a city, so do weak and unhealthy kidneys breed disease in the human body.

Swamp-Root clears out all the impurities, helps the kidneys to perform their work properly, drives the poison out of the blood and system, invigorates and regenerates you and adds tenfold to the pleasures and comforts of life.

Swamp-Root has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, who have not already tried it may have a free sample bottle of Swampt-Root and thus test for themselves its wonderful curative properties.

If you will send your name and full address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y., a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free by mail postpaid, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of Swamp-Root.

This great remedy is for sale at most drug stores in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. Don't make any mistake, but make a note of the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root and remember that it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y.

If you take advantage of this generous offer and write for a free sample bottle be sure and mention the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y.

BELLEVILLE, HENDRICKS COUNTY, INDIANA, Nov. 5, 1898.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

This is to certify that for three years I had a skin cancer, the size of a ten cent piece, on the left temple near the eye. I was very much alarmed, for fear that it might spread into my eye, as it begun to show symptoms of growing. I heard of Dr. Rinehart's New Treatment for cancer, and placed myself under his care, being convinced that he is a perfect gentleman, and his treatment, which is both local and constitutional, was sensible and thorough. I am pleased to say that on the eleventh day after I begun treatment the cancer dropped out, not causing me, at any time during treatment, the slightest pain or discomfort, and no loss of sleep or rest. On the twelfth day I went home, thoroughly convinced of a cure. I will answer any inquiries, if a stamped, addressed envelope is enclosed.

BELL.

Jos. Harrison Bell, the leading elder of the congregation at New Boston, Linn county, Mo., died Jan. 1, 1899. Bro. Bell was a devoted student of the Bible and a constant reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for 24 years, also a reader of other good literature. Bro. Bell was born in Boone county, Mo., Dec. 19, 1831. Married his present companion Dec. 25, 1850. Joined the Church of Christ at the age of 20 and was baptized by Elder Burton, of the Christian Church at Salisbury, Mo. He raised a family of seven daughters and one son, all of whom are active members of the church. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Eld. W. W. Jones and Alf Munyon, at the Pleasant Grove Church and cemetery. F. THEO. MAYHEW.

HALL.

Bro. John C. Hall was born in Ohio, April 15, 1846, came to Indiana at the age of nine, served in the rebellion from 1863 to 1865, and was married to Jane Ezra, Nov. 20, 1865. There were born to this union seven children, four of whom survive with their mother to mourn their loss. At the age of 23 years he became a Christian, and died in the faith of his Redeemer Jan. 6, 1899. Funeral conducted by A. W. Gehres on second Lord's day, 3:00 P. M., at Pittsburg, Ind. A. W. GEHRES.

HITMAN.

Miss Dora Hitman died Jan. 4, 1899. She was 28 years old, and had been a faithful Christian for 12 years. She was a sweet girl; every one that knew her loved her. She died at Patton, Mo., but they brought her to Yount, Mo., for burial by her mother. She leaves two brothers and two sisters to mourn their loss.
M. J. YOUNT.

HUNSAKER.

Louisa B. Botts (Hunsaker) was born in Novelty, Knox Co., Mo., Nov. 19, 1856, and died in Nevada, Mo., Jan. 9, 1899, aged 42 years, one month and 20 days. Her home was in Columbus, Kan., but she had gone to Nevada, Mo., for treatment in the vain hope of relief. She was married to S. W. Hunsaker, Sept. 2, 1877. Two sons and two daughters resulted from this union, all living to mourn their loss. Sister Hunsaker united with the Church of Christ in Novelty, Mo., at the age of 16 years, and lived a consistent, faithful life until her death, a period of 26 years. She will be missed in society, in church, and most seriously by her husband and children. Sermon by the writer, from the Scripture (Rev. 14:13), "Blessed are the dead," etc.
O. H. DERRY.

JORDAN.

John D. Jordan passed quietly away at his home in Pleasantville, Ia., Dec. 24, 1898. He was born in Adams Co., Ill., June 19, 1832, thus being 66 years, six months and five days old at the time of his decease. He came to Iowa in 1847 and has been a resident of the state for the most of the time ever since. For 29 years he has been an active member of the Christian Church and during this time has been a subscriber and reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He leaves behind, to mourn their loss, a sorrowing wife, three brothers, a sister, three sons and a daughter. He was sorely afflicted for many years, and during seasons of intense suffering was always found in prayer. He was a faithful husband, father and counselor and his presence will be sadly missed in his immediate family. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the Christian Church, Pleasantville, Christmas day, 1898, at 11 A. M. A large concourse of friends and relatives were in attendance, as also the Masonic fraternity in full uniform to pay their last respects to this departed brother. F. D. FERRALL.

PHEBUS.

Sister Martha Ann Harvey was born in Ohio, Sept. 22, 1829. Was married to Silas Phebus June 13, 1847, and was the mother of 11 children, only five of whom survive. She became a Christian Oct. 23, 1875, and died Jan. 7, 1899, aged 69 years, three months and 16 days. Funeral took place Monday from the Spring Creek Church, White county, Ind.
A. W. GEHRES.

WISE.

Edwin B. Wise died at his home in Greenville, Illinoise, Nov. 17, 1898, aged 61 years and 11 months. Funeral services at the Christian Church by Rev. E. N. Tucker.
MRS. KATE M. WISE.

WILSON.

John F. Wilson was born in Rockbridge County, Va., April 4, 1823 and died Dec. 16, 1898, in Troy, Mo. He married Miss Elizabeth Lasly in 1841, by whom eight children were born, six of whom are living. In 1875 he lost his first companion and in 1876 he married Mrs. Attillia McCulloch, daughter of George Copher. To this union Mattie was born. For over 40 years he advanced the doctrine of his Master and he will be missed by all who knew him. After services at his residence by the writer, his remains were taken to the Nicholas cemetery, where Bro. R. L. Morton, in the presence of old neighbors and friends, made appropriate remarks, after which his body was given to the grave.

Publishers' Notes.

The study of the history of prominent characters of the past is both entertaining and profitable. Among the many interesting of these may well be placed such characters as King Saul, King Jehu and Queen Esther.

These three prominent Bible characters have recently been made the subjects of as many books, and published by the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis. The authors have taken the records as given in the Scriptures and have written books worthy of the attention of the readers of to-day. These books are as follows:

"King Saul," by J. Breckenridge Ellis, price, $1.00.

"In the Days of Jehu," by J. Breckenridge Ellis, price, 75 cts.

"Queen Esther," by M. M. Davis, price, 75 cts.

"The Wonders of the Sky, or God's Glory Exhibited in the Heavens," is a neat little book of recent issue, written by W. J. Russell. It is a book of 82 pages full of interesting astronomical facts concerning the wonders of the heavens. It will make a splendid little work to place in the hands of boys and girls, as it will inspire a greater reverence for the Creator of the universe. The price of this book is 50 cents, postpaid.

I have carefully examined Christian Lesson Commenatry for 1899. It shows painstaking, scholarship and fidelity to the Word. Its different methods of teaching the text—expository, illustrative, applicatory and practical—with suggestive questions, opens the lesson fully to the understanding and gives a wide range of thought. It is a rich storehouse from which a teacher can be thoroughly equipped for teaching any grade of pupils.—I. A. Thayer, New Castle, Pa.

We are glad to give our readers the following commendation of Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899, from one so competent to judge of the merits of such works:

I have on my study table some five Sunday-school Commentaries published by as many publishing companies, but I am free to say that, as usual, the Christian Lesson Commentary is best of all. W. W. Dowling is a master workman and knows how to prepare a commentary that will aid rather than hinder a teacher in the preparation of the lesson. This work for 1899 is a storehouse of thoughts on all phases of the lesson text, and shows painstaking scholarship and fidelity to the Word The book is beautifully bound, and makes an ornament in the home and library. It gives me pleasure to commend this Commentary to all Sunday-school workers.—W. J. Russell, Pastor Christian Church, Rushville, Ind.

Christian Lesson Commentary for 1899, edited by W. W. Dowling and published by the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, is a work of more than 400 pages and treats the International Sunday-school Lessons for the year in such a manner as to make the preparation of the lesson a pleasure as well as profit to the teacher. Light is thrown on the text from every standpoint. Any Sunday-school teacher who will prepare the lesson with the proper use of this commentary will come before his class thoroughly prepared to do efficient teaching. Besides its valuable aid for present use, it will make a splendid book of reference for future usefulness.

The price is $1.00 per copy, postpaid, or $9.00 per dozen copies, charges not prepaid. Sample pages sent free on application.

Do you delight in studying the meaning of Revelation? If you do, you should call to your assistance the one who has made the Book of Revelation a study for many years. J. G. Encell has recently put into a book the fruits of years of study on the meaning of John in Revelation. The title of the book is "The Exiled Prophet, or What John Saw on Patmos." This is a work of 245 pages and the price is $1.25 postpaid. There is an ably written introductory chapter on the Prophecy of Daniel, by Dr. D. R. Dungan.

Expansion.

W. D. CREE,
Supt. of Subscription Department.

We are still expanding and bringing the islands of the sea under our influence.

We are sure that they will be benefited by being "annexed" to the least of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. A large club of new subscribers from New Zealand is one of our expansion items.

Since our last report in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the number of subscribers to the Christian Portrait Gallery has more than doubled. Kansas, California, Tennessee, Wyoming, Mississsippi, Oklahoma, Ohio and Virginia have joined the ranks.

If you want to be among the first thousand send your name at once. The Christian Portrait Gallery will be issued quarterly at the yearly subscription price of one dollar.

"I would have you omit none of the departments from the pages of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

I especially appreciate the prayer-meeting and Sunday-school departments."

Butler, Ind. D. A. SHAW.

They are there to stay by the overwhelming approval of our readers. They will not grow less important, you may rest asssured.

If there is no one actively engaged in circulating the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in your neighborhood, there ought to be. Write to us, either volunteering yourself or suggesting some one else. Now is the very best time for an increase of Christian influences in the homes by the presence of a Christian paper.

"In moral and spiritual worth I regard the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as head and shoulders above any other paper in our ranks. In tone and spirit it is superb." J. C. REYNOLDS.

Macomb, Ill.

And Bro. Reynolds is surely qualified to testify.

"I am proud of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with its steady growth, meeting all live issues and ever keeping abreast of the forward movements in this progressive age.

"If every Christian family could be induced to take it, this would truly be the Jubilee Year."

Randall, Kan. G. D. SELLERS.

To tell the truth, those are our own sentiments, too.

When you send in your own subscription, remember your friend and neighbor and urge him to subscribe also. There is no better way to assist the cause than this. Remember the price since Jan. 1st, 1899, is only $1.50.

"I wish you success with your most excellent Christian paper. May it continue as a messenger of light and a basis of Christian education to thousands of homes and hearts during this coming year." D. D. BURT.

Omaha, Neb.

Whenever the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ceases to be a messenger of light and a Christian educator, its mission will be ended. "Let there be light."

"Permit me to express my high appreciation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST because of its educational value. It does not seek to produce a frenzy of enthusiasm which to day is and to-morrow has passed away, but to lay a broad foundation for a zeal based upon knowledge, which will gather momentum as it advances and thus become become a permanent factor of the life. Certainly, nothing could be more helpful in producing this desired condition than your series of articles on the Reformation of the Nineteenth Century.

"I contemplate having them read to our Sunday evening audiences as a part of the service each Lord's day evening."

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

REFORMATION OF THE 19th CENTURY
OR NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

A Series of Historical Articles to Run Through the Christian-Evangelist During the Year 1899

I. Introductory Period—1809 to 1819.

BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

This will include those stirring events which occurred in the formative period of our reformatory movement with which the present generation should be thoroughly familiar.

II. From the Organization of the Christian Missionary Society to the Outbreak of the Civil War—1849 to 1861.

BY DR. B. B. TYLER,
Contributing Editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

This period of our history, embracing the first decade of operations under the American Christian Missionary Society, with Jerusalem and Jamacia missions, will be full of interest to readers of to-day.

III. The War Period, rom the Firing on Sumpter up to the Death of Mr. Campbell—1861 to 1866.

BY DR. W. T. MOORE,
Dean of the Missouri Bible College, Columbia.

This is a turbulent period in our country's history, and one that tried most severely the principle we had adopted, of unity in Christ, in spite of differences of opinion. It ends with the death of Mr. Campbell, an event which opponents of the Reformation thought would practically end the movement.

IV. The Period Between the Death of Mr. Campbell and the Organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society—1866 to 1875.

BY T. W. GRAFTON,
Pastor Christian Church, Rock Island, Ill.

This period covers one of those turning-points in our history in which our whole future was involved. The conflict between Christian liberty and strict constructionism, and the conception and trial of the "Louisville Plan" of mission work, enter into this part of our history.

V. The Period from 1875 to the Close of 1899.

1. AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.	2. FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.	3. CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.
B. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec. A. C. M. S.	A. MCLEAN, Cor. Sec. F. C. M. S.	Miss Lois White, Cor Sec. C. W. B. M.

The closing period in our analysis is the period of expansion. Liberty has triumphed in its contest with legalism, and it manifests its power in the formation of new organizations through which to carry on a more aggressive work. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society came to birth, and the old Mother Society through their aid, soon comes to the consciousness of its own mission. The history of these societies will be given by their respective corresponding secretaries.

The whole series will be under the editorial supervision of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Series begins in the issue of Jan. 12th. Subscribe at once and secure the entire series.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Under the able leadership of Mr. Gorman, the opposition to the ratification of the Peace Treaty in the Senate is developing from a widespread sentiment voiced by a few prominent senators into a solidly crystallized party of opposition, with a definite and formidable list of pledged adherents. In the organization of this movement Mr. Gorman has found an ample field for the exercise of his political genius. This may be considered the final act in his public career, for his term in the Senate expires March 3. He was virtually defeated last fall by the election of a Republican legislature in Maryland, and seems disposed to consider his retirement to private life permanent. So it probably will be, unless he should in this encounter win such glory as would again open a place for him. There is no disposition on the part of the leaders in the Senate to pursue a policy of delay on either side. It is reported that a limit has been agreed upon for the debate, and that the vote will probably be taken on Feb. 6. If the strength of the opposition develops dangerously in the meantime, common political sagacity will dictate to the committee the policy of attempting to postpone the vote until after March 4. A special session of the new Congress, with its Republican re-enforcements in the Senate, would have no difficulty in ratifying the treaty. Mr. Bacon has proposed, as a preliminary to the ratification of the treaty, a resolution disclaiming any intention of annexing the Philippines. The supporters of this resolution claim that it would at once remove the danger of war with the Filipinos, and so would remove most, if not all, of the opposition to the treaty. The objection is that the administration prefers not to commit itself as to the ultimate disposition of the Philippines until more accurate and exhaustive information is at hand regarding the situation there.

The court-martial which has been trying Commissary General Eagan for "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and conduct prejudicial to good discipline," has finished its work. The verdict has not yet been made public, and cannot be officially declared for several days, but a source usually reliable gives the information that Gen. Eagan was found guilty and sentenced to dismissal from the service, with no recommendation for clemency. It is remarkable with what unanimity the press has sided against the accused. He has had no friends. Many have been willing to admit that Gen. Miles' statements may have been misleading, mistaken or exaggerated, but none have doubted the impropriety of Gen. Eagan's reply. The line of defense attempted does not impress us as strong. It was practically the familiar "emotional insanity" dodge—that Gen. Miles' charges made the Commissary General so mad (in both senses of the word) that he was not responsible for his words. It is hard to feel much force in this plea, especially when one remembers that the offensive language was read from type-written manuscript, and was incorporated in a testimony under oath before a dignified court.

Several senatorial contests continue deadlocked with little immediate prospects of a break. Wisconsin has five candidates, all sanguine of victory, and perhaps the least unexpected thing that could happen would be the election of some unexpected dark horse. In West Virginia the large number of new members in the legislature has given opportunity for an uncommonly spirited fight over credentials. At one time there was almost a riot and scenes were enacted in the house which remind one of the French Chamber engaged in an animated discussion of the army, or the Austrian Reichsrath on a busy day. The senatorial fight in Montana has made it perfectly clear that there has been corruption on a large scale in the legislature of that state, but it is not quite certain whether the money was distributed to secure Clark's election or his defeat. The situation there is a strong argument in favor of election of senators by popular vote. In Pennsylvania Quay still leads in spite of the indictment which is hanging over his head. After repeated balloting he lacks fourteen votes of the requisite number for election. Forty-three Republican members have pledged themselves in writing not to vote for Quay until he has been acquitted by the court, and without at least eight of these or an equal number of recalcitrant Democrats, he cannot be elected.

The Samoan difficulty has not yet been settled, but it is past the stage where there is any possibility of friction between the United States and Germany as the result of it. It appears from latter reports that the German consul was not the only one whose actions were irregular as compared with the strict requirements of the Berlin treaty, although his transgression of the agreement was most flagrant, that of the British and American representatives being rather technical. Germany stands ready to disavow any act of her consul which was not in harmony with the treaty as it stands, but the German press unanimously voices the opinion that the treaty needs revision in the interest of "a more just distribution of influence." At present the three nations are on an even footing. From the German point of view, a more just distribution would be one which would recognize Germany's larger financial interest in Samoa by making her influence paramount. It is not improbable that, when the present trouble has been settled on the basis of the existing agreement, an international conference will be called for the revision of the Berlin treaty.

The Philippine embassy to the United States, headed by Agoncillo, has not been a success diplomatically. The President has been found affable and approachable to Agoncillo, the Philippine citizen, but utterly deaf to the appeals and blind to the presence of Agoncillo, the Philippine diplomatic representative. Whatever might be our intention regarding the ultimate independence of the Philippines, it is clearly impossible for the government to take any step now which would imply a recognition at once of the Philippine Republic. Such declarations and recognitions amount to nothing unless they are in accordance with the facts. It is not a fact that Aguinaldo's so called republic is now a sovereign and independent government, and no declaration of ours could make it so. Aguinaldo, however, does not see it that way. He threatens to recall Agoncillo if he is not officially recognized at once; he will break off diplomatic relations—which do not exist. In the plain language of childhood, if we persist in refusing to play with him he will retaliate by refusing to play with us. This is a very terrible threat, and its execution should not be undertaken lightly. The real danger, of course, is that the wily Aguinaldo, on the basis of this refusal of recognition, will succeed in persuading the natives that the Americans are their enemies. It is reported that Aguinaldo has made recognition and alliance with the Philippine Republic by Spain the price of the release of the Spanish prisoners whom he still holds and that similar propositions have been made to the Pope in regard to the release of the imprisoned clergy.

The almost unanimous passage of the Nicaragua Canal bill in the Senate does not necessarily indicate that it will have a swift or easy course through the House. The House committee has been busily hearing everybody's testimony for several weeks past, and to all appearances every additional argument leaves the committee still more hopelessly befuddled and divided. It cannot be said that there are any probabilities in the case, except that there will be delay and more amendments. Mr. Hepburn, chairman of the House committee, is firmly fixed in his resolution to have nothing to do with any bill which provides for the construction of the canal otherwise than directly by the government. The amendments in the Senate left the Maritime Company little more than a name for the canal building function of the government, but even the name must go, according to Mr. Hepburn. If the government builds the canal it must do it in its own name and control it in the same way. There is reason to believe that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty will not be allowed to stand in the way of American ownership and control. The recent frequent conferences between Secretary Hay and Sir Julian Pauncefote are suspected to have a bearing upon this as well as upon the Berlin treaty. One plausible conjecture is that Great Britain will agree to surrender the Clayton-Bulwer treaty in consideration of a general assurance that the canal, while owned and controlled by the United States, shall be neutral to all nations in peace and war.

A railroad and telegraph line through the center of Africa from north to south, from Cairo to Cape Town, is the leading feature in Cecil Rhodes' plan for British domination of Africa. The recent reconquest of the Soudan by Gen. Kitchener has given encouragement to the promoters of the project and Mr. Rhodes, who has long had this plan in mind, is now in London trying to enlist the co-operation of the government to the extent of guaranteeing bonds amounting to $50,000,000. The distance between the two suggested termini, Cairo and Cape Town, is about five thousand miles. A railroad owned and controlled by the Cape Colony Government, of which Mr. Rhodes is premier, already runs north from the latter point to Buluwago in Matabeleland, about one-fourth of the entire distance. The project involves many difficulties financial, military, topographical and diplomatic—the latter perhaps the most serious of all. But certainly there is no one move which would so suddenly effect the realization of Great Britain's ambition for the domination of Africa or the opening of the continent to civilizing influences. The boldness of the plan is worthy of the ambition and ability of Mr. Rhodes. But if Russia finds it worth while to build a railroad across Sibera to bring China nearer to her grasp, why should England not find it worth while to expend a much smaller sum to open Central Africa to British diplomatic influence and open to the world the commerce of that rich tropical region?

It is characteristic of American as of British expansion that not only trade, but education, follows the flag. On Gen. Kitchener's return to England after his military success in the Soudan, he announced his intention of founding a college in the conquered territory and the hundred thousand pounds for which he asked were quickly subscribed. Similarly, one of our first duties to the islands which have lately come under our protection is to provide them with educational facilities. Prof. William T. Harris, superintendent of the bureau of education, has, at the request of the President, studied the conditions and prepared a plan for a public school system to be introduced in Cuba. A free school supported by taxation is an absolute novelty in that island and the inauguration of the system will demand the employment of American experts in that department to effect the organization, but it is recommended that Cuban teachers be employed so far as possible, although it will be necessary at first to import some from the United States. Both Spanish and English are to be taught in the schools. A system of free schools in Cuba patterned after our own will be the most effective means of introducing the American spirit, demonstrating the beneficent effects of American administration and preparing the Cubans to bear the responsibilities of self-government.

The Army Reorganization bill has come up for active debate in the House. The discussion is limited to fifteen hours, exclusive of evening sessions, and the vote will be taken not later than the afternoon of Tuesday, Jan. 31. The bill as now before the House provides for a standing army of 60,000 men, which may be increasd to 100,000 at the discretion of the President. In opposition to this there will be some support for the bill formulated by Gen. Miles. The points of difference between these two bills have already been mentioned in a previous issue (Dec. 15).

The joint convention of coal miners, owners and operators at Pittsburg ended peacefully with an agreement which seemed satisfactory to all parties. The outcome was practically as predicted in the last issue: victory for the miners in their contention for an eight-hour day, for the operators in the continuance of the "screen," and a compromise on rate. At the last the Illinois miners held out for certain advantages which they had last year and wanted to retain. This and a few other details were left to be settled within the respective states which they concern. A committee of eight, on which miners and operators are equally represented, was appointed to arbitrate any dispute which may arise during the year. The outcome guarantees that there will be no general strike of coal miners this year, though there may possibly be local disturbances.

THE QUESTION CONCERNING CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Christian Endeavor movement received a hospitable welcome among the Disciples of Christ. This was entirely natural and proper. Its non-sectarian basis and aim, its catholicity of spirit, its pledged allegiance alone to Jesus Christ, its very name—Christian Endeavor—have commended the movement to our favorable consideration. It has made quite rapid growth among us, not because of any systematic effort that has been made to spread it, but because of the natural affinity between it and our own religious movement. The opposition to it has been so inconsiderable as to require no serious attention.

In 1892, 1,321 societies were reported among us; in 1893, 1,685; in 1894, 2,446; in 1895, 3,085; in 1896, 3,654; in 1897, 3,987; in 1898, at Chattanooga, there were reported among us 4,633 societies—an increase of 646 societies over the previous report. This is encouraging growth, and indicates more clearly than mere words could do that this Endeavor movement meets a want in our churches, readily adjusts itself to the spirit and aims of our own movement, and has come to stay. Who can estimate what good will come out of these young people's societies among us in the way of the development of the spiritual life of our young people, increasing their knowledge on religious themes, and the increased efficiency of the churches with their co-operation?

At Chattanooga the national superintendent closed his report with a paragraph entitled "Forward or Backward—Which?" La er on this question assumed a more concrete form, viz., Is the Christian Endeavor movement among us of sufficient importance to require the whole time and thought and labor of one consecrated man, to give himself to it, guiding its development and promoting biblical study and instruction among the different societies? It was the hesitancy on this question that brought about what is called "A Crisis in Christian Endeavor." It was very evident to some of us that without some leadership, not only would the number of societies among us fall far below what it ought to be, but the movement itself, so far as we are concerned, would fail to realize the possibilities for good which are in it.

This crisis may now be said to have passed. The remarkable unanimity and enthusiasm manifested in the responses to Bro. Tyler's letter in answer to one from the editor of this paper, as they have appeared in the last and in the present issues of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, leave no room for doubt on this question. These expressions of sentiment indicate, not only that it is desirable that Bro. J. Z. Tyler give his entire time to this work, but that it is entirely feasible to secure the money through the societies or otherwise to support him in this special mission for which he is so well qualified. It only remains to determine the particular way in which this will be accomplished. But that some way will be devised, and that this end, so much desired, will be accomplished, is beyond question.

The Acting Board of the American Christian Missionary Society, to which the matter of employing Bro. Tyler was referred, hesitated to assume the responsibility of providing for his salary at the present time and, perhaps, naturally enough; they had no assurance of the support of the friends of Christian Endeavor in making the Endeavor work a constituent part of our general mission work. It has been our purpose in calling out these expressions of public sentiment to furnish the necessary assurance that the funds would be supplied. All that is necessary now, as it seems to us, is for the board to appoint an executive committee, say of five active friends of Christian Endeavor, to have charge of this matter, to send out appeals, receive subscriptions, have direct supervision of Bro. Tyler's work, and make reports of moneys received and of the results accomplished to the acting board.

This arrangement will avoid what many of us have feared, that the Christan Endeavor work will be permitted to lag behind, this Jubilee Year, when it should be advancing with rapid strides, making the greatest gain among us in its history. It will give fresh encouragement to every Endeavor Society in our ranks, and will add new stimulus to the Reading Courses that are now being pursued by many of the societies, and greatly extend Bible knowledge, and the knowledge of our own movement, and the work of missions. It will make possible the carrying out of the suggestion of applying the university extension method to Christian Endeavor, and thus greatly widening the circle of our influence and work while developing our workers.

Indeed, it would be difficult to overestimate the influence and the future development of this action. It means more than the mere numerical increase of Christian Endeavorers among us. It means the increase of biblical study and intelligence in our churches; it means the development of a higher type of spiritual life among our members; it means a new era in missionary activity, when the young people in these societies, a few years hence, shall be the leading and influential members in our churches; it means the diffusion of the knowledge of our own movement and its principles among our young people, to the end that they may remain loyal to the ideals and aims of our fathers who inaugurated this movement; it means, in a word, that we have been wise enough to see the possibilities of this mighty movement among the young people, and have sought to make the most of it for the glory of God and the good of man. And so, future generations of young people shall rise up and call us blessed for deciding that this movement is to go forward and not backward.

THE FINANCIAL PROBLEM IN THE CHURCH.

The problem in the church now is the the money problem. This statement is true if applied to the local church; it is none the less true when considered in regard to the church as a whole. In the work of missions the question is as to how to get the money essential to a vigorous and successful prosecution of the work. This is not because the church is in poverty. A large proportion of the wealth of this country is in the hands of church members.

There is an interesting, instructive and rather startling article in the Outlook of January 21, 1899, on "Ministers' Salaries."

The average salary of a Methodist preacher per annum is $847. In the South the yearly stipend paid to ministers in this denomination is, on the average, only $500. But the Methodist Church is rich. It possesses more wealth in the United States than does the Roman Catholic Church. The value of church property belonging to the latter, according to the United States Census Report, is $118,069,746. According to the same authority the Methodists possess property worth $132,140,179. The balance in favor of Methodism is $14,070,433. The Methodist Church in the United States is rich in this world's goods. Their ministers are poorly paid.

The Congregational Church systematically and regularly publishes for the benefit of its members a complete list of its ministers. The average salary paid to Congregational ministers in forty-two states and territories is $1,125. In Massachusetts, where Congregationalism is strong, $801,743 are paid annually to ministers in that denomination; but fifty ministers receive $200,000, or one-fourth of this sum. The number of ministers is 537. Two hundred Congregational ministers receive less than a thousand dollars a year, while ninety-eight receive from $250 to 700. The per capita wealth of Congregationalists doubtless exceeds that of the Methodists. It is evident that an inequality exists in the financial support of ministers in the Congregational body that ought not to exist.

The salaries of mission workers in the employ of the Presbyterian Church, in the home field, average yearly $866. This statement includes twenty-one states and territories. Often these men are persons of culture. Many of them have been leaders in college or university, or seminary. Their intellectual endowments are, in cases not a few, superior. In their work they show an almost divine devotion. No one can for a moment reasonably think, with the above facts and figures in hand, that young men enter the ministry from mercenary motives.

In an extended and protracted tour among the congregations of Disciples of Christ the writer has been painfully impressed by the meager financial support given, in very many instances, to our preachers. They are men of more heroic mold, supremely devoted to their work, or they would turn from it to some secular pursuit. Their wives are heroines. Of them the world is not worthy. There are no published statements of a reliable character concerning the annual average stipend paid the faithful preachers of the Word among the Disciples of Christ that can be quoted in this place, but it certainly does not exceed the salaries paid by Methodists, Congregationalists and Presbyterians.

This character of support robs the minister, to a degree, of his manhood. He is compelled to accept alms or suffer. He comes to look for alms from merchants, physicians, railroad corporations and others in the way of free treatment in case of illness, reduced rates of transportation in case he travels and a per cent. off when he buys dry goods, groceries or clothing. This is contrary to the teaching of the New Testament. Paul says that the Lord ordained that "they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel," and that he who "is taught in the Word" should "communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things." Paul quotes also from the book of Deuteronomy the injunction, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn" and adds, "Is it for the oxen that God careth, or saith he it altogether for our sake? Yea, for our sake it was written: because he that ploweth ought to plow in hope, and he that threshеth, to thresh in hope of partaking." In the United States with our abounding wealth the man who preaches the gospel, the person who gives himself wholly to this sacred work, ought to receive a financial support that will free him in larger degree from worry, enable him to hold up his head like a man and pay as he goes. This we can do and this we ought to do. The writer of the article in the Outlook above referred to shows how easily this can be done.

"If the communicants of the churches of the United States should annually give for the support of of their ministers an average of only twenty dollars each, every minister would receive three thousand five hundred dollars per year, and there would be over twenty-one millions of dollars remaining to be divided among the ministers of the richer churches. To be sure there are communicants who would be unable to pay as much as twenty dollars per year for the support of the minister alone, and there are in the Catholic Church, for instance, many not of wage-earning age, but on the other hand, there are very many in the churches able to give far more than twenty dollars per year, while there are many unidentified with any denomination, but who are generally inclined toward the churches and who frequently give liberally from large fortunes, and from these classes the average could quite easily be maintained. Reducing it to an average individual congregation, if each one of, say three hundred members, paid annually twenty dollars for the support of the minister, or if it seemed a better plan, if the whole congregation, rich and poor alike, should agree on a certain sum which would be an average of twenty dollars per capita—each member paying according to his means—the church would give to its minister the handsome sum of six thousand dollars per year!"

How many preachers among us receive six thousand or the half of this amount per year?

What is the solution of the financial problem in our churches? 1. System must be introduced; 2. The pastors must instruct the people out of the Bible, concerning the financial support of the church; 3. Every Christian should be taught to give a tenth or some other definite part of his income to this cause; 4. Preach, teach, exhort along this line until it shall come to be understood that every person will contribute as certainly as that every member has been baptized and will regular-commune; 5. Along with these things let there be much prayer.

Hour of Prayer.

REALIZING GOD'S PRESENCE.

(Gen. 28:10-17; Acts 18:5-11.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Feb. 8th, 1899.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: God's presence, often unrecognized, is always with those who are working in the line of his purposes.

It was a lonely night in the life of young Jacob when, turning his back upon his home and parents and brother, he turned his face toward Padan-aram, and came as far as Luz. There the night settled down upon him, and he laid him down to sleep upon the ground with a stone for a pillow. As he lay there upon his hard bed and harder pillow, looking up into the starlit dome of a Syrian sky, the young man must have had serious thoughts concerning his past and his future. What would be the outcome of this journey to the kindred of his parents? What new responsibilities attached to the possession of his brother's birthright and his father's blessing? What was the import of that strange promise made first to his grandfather, Abraham, and afterwards to his father, Isaac? Did this promise belong to him by virtue of his father's blessing?

Thus meditating, he fell asleep and dreamed. And such a dream! A ladder reaching from earth to heaven, and the angels of God ascending and descending on it. At the upper end of the ladder, and above it, stood the Lord himself, saying: "I am the Lord, the God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac: the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed; and thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south; and in thee and thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blest. And, behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land; for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of."

And Jacob awoke, and thinking upon his dream said: "Surely, the Lord is in this place and I knew it not. How dreadful is this place! This is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven." Many a duller soul, perhaps, would have failed to recognize the presence of God under these circumstances. "Only a dream!" they would have exclaimed, "and there is nothing in a dream." But God was in this dream, and Jacob recognized it at last, though he little thought, when he pillowed his head upon the stone, that God was so near.

Do we not often fail to recognize God's presence with us, especially in the hard and difficult places of life? And yet, it is at such times that God is most likely to manifest himself to us. Had Jacob been acting in disobedience to the wish of his parents and to the purpose of God, and had been reposing upon a luxurious couch, he would have had no such dream. Better a thousand times a pillow of stone, the earth for a bed, and the canopy of heaven for our only cover in the path of duty, than a bed of down and the most luxurious surroundings in the way of disobedience.

It was a bad night, stormy and dark, and there were only a few at the prayer-meeting; just a few of the faithful ones; but somehow there was a fervor in the prayers, and in the songs, and in the exhortations, that warmed all hearts. Everybody said at the close, "Wasn't it a good meeting?" Surely, the Lord was in that place and we knew it not; and yet it was none other than the house of God and the gate of heaven!

What man ever left home and native land at God's call, that God did not go with him? And even if the bed was hard, there was a vision of ascending and descending angels, and full many a token of God's presence. Ask the missionaries if this be not true?

Paul was a missionary—a foreign missionary in the great city of Corinth. The Jews in that place, whom he was anxious to win to Christ, opposed themselves and blasphemed. It was a great and wicked city, and Paul turned with a sad heart from his own countrymen to the Gentiles. His heart must have been very sore with disappointment at the refusal of the Jews to receive his message. But one night, as Paul was lying in his bed, thinking about it, he had a vision, and the Lord said unto him, "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace: for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to harm thee: for I have much people in this city."

"Be not afraid, for I am with thee.' This was the message to Paul. Is it any less the message to every faithful servant of the Lord who, like Paul, is seeking, with singleness of heart, to win men to Christ? We think not. Indeed, we believe that every Christian, whatever may be his station in life, and whatever his sphere of action, if he is trying to do the Lord's work, may claim this promise. The Lord is with every one who is seeking to do his will and to advance his kingdom.

These incidents are recorded, no doubt, to teach us this great truth, that we are not alone when we are doing Christ's service. "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." What great prayer-meetings we could have if we could only realize this truth, that the Lord is with us! What disciple of Christ would stay away from a prayer-meeting if he realized that the Lord would be there among his disciples, scattering his blessings and his benedictions upon every heart and soul hungering and thirsting for righteousness? [Sing "Nearer my God to Thee," which is based on the incident in Jacob's life embraced in the lesson.]

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the God of Jacob and of Paul, Thou art also our God, whose we are and whom we serve. As Thou wert with those ancient servants of Thine, so we believe Thou art with all who, to-day, are engaged in doing Thy will. We thank Thee for this record of Thy dealings with those who, in time past, have put their trust in Thee. May it strengthen our faith in Thee and enable us to realize Thy presence with us in all our labors and struggles to advance Thy kingdom among men. May we always prefer Thy presence with us to all the luxuries of life, and the accessories of wealth, and, at last, may it be ours to dwell with Thee forever, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

It is not without some misgivings on the score of propriety that we publish elsewhere the letter from "Barnabas," which we have entitled "One Reader's Experience During Those Thirty Years," and also that of Bro. Calvin. The misgivings relate entirely to the personal character of these letters. We have stricken out from the first of these a number of these personal references, which we felt were of too personal and complimentary a character, and yet there are others so interwoven with the meaning and import of the letter that we could not well eliminate them without emasculating the letter itself. We secured the permission of the writer to publish the letter, because we felt that the experience through which this widely known brother has gone could not but prove helpful to others who may be having a similar experience. We have substituted a New Testament name for that of the writer.

In the editorial to which these writers refer we gave the editor's side of those thirty years of experience, and these letters from brethren who have been readers of the paper through all those years present the other side of the picture. For that reason we have thought their publication desirable. "Barnabas" did not know, perhaps, that the editor who had caused him so much anxious thought and mental toil was himself throughout this period undergoing a similar experience, seeking to know the truth and to convey the truth to his readers as he believed they were able to receive it. Nor has he been unmindful that his editorials have often caused anxiety on the part of his readers and often on the part of his personal friends, but he has never taken a position that was not the result of careful, painstaking thought and much prayer. If there is one thing that he has coveted above every other thing, through his whole editorial life, it has been that he might be led of God in order that he might lead his readers in safe paths. If there be any virtue in prayer we cannot doubt that such guidance has been vouchsafed, for we have never leaned on our own understanding on these important matters, but have always sought to follow the divine leading. That we have sometimes erred in judgment and in expression is, of course, true, but on the spirit and general course of the paper it seems no presumption on our part to say that God has placed the seal of his approval.

In the light of such experiences as "Barnabas" describes it is not strange, perhaps, that some should have doubted our loyalty to Jesus Christ, and our unshaken confidence in the inspiration and authority of the Holy Scriptures. While we have never had any doubt or anxiety upon these fundamental questions, we can say, in all sober truth and calling upon God to witness, that this faith in Christ and confidence in the authority and sufficiency of the Scriptures were never so strong in our heart as they are to-day. The Bible is a far more interesting book to us than in any former period of our life. This increased interest has come about largely through that criticism (investigation) which so many have feared. As to the plea we are making for a return to the simplicity of the gospel of Christ and to the unity of his body, it never had a larger hold on our heart and intellect than it has to-day. We believe it is just what the world needs. True, many of us have been slow in comprehending its breadth and depth, but as apprehended by the great leaders of the movement, and the representative men who have given it character and success through all these years, it commends itself more and more to thoughtful minds and to devout hearts as the need of the church and of the world. In this confidence we have never wavered.

We have submitted patiently and even without the least irritation of mind, in later years, to an almost ceaseless fire of misrepresentation from a certain class of brethren who in all charity we must believe have never caught a glimpse of the real greatness and grandeur of this mighty movement. But it is comforting to know that many others like this able and eloquent preacher of the gospel, desiring to know the truth, have been led through these experiences and anxieties to a larger light, to a deeper spiritual life and to greater faith in God and in His Word. We have yet to learn of one infidel who has been made such through the influence of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELST. We have had numerous testimonies of men who have been rescued from skepticism through its influence and teaching. See Bro. Calvin's letter. This is our sufficient vindication. We have yet some things to say to our readers which some of them we know are not able to bear. We shall try to be mindful of that fact in all our efforts to lead them, even as we are led, into larger and fuller views of truth and duty.

The mention of the name of Bro. Franklin in the letter of Barnabas leads us to say that his name and his work were omitted by oversight in our editorial until the article was in type and it was too late to make the correction. He well deserved mention among the other great men who were exerting a wide influence at the time of the beginning of our editorial career. We knew him personally, and while in the later years of his life we often crossed blades with him in the field of argument, we never doubted his personal integrity and ability or failed to appreciate the work he wrought in behalf of the cause we love. How true it is, as we look back over our own history and over the history of the world's progress, that certain men have filled a certain mission, wrought an important work and then they have had to give place to others because the next thing that had to be done they were not fitted for doing. The tombstone that marks the end of one career is the starting-point for another that, profiting by the past, helps the world onward to a better future.

Questions and Answers.

I rejoice that an effort is at last being made to secure unity and harmony in the study of God's Word, devotionally, in the mid week prayer-meeting. The "Hour of Prayer" column in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is so comforting and helpful that I am glad to know that it is to remain as a permanent feature of the paper which is a blessing to and the pride of our brotherhood. If it is not too much trouble will you please state how many of our churches are now using the uniform series of prayer-meeting topics prepared by the committee appointed at Chattanooga? The Pew.

Bloomington.

We have no means of knowing how many churches have adopted the uniform series of topics except that there has been considerable demand, we understand, from this Company, for the Uniform Topic Cards. But no doubt many churches have adopted the series of topics that have not provided themelves with the topic cards. Besides, all our publishing companies supply these cards, and many more have doubtless been ordered than we know anything of. There is reason to believe that a large number of our best churches are falling into line in the use of these uniform topics, and we believe that the result of it will be to greatly stimulate the interest in our midweek prayer-meetings as well as to promote greater unity among the churches. Now that the plan has been sanctioned by the National Convention, it is only a question of time, we think, when the uniform topics will be as generally used in our prayer-meetings as the uniform lessons are in our Sunday-schools.

In John 3:13 Jesus says, "No man hath ascended up into heaven but the Son of Man which is in heaven;" in Kings 2:11, we read, "And Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven;" in Heb. 11:5 it is said, "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death." Will you please harmonize these apparent contradictions and oblige several brethren in our Sunday-school? T. C. Hambleton.

Jeffersonville, Ill.

We are compelled to understand that the term "heaven" is used in somewhat different senses in these passages. If we understand heaven as a definite locality with definite metes and bounds, it would be impossible to harmonize these passages, and we would be compelled to say that the writers of Kings and Hebrews were mistaken. But if we understand heaven to mean, in some of its uses, at least, moral condition, as in the words of Jesus above, there is no need for supposing a contradiction. It is not difficult to understand that Christ enjoyed an intimate relation with the Father to which no mere human being had attained at the time he spake. It is believed by many that Christ's death and resurrection affected profoundly the condition of the righteous dead in their relation to God, so that what was true at the time Christ uttered these words need not necessarily be true now. We are compelled to understand that both Enoch and Elijah were removed in an extraordinary way from earth by the hand of God who took them under his care. We are not, however, compelled to suppose that they immediately ascended into those heights of moral and spiritual grandeur and infinite blessedness from which Christ descended to the earth, when he laid aside the glory which he had with the Father before the world was, retaining, however, that spiritual attitude toward the Father which enabled him to say that he was in heaven, even while on earth.

1. In Questions and Answers, last week (Jan. 26), in attempting to reconcile the Fatherhood of God with the idea of eternal punishment, the editor says, "Fatherhood is not inconsistent with punishment when the punishment looks to the good of the child." But how can "eternal" punishment "look to the good" of one?

2. Again he says, "As to the duration of the punishment, it is the nature of the sin that determines that. The soul that persists in sinning must continue to suffer the consequences. The divine Father will always be found ready to receive the returning prodigal." Does this language refer to the future punishment of the sinner, after death? Is there, then, a "post-mortem gospel," offering the sinner an opportunity of repentance and pardon in the other world? But if it be said that this language was intended for the sinner in his present state, then I would ask, Is it true that the sinner receives his "just recompense of reward" for his sins in this life? C. J. K.

1. In the answer to which our querist refers we do not have in mind eternal punishment, but such chastisement as comes upon us here in consequence of our sins. The only eternal punishment that we can conceive of as in harmony with the character of God is that which is inevitably associated with the sin from which the sinner refuses to turn. When punishment ceases to be reformatory it is, at least, inevitable, for God compels no one to be righteous against his own will.

2. The language refers to the relation of the sinner toward God, here and hereafter, in this or in any other world. The editor's individual opinion is that a repentant sinner will always find a forgiving God, but it is also true, and it is one of the most fearful truths in the universe, that by persisting in sin the soul may reach a state of moral fixedness in which the desire or power for repentance is gone. This might be called an ante-mortem rather than a post-mortem gospel. It is a view of sin that needs more emphasis than it receives. This is not saying, however, that there is no gospel to be preached to men after they have passed from this world into the next. There are some questions we are willing to leave open, and trust in the wisdom and goodness of the Almighty. "The Lord of all the earth will do right." It is certain, however, that sin, often at least, does not receive due punishment, nor virtue adequate reward, in this world.

Will you define the "larger hope" attributed to Canon Farrar as to his view of the future state: Is it a tenet of Universalism? W. P. Keeler.

Chicago.

we have not read Canon Farrar for a great many years on this subject, but as we remember his position, it is that some light is shed on the awful problem of the destiny of the untold millions that go out of this world impenitent by such passages as 1 Peter 3:18-20; 4:6, and that a door of "lager hope" is open, namely, the hope that God will not cease his efforts to win men to repentance and to holiness of life with their passing from this world into the next. Universalism does not follow from this premise, unless the human will is ignored, as it is in the doctrine of predestination as held by the Calvinists. No man can affirm that those who, having never heard the gospel in this life, are permitted to hear it in the next, will all avail themselves of its offer of salvation. We know they do not all do it here. It is possible that some may refuse it there. Universalism is as arbitrary as Calvinism on the subject of human destiny. But the fearful thought is that even here, in this life, one may put himself in such moral antagonism to Christ as to cut off all hope of his future recovery. Men do not have to wait till death for sentence to be passed upon them. That line is often crossed before the death-line is reached, as the result of sinning against light and knowledge. Farrar, as we understand him, is not a Universalist, but he entertains the hope that many who pass from this world without the knowledge of Christ will come into possession of such knowledge afterwards and be saved. Whatever view men may hold in reference to this matter, the duty of immediate repentance should be urged with great insistence upon all men.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

INTRODUCTORY PERIOD.

III. Alexander Campbell and His Co-laborers—Concluded.

BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

But while the Campbells were so admirably qualified to fill the measure of what was wanted in the men who were to begin and lead forward the work providentially committed to them, there were yet other men and other talents, not possessed by them in the required measure, needed to effect its success. It has ever been so in all moral and religious movements. No one man, and no two men, meet all the demands of God's ministry in the execution of any important purpose of his among men. It was so with the prophets, and so with the apostles and the great reformers. God will always provide the men he needs.

WALTER SCOTT.

Walter Scott came early within the sphere of the influence of the reformation, then just in the first stage of its development. What kind of a man was he?

Walter Scott was born in Durufriesshire, Scotland, October 31st, 1796. He was remarkably well prepared for the career into which the hand of God led him. No one could see him without being impressed by his striking appearance; a large, well-developed head, betokening unusual intellectual power; bright, keen, searching eyes, revealing intelligence; an enthusiastic spirit, earnestness of character and kindliness of heart. His finely-formed Scotch nose denoted vigor of purpose. His large mouth was that of an orator. I have often heard him say, "The mouth has much to do in making an orator."

He received a fine classical education at the University of Edinburgh; was a man of a rich literary culture; his reading had been extensive and in the best literature. His gifts as a preacher were of a high order; his language was always the purest and choicest English, chaste, elegant, and at times he rose to the sublime.

The crown of all that was excellent in this remarkable man was his exalted religious and spiritual inner and outer life. An all-pervading devoutness of spirit marked all his thoughts, words and actions. An unaffected piety and a reverence for God and his Word gave grace to his character. He had been reared in the strict life of the Scotch Presbyterian Church and was intended for the ministry. The Bible had from his childhood been with him the chief object of devout study. I have never come in contact with a man more largely and deeply versed in the Holy Scriptures than Walter Scott. With his poetic, imaginative spirit the Hebrew poetry of the Old Testament had for him a special charm. He had early in life committed the finest of them to memory. His recitation of them—gifted elocutionist as he was — charmed his listeners. These psalms and other poetical passages of the Bible ran like "golden threads" through his sermons.

Like the Campbells, Scott was thoroughly, intensely evangelical; not a trace of "liberal" thought was ever discernible in his conception of the Bible or its doctrine. The divinity of Jesus Christ was ever the center of his theology; this he continually proclaimed.

This was the man destined in God's purpose to complete the ministry that was to give the first effective impulse to the cause of the "restoration" of the apostolic gospel, to use Scott's own favorite term.

WALTER SCOTT AS THE PIONEER EVANGELIST.

A. Campbell took Scott, then living at Steubenville, teaching and preaching, with him to the meeting of the Mahoning Association at New Lisbon, in August, 1827. When this body had gone over into the reformatory cause, it was decided that an evangelist should be sent forth among the churches it represented. At the motion of A. Campbell Walter Scott was unanimously appointed to this office. This was the beginning of his extraordinary career as a preacher.

Scott was the man needed just at this crisis to carry forward unto victory among the people the great cause of the inaugurated reform. As soon as he had come to a clear understanding of "the gospel of Christ," it set his whole soul on fire. He was filled with an all-consuming passion to preach it to men. It was to him the restored light of heaven that now shone forth in full radiance after ages of obscuration. His speech was like fire; his setting forth of the newly found truth was wondrously complete, exact and clear. The people saw the scriptural doctrine—such was the logical accuracy and symmetry of his arguments, so vivid was his presentation of it. It broke upon the people like a new revelation from heaven. The New Testament—the whole Bible—now became clearly intelligible to them.

And there was such a marvelous simplicity in the preaching of this man; all, of every order of intelligence, could understand him. His language was of the highest order of classic excellence, that solicited the intelligence and captivated the best minds. The spirit of a loving heart breathed through his discourses and banished opposition where this was possible. He transmitted his own enthusiastic, passionate joy at the newly discovered apostolic faith to the hearts of his hearers. Finally, he could awaken in the souls of men an intense sense of the need and the joy of salvation, of the forgiveness of sins, and the wonderful assurance of it the gospel gives, as few preachers among us have ever been able to do. His preaching carried the fire of heaven into the dormant churches of the Association; its effect was as if an earthquake had shaken them.

I did not hear Scott in these earliest days of his ministry; afterwards I knew him well for years. But I have traversed, not many years after his first appearance, as familiar haunts, all these fields of his great triumphs. I have lived among and conversed with the men and women who witnessed his wonderful power, hundreds of them his converts.

Walter Scott's victorious progress among the churches of the Mahoning Association, as their evangelist, was a moral phenomenon. This was precisely what was wanted to plant firmly among the people the cause of the reformation. For this important work Scott was needed as the man who complemented the Campbells; each one of these men had his own part to perform in the mighty enterprise that needed them all. Eastern Ohio, together with the neighboring regions of Pennsylvania and Western Virginia, has ever since been a stronghold of the reformation; and from it the movement has spread far and wide over our land, to the remotest limits of New England and to the shores of the Pacific.

It may also be added that some of the most valuable thoughts that have given form, clearness and force to our plea, and have become currrent among us, had their origin with Walter Scott.

DR. ROBERT RICHARDSON.

Dr. Richardson, the fourth and youngest in the group of "A. Campbell and his co-laborers," was brought up an Episcopalian in the city of Pittsburgh. His father was one of the first friends of Walter Scott when he came to that city from Scotland, and established himself there as a teacher. Robert became one of his students, and became greatly attached to this remarkable teacher; for Scott was not only a scholar of high order, but also an instructor whose large heart embraced with affection his students, especially those who, like young Richardson, were of superior mind. His intense devotion to the Bible led him to make this supreme classic the object of daily instruction in his school. The Greek New Testament was the favorite classbook in the Greek classics. Many ingenuous young men were thus led by "the beloved teacher" to Christ.

When Scott was brought to see the religion of the New Testament in its truth and simplicity his ardent spirit burned to communicate the glad tidings to all around him. Young Richardson was one of those among his students who were won by him to the newly found truth.

Walter Scott was on the Western Reserve, Ohio, on his grand campaign of preaching "the ancient gospel," when young Dr. Richardson came to him, after traveling for this purpose 120 miles, to tell him that after diligent study he had found the light, and had now come to be baptized by him. Scott's joy can be imagined when he found that this favorite "son" of his—for so he called his students—had been "brought to the knowledge of the truth." This young man, then a practicing physician near Pittsburg, from that hour to the end of a long life gave himself with all the ardor of his soul to the cause he had espoused.

Robert Richardson was endowed with much more than ordinary intellectual gifts; and these he cultivated with great industry from early youth to his mature years. He was always in the truest sense of the word a man of intellectual and literary habits. He had reached good attainments in the classical tongues and was well versed in French. His calling and mental inclinations led him to the study of the natural sciences; he was professor of chemistry and kindred sciences in Bethany College for nineteen years. Nature was a field he explored with passionate delight. He had a special predilection for the higher walks of literature; I question whether any man among us ever reached higher excellency in literary taste and culture than Dr. Richardson; his writings testifiy to this.

But the chief devotion of this remarkable man's mind and heart was given to the Word of God; with unwearied diligence he gave himself to the study of the Bible as one who seeks after "the goodly pearls" of the most precious light and truth. The powerful impulse to this he received, like so many others, from his espousing the cause of New Testament Christianity. The great question with these reformers was, What does the Bible teach? And the entire field of investigation and discussion lay within the limits of the Holy Scriptures. Of Dr. Richardson, however, it must be said that he did not confine his study of the Bible, as so many have done, to the special subjects of controversy only; that is always a very defective use of the Holy Scripture; indeed, a most perverted and perverting abuse of it. He sought to explore all its treasures of wisdom and knowledge that "as a man of God he might be perfected, thoroughly furnished to every good work."

As an expounder of the Scripture Dr. Richardson was very highly esteemed. His knowledge of the Word of God was wide, thorough and critical. From no one could the inquiring student secure more prompt attention to any questions relative to the Bible or more satisfactory answers.

With reference to the great cause of our reformation it can be said of Dr. Richardson that no one among its earlier advocates had a fuller, clearer and more critically defined conception of its grounds and aims, and of the principles of its plea than he; and no one could set these forth more accurately and intelligibly to the understanding of men. His admirable tract on the Principles of the Reformation, and his Memoirs of A. Campbell are witnesses to this fact. Few men had made the entire subject, on all sides of it, the object of more thorough study than he.

Moreover—and this I can say with the confidence of intimate, certain knowledge—no one of "the glorious company of witnesses," whose names gloryfy this cause in the heroic days of its history, remained truer to its high purposes, its character, its worth and its sure hopes of triumphant success, to the last days of his life, than the sage of Bethphage. It was a delight to hear him discourse on "The Great Reformation" in his latest years. This eminent teacher of Israel understood this cause better and esteemed it higher than not a few young men whose scanty knowledge and experience alone justify their slight appreciation of the noblest religious reform in these latest centuries.

What I have said of the Campbells and of Walter Scott is true also of Dr. Richardson: he was thorougly evangelical in his conceptions of the Bible and of Christian doctrine; no one could be more so, as his writings testify. He stood firm as a rock against all forms of rationalistic and Unitarian tendencies. Thank God for this! One striking quality of his character was his firmness; he never yielded to what he regarded wrong.

For years he practiced medicine; but during all this time he was active as preacher and writer in advancing the cause of the reformation. In 1835 A. Campbell brought him to Bethany as his colaborer in the Millennial Harbingber. The Christian Baptist was the pioneer; the Millennial Harbinger covers the much longer, more important formative stage, the period of development, great conquest, organization and permanent life. These were the years of the activity of Dr. Richardson alongside of A. Campbell, a co-operation which continued for two decades. The Harbinger is full of his writtings. During the frequent absence of the chief editor from home, "his righthand," the Doctor, of Bethphage, which overlooks Bethany, was at the helm of this powerful advocate of the reformation. The influence of Dr. Richardson on the history of our cause was most salutary, broad, strong and enduring. Like Scott he added many important directive thoughts to our plea which threw new light upon it, and have become the heritage of our ministry.

Such were the distinguishing characteristics, thus briefly sketched, of these four men, who above all others were the providential instruments in inaugurating and in giving character, direction and permanent life to our reformatory movement, which has had such wonderful expansion in this great land. What lasting impress did they leave upon it? It is of high interest to us, and to others, well to understand this:

THE PERMANENT INFLUENCE OF A. CAMPBELL AND HIS COLABORERS, THOMAS CAMPBELL, WALTER SCOTT AND DR. R. RICHARDSON, UPON OUR REFORMATION.

1. The fact that they were men of superior mental endowment; that they were men of liberal education and large literary culture—well versed in the fields of the best knowledge that liberalizes the mind and the heart, gave to their conceptions of a religious reform wisdom, clearness, breadth, depth, generosity, liberality, dignity and power. It is an unquestionable historical fact that reforms—any moral and religious movement—conceived and conducted by inferior, ignorant, illiterate men, however well intended, are always characterized in conception and execution by crudeness, shallowness, narrowness and weakness.

2. Their supreme reverence for the Bible, their profound study and knowledge of it, made them lay the foundations of their reform deep in the spirit and letter of the Word of God.

3. Their enlightened, thoroughly evangelical conceptions of the doctrine of Christ, in all its fundamental elements, led them to give this character, of priceless value, also to the faith, the doctrine and preaching of the reformation. May these ever so remain!

4. The exaltation given by these men to faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and obedience to God, as the one chief moment of Christian faith and duty, subjugating to it all human opinions; and their making the Holy Scripture the only rule of belief, faith, practice and life, to the rejection of human creeds, is an inheritance they have left us that has been deeply implanted into the very heart and life of this reformation, and has given to it such extraordinary power among the people.

5. Finally—and let me call special attention to this—the sincere piety that adorned and glorified the lives of these men, and so powerfully pervaded their teaching and preaching, must be preserved as a sacred legacy to us and our cause. For nothing is more utterly false than that our fathers were mainly concerned to lead men to correct views and to external obedience. The reverse of this is true. They were eminently pious men themselves, and in all their teaching strove to call men to godliness and holiness of life.

All these blessed influences that have come to our cause from these men of God; that have sanctified it and given it power and the favor from on high; have been perpetuated by the host of men of like mind, of like faith and heart who labored with them and after them. Herein lies the secret of our confident hope that our work shall endure with a permanent God-blessed life, to fulfill its divine appointed mission on the earth.

Thomas Campbell, Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott and R. Richardson—what illustrious names! How lofty they rise before us in the history of our past, of the heroic days of the mighty battle for the faith, the doctrine and life of the Primitive Church! How worthy their lives of our reverence and love, and of our study and imitation!

CAN THE BARRIER WHICH INFANT BAPTISM PRESENTS TO CHRISTIAN UNION BE SURMOUNTED?

BY REV. JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

The movement towards union which characterizes the Christianity of the present day—and which is most evidently born of the Spirit—will in all probability find its initial triumph in the union of the various family groups which exist within the circle of a sadly divided Protestantism. The different members of the Presbyterian family for example—the Presbyterian Churches North and South, the Reformed Presbyterians, the United Presbyterians, the Cumberland Presbyterians and all other varieties of Presbyterians—ought to lose no time in federating their forces and presenting to the hosts of wickedness a united front. And what is to hinder all the numerous branches of the Methodist family from drawing together and combining into one strong and solid body: thus economizing resources which are now wickedly wasted and hastening on the evangelization of the world?

In the group of self-governing and independent churches, comprising the Baptist, Disciple and Congregational denominations, there is so much in common that it is difficult to conceive how it is that they have not long before this mingled into one, like kindred drops. With regard to ecclesiastical polity they stand upon the same ground. They believe in the right of private judgment, in the independence of the local church and in the Headship of Jesus Christ. The banner which floats above them all alike is, "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." They all stand upon the same ground with regard to the substance of doctrine; putting aside all isms and holding to the substrate of evangelical faith which underlies all systems of theology. They agree likewise in discarding all man-made creeds as final and authoritative expressions of truth and accept the Word of God as the only adequate revelation to man of the mind of God and as the only infallible rule of faith and practice. The Baptist and Disciple Churches have no written creed whatever. There are, however, certain things most surely believed among them which are just as clearly defined as if they had been written down in creedal form. The Congregationalists have no denominational creed which is binding upon the churches. They have, however, statements of belief, which are accepted "for substance of doctrine." Each local church formulates its own doctrinal declaration which it changes and modifies as circumstances may demand. With Congregationalists all creeds are looked upon as testimonies rather than as tests. Congregationalists are no less warm than the Baptists and Disciples in the repudiation of creeds as snares to the conscience and as cramps upon the intellect. They are to them mere watermarks of religious thought, the forms in which the living faith of the present is expressed, and not stereotyped symbols by which the church is anchored to the dead past.

When the representatives of these denominations come together and stand shoulder to shoulder in Christian work, they are suprised to find that the points of agreement between them are so many and large, and the points of difference so few and small, and they are led to ask, Why should we not dwell together in one fellowship and thus fulfill our common obligation of promoting that visible oneness for which the Master prayed? But when the question of union is seriously faced a barrier stands in the way. That barrier is infant baptism. Let it be noted, however, that Congregationalists do not hold to infant baptism as something mandatory and obligatory, but as something that may be practiced. As a matter of fact many Congregational Churches do not practice it at all. They simply do not forbid it. And in no instance do they regard the rite as possessing sacramentarian value. The Baptists and Disciples, while agreeing upon immersion as the mode of baptism, differ somewhat as to the significance of the baptismal act. The Congregationalists regard every form of baptism as valid and leave the selection of the mode to the conviction of the individual. They differ also from the Baptists and Disciples as to the subjects of baptism, holding to the doctrine of infant baptism. And here we touch the most stubborn obstacle to union.

Now the fact may as well be faced that while a larger exercise of personal liberty of thought in interpreting the spiritual significance of baptism may bridge the narrow stream that divides the Baptists from the Disciples, infant baptism is an unbridgable gulf, separating forever the Congregationalists from the Baptists and Disciples. Whatever the Baptists and Disciples may yield up in the interests of a larger fellowship they will never yield up their opposition to the baptism of unconscious babes. To do that would in their judgment be to run counter to the express declaration of Christ, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." With them it is a fundamental position that between faith and baptism there is an indissoluble connection.

The problem, then, which demands the frankest possible discussion is, Can a way be found for the removal of this barrier to union? If Christian union is a thing to be striven after—and who that believes the farewell prayer of Jesus must ultimately be fulfilled dares doubt it?—there must be some way for the removal of everything that retards its realization. To the working out of tue divine will in bringing the separated flock of Christ into a state of organic oneness, making them one as Christ and the Father are one, there can be no insuperable obstable. Inspired by this conviction and believing that the time has come when the olive branch of peace ought to be sent out from the Pedobaptist camp, the writer has ventured to suggest a possible and practical plan for the removal of this barrier to union. That plan consists in the substitution of infant consecration for infant baptism. Many who feel rather shaky about the Scripture warrant for infant baptism refuse to give it up because it answers to that which is deepest in their natures. They will give it up only when something else and something better is substituted for it. Sentiment is often stronger than logic. This stubborn fact Baptists and Disciples often strangely overlook when opposing what to them is a nonscriptural practice. They do not always stop to consider that the practice of infant baptism is based upon the feeling instinctive in the parental heart that the child who has come fresh from the hands of God ought to be consecrated to him. The heart of the parent cries out for some recognition of God in connection with the coming of the child, some recognition of God's claims in the child and some recognition of the need of God's help in the training of the child. This is the reason why the practice of infant baptism lives when there is at best only an inferrential support for it in Scripture and no direct and explicit support whatsoever. And it will live unless the want which it meets is supplied in some other way.

On the other hand, are not the churches that repudiate infant baptism losing a great deal by not giving in some other way pronounced expression to their faith in the relation of the child to Christ and his kingdom? Many of the most spiritual members of these churches feel the imperative need of some specific act of infant consecration. They secretly wonder why the rite of circumcision which under the law symbolized the relationship of the child to God should have nothing to take its place under the gospel. They see that practically the child is bereft of recognition by the church and is left to grow up under a painful sense of disinheritance until by his own act he seeks a place in the fold from the protection of which he has been excluded. Nothing surely could be further from Christ's mind than such a condition of isolation for the child.

If we except Judaism, no religion outside of Christianity had in it a place for the child. In Judaism we find the first traces of a new conception of childhood. Infanticide was prohibited. Children were looked upon as a heritage from the Lord; the man who had his quiver full of them was accounted happy. But it was left to Christianity to discover the child, to appraise him at his true worth, to put him in his rightful place as a member of the kingdom of God. No practical change introduced by Christ struck deeper or was more far-reaching in its results than the changed view of childhood which he gave to the world. From it has come a radical change in the treatment of children.

Think of the condition of the child before the advent of Christ. He was treated as a thing, not as a person; as a chattel, not as an immortal being. In Rome when a child was born it was brought to the father that he might accept or reject it. If weak or deformed, or if a girl, it was often rejected and taken away and exposed to wild beasts. Any one might take possession of it and make it a slave, or worse. The father had absolute control over his child, he could imprison him, scourge him or sell him into slavery. The power of life and death was in his hands. Plutarch tells that he has seen children whipped to death at the foot of the altar of Diana. Yet, in spite of prevailing customs in Greece and Rome, many beautiful instances existed of parental love and sacrifice. False religion could not entirely obliterate natural instinct. As the fruits of Christianity began to appear a gradual change in the feeling of parents towards their children took place. The hearts of the fathers were turned to the children. The shield of protection was thrown over the weakness of infancy; asylums were provided for orphans and outcasts. From the time that Jesus took the little ones in his arms and blessed them they were forever consecrated to him in the eyes of his followers.

On the need for greater pulpit power to keep alive the church and to arouse sinners, the St. Louis Christian Advocate is not amiss in the following urgent plea:

To be a fine pastor is always desirable, and to know every individual in a great congregation so as to be at one, even with the childhood and youth, is charming. And to be a thorough organizer, a finished captain of the Lord's hosts, holding all the vast and complicated machinery of a great church fully in hand so as to bring into play all its powers and resources, is to play a splendid part in the kingdom of our Lord; but if one is called to be a preacher, his work is infinitely grander and his functions more divine. And to be a mouthpiece of God, to be "sent" of God, even though only the "voice of one crying in the wilderness," is greater in its dignity and possibility than any other office; so a fai ure, or even a partial failure, is altogether deplorable if success is possible. If the complicated machinery of the "institutional" church, toward which we now seem to be drifting, shall become an absolute necessity to the world's redemption, let us set apart suitable men from the secular arm of the church for the management of its perplexing details, but let our Moses abide in the mount with God so that he may come to us, if even at long intervals, yet with the light of heaven on his face and the Spirit of the Highest in heart and mind. Let us have now and then a message from God, a sermon, born of the midnight and redolent of soul-travail; a sermon bringing to us now the purer air from the Mount of Transfiguration, and again, the dank dew and heavy odors from the garden of sorrows. Let us have a sermon like this, and then (if we are wise) will we forget every possible deficiency otherwise existing in our preacher and rejoice that he magnifies this single function until it is manifest that he is indeed called of God.

The Heavenward Way.

A popular book addressed to young Christians, containing incentives and suggestions for spiritual growth, leading the young in the "Way of Life." 100 pages. Bound in cloth, 75 cents; morocco, $1.25.

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis.

Our Budget.

—Evangelistic services everywhere.

—Let the work be intensive as well as extensive.

—Strengthen the stakes while lengthening the cords.

—Let there be a revival of missionary zeal—the true test of a converted membership.

—A protracted meeting that does not increase the missionary offerings is lacking in some very vital particulars.

—Nothing should be allowed to interfere with the largest and most universal offering for Foreign Missions in our history on the first Lord's day in March.

—Most of the sermons we have heard of late bristle with missionary points and are electric with missionary zeal. Is not this prophetic of the expansion both in spiritual life and missionary activity?

—Let it not be forgotten that all permanent advance in our work must be based on solid teaching. The people must be instructed before they can be intelligently zealous.

—We have so many good things accumulating on our hands for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that it is a real embarrasment to know how to furnish them all to our readers. Our contributors can all help by studying the art of brevity.

—We print the third article in our historical series this week, and others will follow in regular order. These articles are awakening a great deal of interest already, and inquiries are coming in as to whether it is our purpose to publish it in book form. It is our plan so to do, but this will depend upon the demand there is for it.

—The author of the interview with Archbishop Purcell on Alexander Campbell and his work has revised and somewhat elaborated the article with a view to its publication in tract form if so desired. One brother has asked for 100 copies. Are there others who could use the tract to advantage. We are ready to publish it if it is demanded.

—The poem by Jas. A. Garfield, recently published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, was accompanied by a note to the effect that it was an "unpublished poem." This was a mistake. A note from Mrs. C. Fuller, of Des Moines, says that the poem was first published in the first number of the third volume of Williams' Quarterly, issued August, 1855. Mr. Garfield was chief editor of the Quarterly that year, commencing with that number. The poem was republished in Bro. Corydon Fuller's "Reminiscences of Garfield." Its publication in Bro. Fuller's Reminiscences was known to the editor, but the note in connection with the poem escaped our attention until it was in print.

—It is said that there will be a restaurant at the Paris World's Fair in 1900 at which no alcoholic drinks will be dispensed. The name of this restaurant is to be "Kiosques de Temperance." Perhaps you had better stick this paragraph in your vestpocket for future reference.

—It is better to preach a man away from the church with some influence of the Holy Spirit in his heart, than to preach a man into the church without this essential characteristic of the true disciple of Christ.

—We print a second installment, this week, from the friends of Christian Endeavor, concerning the "crisis" in this movement among us. And still there are several others demanding to be heard. The heartiness and unanimity of these expressions cannot fail to be very gratifying to Bro. Tyler, and to all among us who realize the value of this great work among our young people. We comment on this matter more at length in an editorial elsewhere.

—While street car companies seem to have things largely their own way in the securing of franchises from city aldermen, they are not so potent in their conflict with the progressive spirit of the age. When confronted with a new invention they are generally the party that surrenders, regardless of expenses or losses. In many cities they are now wrestling with the overhead trolley system, but sooner or later they will have to yield to the pressure and put their moter wires underground. Then probably by the time their plants are generally so installed some new motor may be projected and their entire systems have to be changed again at great cost as from animal to cable, cable to trolley and from trolley to the conduit system, so that their earnings, after all, are not all profits.

—In this number we begin the publication of the address delivered at the Macatawa Park Assembly last summer, by J. M. Campbell, on the question, "Can the Barrier to Christian Union Which Infant Baptism Presents be Surmounted?" It is one of six addresses on the general subject of Christian Union—three of them by Congregational ministers and the other three by our own ministers—delivered during that assembly. This one deals with the most difficult problem, and a desire was expressed at the time, by many who heard it, that it be printed. We regret very much that our space compels us to break it up into three parts, but we hope our readers will reserve their judgment until they read the whole address. Whatever else one may think about it, he will see in it an honest effort to remove a real obstacle in the way of a closer unity among the followers of Christ, and every such effort should be welcomed by those who believe in and are praying for such oneness. Bro. Campbell is known to many of our readers as the author of "After Pentecost—What?" "Unto the Uttermost," etc.

—Robert Graham, whose picture we present to our readers this week, was born in Liverpool, England, Aug. 14, 1822. He was brought up in the communion of the Established Church, but at the age of 17 was baptized by Elder Samuel Church, then pastor of the Christian Church in Allegheny City. He entered Bethany College in 1843 and supported himself by preaching and graduated in 1847. It was soon after his graduation that he cooperated with John T. Johnson in a great meeting at Fayetteville, Ark., which resulted in the establishment of a church at that place, which has prospered until the present time. He served as pastor of this church for some time, and while in Fayetteville established the Arkansas College, which flourished until the war broke out in 1861. He served as pastor of the church in Cincinnati, Santa Rosa, Cal., and in San Francisco. In 1866 he was elected professor of the College of Arts and professor of the School of English Language and Literature in Kentucky University, a position he held for many years. Later he was president of the Bible College of Kentucky University, but at present, we believe, has retired from active service. Prof. Graham is distinguished for his graceful oratory, his fine intellectual balance, his purity of life and character and his single hearted devotion to the interests of the kingdom of God. Widely known and loved, he is enjoying the fruits of a ripe old age. He is yet capable of speaking with great power, as those know who heard him in his splendid generalization at the communion service at the Chattanooga Convention. May the benediction of his presence linger yet with us many years.

—In 1885, when there were not more than 300 Christian Endeavor Societies in all the world, it was thought necessary to raise funds to employ a general secretary to look after the interests of the movement. The funds necessary for supporting the secretary were raised by an appeal to the Christian Endeavor Societies and friends. Appeals were made at the annual conventions for these pledges until the profits in the publishing business of the United Society were sufficient to support the work. We have now 4,633 societies. It ought not to be a question and is not a question in the minds of those who understand the situation, as to whether we need a secretary to give his whole time to this business. Nor should it be a question as to whether the societies and friends of the movement would be willing to support such a secretary. The correspondence to be found elsewhere is evidence that there is no difficulty in this direction.

—At the annual meeting of the church at Springfield, Ill., the pastor, J. E. Lynn, recommended that to mark the year '99, Sangamon County ought to adopt a missionary and agree to be responsible for his support, and that the Springfield Church ought to establish a mission point at some location suitable for a second church. This is a good indication of a wise pastor and a live church.

—On the 23rd of January our preachers in this city were treated to an address of unusual interest by Miss Charlotte Perkins Stetson on "The Social Organism." Miss Stetson's position is that men and women are fractional parts of a greater life or organism and partake of sins or blessings under an influence for which they are not individually responsible; that the faith of Christian men and women falters at the attempt to be a Christian in practical life under the counter influences of this greater organism; that the time has come when efforts must be made to save men collectively as well as by individual processes, etc. Her lecture shows that she has been a hard student of social ethics and has much matured thought to offer on the subject. Some of her illustrations were unique and strikingly apt. She speaks with earnestness, fluency and yet with due care in the selection of her terms. It would do any of our preachers good to hear her on this subject whenever opportunity afforded. Miss Stetson is a granddaughter of Henry Ward Beecher.

—The Way is the significant title of an eight-page, wide-awake religious journal from Denver, Col., edited by Barton O. Aylesworth, Mrs. Belle Von Doren Harbert being associate editor. Volume I., No. 2, is before us, and it possesses high literary merit and is handsomely printed on good paper. It is the state organ of the Colorado Churches of Christ, published monthly at $1.00 per year. We congratulate the Colorado friends on the advent of such an attractive organ and trust they will give it hearty and liberal support. Denver is the place for a Colorado paper, Aylesworth is the man to edit it—no doubt Mrs. Harbert is the woman to assist. The Way is a fine name and we wish it success.

—Last week the Christian Oracle casually pointed out a few of the imperfections of femimine nature and then casually admits its inability to accont for the phenomena. Now it strikes us that any casual observer ought to see that women do as they do because they are as they are; and that they are as they are because of what they have been—under masculine dominance. Wait until their independence makes them dependent upon themselves rather than the masculine arm and brain, and then they will become more practical conversationalists, better grammarians and keener observers—even of vacant seats in an uncroweded street car.

—The wife of E. O. Sharpe, pastor of the church at LeRoy, Ill., departed this life on the 25th of January. We tender to Bro. Sharpe our sincere sympathy in his great loss. On the death notice sent us are the following lines, no doubt from the heart and pen of the stricken husband:

"She loved her Lord and to him brought
The gift she would not, could not, lose;
The box is broken, now but fraught
With memories of its precious use."

—W. H. Willyard, pastor of the Christian Church at Murphysboro, Ill., at the request of the elders of the church at Elkville, has written us warning the churches against one R. Edward Stanley or, as it appeared in the yearbook of 1897, R. L. Stanley, who has been found guilty of drunkenness and dishonesty repeatedly at different places where he has preached. He was arrested and lodged in jail at once, and from all accounts ought not to be released. Bro. Willyard sends a clipping from a paper at Milton, Ky., saying that he has been on a "spree" there. He claims to have preached for the Baptists about four years, but he is, from all accounts, wholly unworthy of membership in any church, much less of the pulpit.

—The serious intimation of a writer in Lippincott's Magazine for February, that poetry is likely to disappear as a method of thought, will be very disquieting news to a large number of men and women who seem to imagine that they were raised up of God to write poetry. On the other hand it will be likely to cause many editors to regret that they could not have postponed their birth to that age!

—An old slave used to say he noticed that if he lived through March, he always lived through the rest of the year. If the Foreign Society gets through March in good shape, it has little trouble in securing the necessary funds for the support of all its work. From October to March not more than one-fourth as much money is received as is needed. During those months the society is always in debt. It is hoped that the churches in the coming March will do their full duty to supply the funds requisite to support the workers in the field to increase their number.

—Two things are to be sought for this year. One is to get a larger number of churches to contribute for Foreign Missions, and the other is to secure a larger number of contributors among the churches that do contribute. Not more than one-third of the churches respond to the appeal of the society. Not more than one-fourth of the membership have any part in the support of this enterprise. This year special efforts should be made to greatly increase the number of codtributors. To this end all the preachers in the land should work.

—This is to be a great year in the history of our people. It is the Jubilee Year of our organized missionary work. It is believed that the churches will do better this year than ever before. As there are more missionaries in the field than there were this time last year, and as a number are under appointment, the churches must do more or the work will suffer. The time has come to take a long stride in advance. The Foreign Society proposes to raise $150,000 this year for its own work. This is a very modest sum to ask from over a million people.

—We have received an account of the death of C. E. Garst, at Tokio, Japan, Dec. 26th, 1898, which will appear in our next issue Bro. Garst was one of our faithful and beloved missionaries in the foreign field and has been greatly lamented by those who knew him, especially in the Foreign Mission field.

—After examining a copy of the Central Christian Advocate, a lady of this city returned it to her pastor with the statement that it did not meet her needs. On being pressed for a fuller explanation of her objection she said: "I am subject to spells of insomnia, and it has been my habit in recent months to read myself asleep. I have tried the experiment on the Central and it doesn't work. I will have to try some other paper." This reply seems to have greatly disconcerted the editor of the Advocate, as he hints that in case a paper among his exchanges that he can recommend to the lady cannot be found a department of somnolency may be opened up in the Advocate. Now we don't know just what material the editor of the Advocate contemplated for such a department in case he failed to find a suitable exchange for the lady, but our suggestion is that he try some of the poems common to an editor's waste-basket or some of the sermons common to church sleepers. Should these fail to adapt the Advocate to the aforesaid lady's needs, and those of her ward, we fear the experiment will prove a failure.

—The Foreign Christian Missionary Society was organized in Louisville, Ky., Oct. 19th, 1875.

—The whole amount of money received since the organization of the society is $1,139,860.31.

—The receipts of the society last year amounted to $130,925.70, a gain of $24,703.60.

—Last year the number of contributing churches was 2,907, a gain of 321 over the previous year.

—The fields cultivated by the Foreign Society are India, China, Japan, Turkey, Scandinavia, England, Africa and Cuba.

—The whole number of missionaries now employed is 204. The number of American and English missionaries is 96, the number of native evangelists and teachers is 108. There is urgent need for chapels at Sivas, Tokat and Bardezag, Turkey. A strong man is needed to take the place left vacant by the death A. F. H. Saw in China.

—The society has recently purchased propty at Bolengi, Africa, that is valued at $10,000. This property was purchased at $2,500. It was formerly owned by the American Baptists. They found it necessary to retrench to avoid continued debt and the property was transferred to us. This will be the station of E. E. Faris, Royal J. Dye and wife.

—Several homes are needed for the missionaries. David Rioch and wife need a home in India; at least one is needed in Japan, and A. L. Chapman and wife need a home in Constantinople.

—The following paragraph in a letter addressed to Bro. J. Z. Tyler is the highest possible encomium upon the value of the Bethany Reading Courses. If there are any of our Endeavor Societies that have not yet introduced these Reading Courses they should communicate with J. Z. Tyler, Cleveland, O., secure the books and organize a reading circle at once:

Last Sunday I was in Washington. One of the young men in the Vermont Ave. Church told me that he learned more from the Bethany Reading Course in one year than he had learned in five years previous to that time. Mr. Bagby told me that the most influential young people in his church are the people that are taking this course. I trust you may have health and strength requisite to prosecute this work until every church and every Endeavorer is reached. A. McLEAN, Cor. Sec.

—The producers, manufacturers and merchants of the United States will on Feb. 1, for the first time, have equal access with other parts of the world to the markets of Puerto Rico. Under Spanish rule and the tariffs framed by Spanish ingenuity a very large proportion of the imports into the island almost necessarily came from Spain, the duties on goods from that country being but a small fraction of those on goods from other parts of the world. The new tariff which goes into effect Feb. 1st places all countries on precisely the same footing with reference to their goods imported into Puerto Rico and thus for the first time the people of that island will have an opportunity of exercising their judgment and wishes free from control as to where they shall purchase and what they shall purchase.

—The Michigan Evangelist, Jan. 15, contains a short symposium on the propriety of Disciples of Christ living in places where we have no church uniting with other churches. The articles rightly insist that our people everywhere should maintain their unique position, and yet there are some reasons why a few Disciples of Christ in a given place who are unable to maintain an organic existence should work and worship with existing evangelical bodies in that place, at least until such a time as they can maintain a worship more in accord with primitive Christianity. Their own religious natures and the influence of their example upon the world may demand such a course. But as soon as possible they should raise the more glorious banner of Christ and Christ alone for the salvation of men. Properly enlightened Disciples of Christ cannot surrender their freedom in Christ for the bondage of creeds. It would be a backward step; but they can and should be an example unto the world of Christian forbearance and fellowship.

A PREACHER'S REPORT

Interesting Statement by Elder Joel H. Austin of Goshen, Ind.

"I was a victim of catarrh and had almost constant pain in my head. The trouble was gradually working down on my lungs. I was weak and irresolute. My wife had the grip and Hood's Sarsaparilla cured her. After this I had the same disease and resorted to Hood's. In a short time the aches and pains were relieved and I also saw the medicine was helping my catarrh. In six weeks I ceased to have any further trouble with it and I am now a well man. The pains and bloating I had in my limbs are gone and I am relieved of a heart trouble. I am thankful for a medicine so intelligently compounded and so admirably adapted to the needs of the system." —Prof. Oscar T. Morgan, of Drake University, writes:

In harmony with the suggestions which you have recently made in regard to Bro. Tyler's work for the C. E., and the holding of Bible Institutes in connection with the Bethany Reading Course, I have just sent an article to the Christian Standard, suggesting a plan for the accomplishment of both these ends. The plan in brief is that Bro. Tyler constitute himself a lecture bureau and a lecturer on the three lines of work and organize a corps of lecturers in the different states. The fees to the bureau and for his own lectures ought to support the work. The assurance of this, on which Bro. Tyler could proceed to make arrangements, would be for a sufficient number of pastors to agree to arrange for an Institute.

The above is a good suggestion apart from its bearing on the financial problem, and it might at least prove a useful auxiliary to any other plan for raising funds for the Endeavor work. But the chief value of the plan of sending out lecturers to hold Bible Institutes is in the stimulus it will give to Bible study in general and to the Bethany C. E. Courses in particular. We sincerely hope this method may be tested at once, and as we approve the idea of "beginning at Jerusalem," we propose that Bro. Tyler plan for such an institute in St. Louis.

—The Christian Endeavor World is now domiciled in Termont Temple, in the very heart of Boston, instead of 646 Washington St. The move was made last week and made without the omission of a number or the delay of its appearance. This is characteristic of the Christian Endeavor World. It is business from the word go.

—According to the report of the Irish Emigrant Society, 18,689 Irish immigrants landed at New York during 1898, of whom 101 were returned because for various reasons unable to maintain themselves in this country. At the labor bureau employment was found for 10,326 immigrants. In other words, 10,326 immigrants landed on our shores last year who had no other means of support than their ability to labor and were thus crowded into the places yet sorely needed by more than 10,326 American laborers at least as intelligent and able-bodied as these immigrants. Such kindness to strangers is somewhat remarkable.

—On the 16th of January, "Father Chiniquy," long and widely known for his lectures against the doctrine and polity of the Roman Catholic Church, died at his home in Montreal, Canada, at the advanced age of almost ninety years. Father Chiniquy was educated for a Catholic, and located at Kankakee, Ill., but in 1857 he and his whole congregation left the Roman Catholic Church and has since been instrumental in turning thousands of people from Romanism to evangelical Protestantism. He has lectured in all parts of the United States, in Canada, England and in Australia on the errors of Romanism, and continued his ministry on up to the close of his life, the last ten years of which was spent in Montreal.

—The Foreign Society has more than doubled its receipts in the past five years and it has been encouraged to enlarge its work in every direction. There must be an increase in the receipts this year or we will close the year with a debt. It behooves the churches and every friend of this work to see that the March offering far surpasses that of any previous year.

—A copy of a unique wall chart published by Martin W. Knapp, editor of the Revivalist, Cincinnati, O., has been received at this office. It gives a bird's-eye view of the upward and the downward ways of man and their causes. It is a lithograph picture in seven colors, 22x28 and tinned for hanging.

—On the 26th of January E. W. Brickert, of Red Oak, Iowa, and Zaidee Shipley, his singer, were united in marriage at Griswold, Iowa, by E. E. Kneedy, pastor of the church at Griswold. E. W. Brickert and his singer were holding a meeting at Griswold, and the marriage took place at the close of services on the date given, at the residence of Dr. Taylor.

PERSONAL MENTION.

W. E. Harlow, of Parsons, Kan., began a meeting at Charles City, Iowa, last Sunday.

Ivan W. Agee, of Chapin, Ill., will begin his meeting with the church at Literberry, Feb. 5th.

E. P. Grow has taken to the field as general evangelist and changes his residence from Grayson, Ky., to Goshen, Ind.

S. M. Martin, of California, is assisting Sumner T. Martin, of Mason City, Iowa, in a protracted meeting.

T. A. Abbott dedicated the church at Blairstown, Mo., last Sunday. He says they have a splendid church building.

G A. Hendrickson has been retained for another year—the second—by the church at Keosauqua, Ia.

W. K Azbill is running a hotel in Honolulu for the purpose of supporting a Japanese mission which he is conducting in that city. The mission is reported a success.

E. F. Mahan has accepted a call for another year at Salem, Ind., with a four months' leave of absence, which he is now spending at Yale University in the Divinity School. The work at Salem is said to be in splendid condition.

Melanchthon Moore has gone from Brookfield, Mo., to Reserve, Kan., where he has become the successor to J. L. Stine in the pulpit of that church.

R. D. McCance has turned the work at South Elroy, South Dakota, over to P. S. Rhoder, of Bradley, and is now engaged in a meeting at Adkins He expects to leave S. D. soon for a more southern field.

J. W. Robbins, late of Mexico, Mo., recently preached two sermons at Jacksonville, Ill., "eloquent and helpful." He can be secured for a meeting at once.

F. G. Roberts, Cor. Sec. I. T., reports 120 additions, 34 by baptism, in his work last year. Money collected from the field, $260. Places visited, 25.

J. Z. Tyler's meeting at Wellsville, N. Y., we learn, is proceeding encouragingly. There had been seven confessions at the five services held when we last heard from the meeting.

W. H. Kern, pastor of the Fourth Christian Church, this city, who had resigned to take effect April 1st, has reconsidered his resignation and will remain. Owing to the furnace in their church building being out of order last Sunday the congregation met in Bro. Kern's house for its services and had two confessions during the day.

At a union meeting of the Endeavor Societies of the Churches of Christ in St. Louis at the West End Christian Church, the pastor of that church, O. A. Bartholomew, was surprised by the presentation to him of a liberal money offering as a token of the appreciation of his personal sacrifices for the cause of Christ in this city, by a few of his friends in the various congregations.

N. K. Griggs' lecture on "National Character and National Songs," delivered at Cotner University, Jan. 20th, is spoken of in the highest terms of praise. It must have been a rare literary treat from the report we have heard of it.

The Chuch of Christ at New Philadelphia, Ohio, will dedicate their commodious new church building on Lord's day, Feb. 5. E. V. Zollars, president of Hiram College, will preach the dedicatory sermon. The brethren at New Philadelphia have erected what is said to be one of the most substantial Christian Church buildings in that part of the state.

J. M. Elam, pastor of the church at Pleasant Grove, Minn., and Grace Lauretta Cutshall, of Rochester, Minn., are announced for marriage at the Christian Church in Rochester, Feb. 8th, at 3 P. M. Home after March 1st at Pleasant Grove, Minn.

Levi Marshall, pastor of the church at Hannibal, Mo., preached at the First Christian Church this city, on last Sunday, morning and evening. The pastor, F. O. Fannon, is holding a protracted meeting in the church at Hannibal, and a similar exchange of pulpits will likely take place on next Sunday.

I. N. McCash,, of the University Place Church, Des Moines, Ia., writes: "Our meeting with home forces is being blessed of our Father. There were nine accessions last night, making 104 at the close of the third week. About one-half of these by confession and from other churches.

Last week at the invitation of our City Mission Board, A. R. Moore, pastor of the church at Memphis, Tenn., came to this city to confer with the board in view of a call by it to the work of a city evangelist. After seeing and hearing Bro. Moore the executive committee of the board extended a call to him to the work, which call he now has under advisement. A. R. Moore a brother to S. B. Moore, pastor of the Compton Heights Church, this city.

C. H. Trout, of Mishawaka, Ind., has accepted a call to Piqua, O., and will begin work there the first Lord's day in February.

W. L. Neals, of Sabina, Ohio, preaches one-fourth time at Martinsville, and is now in a protracted meeting at that place.

H. Rama, the pastor of the church at Clarksville, Iowa, has greatly revived his congregation by a protracted meeting recently concluded.

H. S. Gilliam, who expects to close his work at Hamilton, Mo., April 1st, would be glad to correspond with any church in need of a preacher.

The First Christian Church at Lincoln, Neb., recently encouraged their pastor, T. J. Thompson, by giving him a very enthusiastic reception.

The boards have called Cephas Shelburne to the Fredericksburg (Va.) work for another year The brethren there are making an effort to build. Bro. Shelburne has asked the brotherhood for $1,000 for this work. $700 of the amount has already been subscribed, leaving $300 yet to be raised.

B. F. Clay, the assistant secretary of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society for Missiouri, preached at the Second Christian Church last Sunday morning and at Compton Heights Church in the evening. He also addressed the Sunday-school of the Fifth Church Sunday at 9.30 A. M., and the Endavor Society of the Central Church at 7 P. M., and the united Endeavor Societies of the Churches of Christ in St. Louis at the West End Church on Monday night. Bro. Clay is here stiring up our minds by way of remembrance of our duty toward the heathen world.

W. H. Cannon, of Pittsfield, Ill., has received a call from the church at Galesburg, Ill. He is now in a meeting at Versailles with A. O. Hunsaker leading in song.

On leaving Chillicothe, Mo., G. F. Assiter, the resigned pastor, was presented with a $50 bill as an expression of appreciated labor and fellowship, and soon after being installed in the parsonage at New Franklin, Mo., he was beseiged by the brethren there and made the recipient of a large donation of articles for physical sustenance and comfort. So he caught it "a-goin' and a-comin'." He speaks well of the prospects of the Boonville Church in the direction of spiritual activities.

A. L. McQuary writes encouragingly of the work at Lebanon, Mo. D. B. Warren, the state evangelist, recently paid them a visit.

H. A. Northcutt, who has just closed a successful meeting at Windsor, Mo., is now in a meeting with the West Side Church, Chicago, Ill. His address is 19 Stanley Terrace.

Frederick Buettner, Parnell City, Mo., a German brother who was educated for the Catholic priesthood, but who for some time had been preaching among us, and who is highly recommended by Bro. McCash, of Des Moines, is very anxious to preach the primitive gospel to his countrymen here or in Germany. Why would it not be an excellent idea to put this good brother to work preaching the gospel to the Germans who are here at our door? He is reputed to be a man of excellent scholarship and character, is a young man 36 years of age and is willing to work in the field suggested for a bare support. He should, by all means, be put to work.

When T. D. Garvin resigned as pastor of the church in Honolulu, W. A. Gardner, of San Francisco, Cal., was called. He accepted and has now taken charge of the church in that place. Bro. Garvin will return to the Pacific Coast in February. He has a call to Clarksville, Tenn. Bro. Gardner left San Francisco on account of his health, his physicians having recommended a milder climate.

"A CRISIS IN CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR"

Stay not Thy Hand.

By all means let us have the services of Bro. J. Z. Tyler in Christian Endeavor. I will gladly be responsible or $5 per year for three years toward his support in that work. Press it through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and stay not thy hand until the elders of the people shall say, "It is enough; we will take upon us the burden of this ministry!"

Give the Local Societies a Chance.

We cannot afford to allow this work to "recede." Stir up the brotherhood at once to a sense of their duty and give the local society a chance to sustain you in your noble efforts. I am in a position to assist you a little in influencing "our societies" to help along this line. God bless your efforts every way.

A Providential Man.

The crisis in Christian Endeavor is apparent to us all. The movement among us must have wise direction, and it has grown in volume and importance until it requires the whole time and energies of our superintendent. J. Z. Tyler has done incalculable service in the way of organizing and directing and developing Christian Endeavor among us. He seems a providential man for this needed service. What has been accomplished by him has been done under much sacrifice and with many hindrances. With liberty to devote himself wholly to this cause, what great results may be confidently expected. For one I feel that it is of highest importance his services should be secured for his whole time and think the suggestion as to salary a wise one My belief is this would be a great gain to all our interests.

F. D. POWER.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 17, 1899.

Shows His Faith by His Works.

I desire to tender my most hearty commendation of an effort to raise sufficient funds from the Endeavor Societies of this country to permanently secure the services of Mr. J. Z. Tyler to look after the interests of the Christian Endeavor work among our churches.

My experience in the work during the year that I was Endeavor superintendent leads me to believe that the most important work that we can do to advance the interests of our cause can be done among the Endeavorers.

Everybody knows that Bro. Tyler is just the man for the place, qualified in every way to bring the Endeavorers of the Christian Church to that position which their rapidly increasing numbers entitle them.

Put the First Christian Church Endeavor Society down for $10 and the writer for $10 additional, to be paid whenever a sufficient amount is pledged to secure the entire time of Bro. Tyler. W. H. MCCLAIN.

St. Louis, Jan. 16.

Put it in Italics or Capitals.

Permit me to say that I feel an earnestness rising to pathos running through Bro. J. Z. Tyler's published letter, to which you refer. I wish you would run that letter again in the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST, all in italics or small capitals, or something of the sort. We are not sufficiently aroused as to the seed-sowing and educational work to be done among the hosts of our young people. Our simple presentation of Christ seems wonderfully attractive to the young; is it not possible to make the world-wide mission and commission of Christ seem equally attractive? I believe it is possible, and we should find the way to do it?

Bro. Tyler is the available man. The work is on his mind and heart. It is already in his hand so far as it can be under the circumstances. The Endeavorers know him and love him and confide in him. I have never heard anybody else named for the proposed leadership in enlargement of the work.

As to the financial plan proposed, there is a big discount to be figured on when circular letters go out calling for money. But I can can see nothing better for the present. It is earnestly to be hoped that the enlargement of the work would make it self-supporting within the two years suggested in the letter. Meanwhile, the plan will test the interest of our brotherhood in the movement. Put me down for $5.

A Christian Endeavor Evangelist.

Bro. J. Z. Tyler is certainly best qualified for the place on account of experience in the work

It seems to me he would require a salary and that it should be raised from the societies

I do not agree with number four of "aim to be accomplished." It has been injured by making it an institution for raising money. It reaches no new people for collections. The Christian Endeavor duplicates, too much, church work in other departments, ever to hold its own, like the Sunday-school has done. My idea would be to have Bro. Tyler as a kind of Christian Evdeavor evangelist. Hannibal will try to do her best. LEVI MARSHALL.

Sanctified Wisdom Needed.

I know we have reached a "crisis in Christian Endeavor" in more than one sense and we must exert our sanctified wisdom to know just what to do. But to the matter in hand: I think we should retain Bro. Tyler, yes, more, put him in the field all his time and have him give his wide experience to the Bethany Reading ourse, the general needs of the society and as far as possible visit our state conventions and put our young people in full touch with the work among our young people. The object is worthy all of his time and worthy a fair salary. I do not think it wise to call on the individual societies to make up the salary, but believe we can find enough well-to-do brethren who would respond in the manner indicated by Bro. Tyler. R. L. MCHATTON.

Santa Cruz, Cal., Jan. 18.

A Western Society Sets an Example.

I favor most heartily securing Bro. Tyler for this work and believe that it will be a paying investment, and I suggest that the C. E. Societies send volunteer pledges, covering a period of two years, in support of Bro. Tyler. To show what is meant, I presented the matter to our C. E. Society last night and it was unanimously decided to pledge $5 per year for two years for this work, the money to be sent when needed, to B. L. Smith, corresponding secretary of the A. C. M. S. Considering that ours is a mission church in the Far West, I feel that would be a fair share for our society, but if necessary I have no doubt it would be increased. I hope that our preachers and young people everywhere will see the importance of immediate action and that at an early day Bro. Tyler will be able to devote his entire time to this work. J. C. B. STIVERS.

Missoula, Mont., Jan. 16.

It Can Easily be Done.

I am heartily in favor of putting some one in charge of our Endeavor work who can devote his entire time to it. This ought to have been done years ago. To proceed as we have been doing is to adopt a short-sighted policy, on par with having a city school system and no superintendent of instruction, or a factory with thousands of workmen and no superintendent except a man who is loaded down with other work.

As for raising the money for the maintenance of the work, I am sure that it can easily be done if the right man can be secured for the position. I think it would be best to appeal to each society to contribute one dollar a year and then raise whatever may be lacking in the way that has been suggested by Bro. Tyler. The societies would appreciate the work more if they helped to pay for it, and bulletins and other helps could be sent to each society by the national superintendent that would easily be worth far more than the dollar a year contributed by it.

My judgment is that our present national superintendent of Endeavor work should be kept in charge of that work, and authorized to devote his time exclusively to it. He has demonstrated his fitness for the position, and his experience as pastor will be worth much to the work. He is an able executive, a good speaker, a loyal Disciple, and a man who will easily rank with the foremost men who are giving all their time to the Endeavor work. He has made the Bethany Reading Courses a great educational power among our young people, and is capable of maintaining the same high grade of work and of improving it. G. P. COLER.

Ann Arbor, Mich.

One of the Most Important Missionaries.

I fully endorse what you and Bro J. Z. Tyler have written on "A Crisis in Christian Endeavor." By all means Bro. Tyler should be employed to give all his time to this work. I am fully satisfied that the Endeavor Societies will support him in the field. In my judgment he would be one of the most important missionaries we have. I consider the Endeavor movement a providential awakening on the part of the young people that gives our people a great opportunity for enlargement. We should push this educational work to the highest success.

J. W. LOWBER.

Austin, Tex., Jan. 20.

Ready to Contribute.

I have read carefully J. Z. Tyler's article in last week's paper and it seems to show if anything were wanting, that above all others, he is the man who has the field under survey and the work in hand. Speaking as a pastor, I prize beyond expression the work of the Bethany Reading Courses. I believe our churches have felt the thrill of new life because of Christian Endeavor thus far, and what little we have invested in it will be repaid a hundredfold. But what has been done merely shows the great need and the great possibilities. More and more the church must become an educator and trainer. By all means let us put Bro. Tyler over this work.

The suggestion to send a letter to a large number of brethren may be a good one, but may not the support of such a worker be provided for in connection with the Reading Courses by a membership fee, for example? Perhaps to introduce the work the other method is best. I am prepared to say that my young people are ready to contribute their proportion of such a salary.

FRANK G. TYRRELL.

St. Louis, Jan. 19.

Give the Plan a Trial.

Relating to Bro. J. Z. Tyler's article, entitled "Crisis in Christian Endeavor," and to the matter of securing Bro. Tyler's whole time for superintending our Christian Endeavor work, I feel called upon to make more than a passing comment.

From the time when in St. Louis in June, 1890, I attended my first national Christian Endeavor Convention and found J. Z. Tyler already a well-posted and influential member in the united Christian Endeavor ranks, I have placed a high estimate upon him as being the man in our Heavenly Father's hands who has given the Disciples of Christ honorable and willing recognition in those ranks.

No less is it peculiarly and emphatically true that J. Z Tyler is a man among the Disciples who has cultivated and used his wide horizon to correctly estimate the young people in our own ranks. His love for them and devotion to their interests in right Christian training cannot be excelled. I could not give time and space for the recording of all the testimony that has come to me along that line. I must, however, mention one of my more recent experiences in that phase of the question. When I attended our City Evangelization Conference in Pittsburg last April, it was my privilege to be a guest in the same home, that of Dr. Evans, where J Z. Tyler was entertained. The concern that he expressed the night before he was to deliver his Christian Endeavor address to that convention showed all the eagerness and enthusiasm of a man just beginning an important enterprise. That we have a man in our ranks who maintains that freshness of enthusiasm, while he adds to his wisdom through experience, is cause for gratitude to our Heavenly Father.

The one thing that saddens my heart is the impaired physical condition of our beloved Bro. Tyler, but we know that his condition has not hindered him from carrying on a double work. It does seem to me that the sooner right arrangements can be made to utilize to the utmost the wisdom and C. E. love of Bro. Tyler during his remaining years, the better for our own hearts and for the cause which is mutually dear to them all.

The feasibility of the method suggested by him for raising the required funds is a problem. It is, however, just along the line of that conviction which grows upon all thinking minds, that the Christian Endeavor Society was never designed to be self centered. Bro. Tyler himself has made a most careful study of this. I feel like saying, Give his plans just the heartiest and best possible trial. To do this will furnish one of the most essential elements in Bro. Tyler's support—enthusiastic attention, cooperation and endorsement of his brotherhood.

J. H. VERSEY AND LANCASTER.

Amongst the most encouraging and delightful of the enterprises inaugurated by our English work is the mission at Lancaster, which has resulted in the formation of the Church of Christ and the erection of a tabernacle for work and worship in that famous old city in the north of England. I recollect the great interest felt by many friends when some years ago our esteemed friend, Daniel Scott, went to start a mission at Lancaster. Bro. Scott had for about three years been doing his best to carry on the work at Chester, so splendidly brought into being by the never-to-be-forgotten ministry of that great missionary, the late M. D. Todd. My dear and honored friend, J. M. Van Horn, succeeded M. D. Todd, and was wonderfully blessed, and one of those who bravely attempted to follow him after his removal to Birkenhead was D. Scott, who eventually departed for Lancaster. Here he undertook the very difficult task of establishing a Church of Christ in one of the most conservative and churchy of English county towns. Only an Englishman can understand what such an attempt means. It is in such places that the forces of political inertia, moral stagnation and social apathy crystallize every institution into the aspect of solid resistance to all progress. Uunder the conditions of life in our fascinating but stolid old cities, nothing is looked on with popular favor unless it smacks of my grandfather and grandmother, as an English Radical once sarcastically said. The new work at Lancaster went through the very familiar stages of theological and ecclesiastical incubation before a full-fledged church was hatched. From the first the faithful fostering spirits were found in the church at Southport, that quartet of crusaders in all our "forward movements," J. and F. Coop and their wives, showing constant, active and personal sympathy. After a time Bro. Scott retired from the field. He is now preaching at Carlisle by a private arrangement with a few good friends in that old cathederal city, and recently he has made overtures for union with us. It is possible that erelong we may have in our co-operation a church close on the border of Scotland. Carlisle is almost as much Scotch as English. After J. H. Versey returned from Jamaica he was invited to take up the Lancaster mission, and he at once assented. The results have been most gratifying. A pretty little iron tabernacle was designed by Bro. Joe Coop. The young church then had a home of its own. Bro. Versey has just indulged with one of his letters in which he gives the following report of progress: "Since I saw you at the convention at Margate the Lord has richly blessed the labors of our little church here in Lancaster. During the recent mission, which was conducted by Bro. Bicknell from Nov. 20th to 30th, 16 confessed Christ and three old members returned to the flock. Since then six more have confessed Christ, and these I expect to baptize to-morrow, and also to receive a brother and sister from Kendal, who were members with the 'Old Brethren.' As I think of the first Lord's day I spent in Lancaster, when I met three brethren at the morning service and twelve in the evening, in that 'dark consecrated hole,' the Good Templers' Hall, and as I look at our congregation to-day, with our neat little building, I have to praise God for what he has done. The membership has increased from 10 to at least 52. We have 56 on the roll. My Lune Works Mission is keeping up well. Every Friday, between twelve and one, I speak to about 450 men. Next time you come to Lancaster you must pay these noble fellows a visit. Morecambe is waiting and open as soon as I can set up a fort there." Thus does this able and steady worker go forward, overcoming obstacles and taking possession of new ground. Versey is a hero in the forefront of the battle.

LIGHT ON ARMENIA.

Earl Percy, son of the Duke of Northumberland, who is just dead, has just issued what will be one of the sensational books of the season. His new volume, entitled "Notes from a Diary in Asiatic Turkey," is all the more remarkable because he is well known as a strong partisan of Turkey and the Turks. The reason why this work will create surprise is that it fearfully exposes the rottenness and infamy of the Turkish Government, notwithstanding the sympathy of the author with the Turks, but it on the other hand explodes the view which has of late years become general in England, that a Russian annexation of Armenia offers the best solution of the Armenian question. Earl Percy believes, with Professor Ramsay, that Russia cherishes the infamous design of annexing "an Armenia without Armenians!" The main theme of the book is the utter breakdown of the Turkish Government in Asia Minor, to which might have fairly been added, in Syria and Palestine. This admirer of the Turk sees clearly and frankly that it is impossible to reform the Turkish administration, impossible to regenerate Turkey and the Turks without external intervention, as in the typical cases of Bosnia and Egypt. English intervention is the Earl's solution. Wanted—a Lord Cromer for Damascus! The volume must have many charms for American readers, for America has done more than all other countries put together to scatter throught Turkey the seeds of the future regeneration of that beautiful land. Your missions educated the young Bulgarians for statesmanship, and had it not been for Cyrus Hamlin and Robert College, there would have been no free Bulgarian nation to-day. The Presbyterians of the United States will be held in everlasting honor for what they have accomplished in the Sultan's dominions. As we have our English Bro. Johnson now leading the mission in beautiful Smyrna, a city of which I have a loving remembrance, we and you have a vivid interest in Asia Minor. If the American Disciples can see their way, notwithstanding the many discouragements, to push on and ever on with men and money in Turkey, then they will gain blessing and honor and glory in the time soon to come, when the whole of the Sultan's execrable domination will, as Earl Percy predicts, rush down like a pack of cards. Russia bides her time. And now I will pass from this review of the position in Turkey to say something else which affects both England and America, as world-powers, but still more as Christian nations.

AMERICA, ENGLAND AND RUSSIA.

As long as I have the honor of writing these letters I shall never cease to advocate that one supreme consummation on which from my heart I believe the welfare of the race depends. On the real sympathy of America and England for each other, and on a tacit if not overt alliance of these two great nations, I am like an increasing number of thoughtful people profoundly convinced that the issues of history in the near age must be contingent. Now, England has already virtually made her choice. Every sensibie Briton sees that France is determined to play the firebrand, as she ever has done, and that she will erelong either attack us in frenzy of envy or commit national suicide by putting the Napoleonic noose round her neck. That will mean the strangling of her liberty and her life as a free nation. Russia is for the moment deceiving nearly all the world by that artful stratagem of Mouravieff, who, after a year of duplicity and lying in his dealings with Lord Salisbury, now flourishes the Rescript of the amiable young Tsar in the face of the astonished nations. In the heart of the Tsar we all believe. But here is a question for every Christian man and woman. If the Tsar is so pacific, just and humane, what malign influence could it have been which prevented him from saying a single word of command or threat to the friend known as "Abdul the Damned," when just such a single word would have so terrified the Butcher of the Bosphorus that after the first Armenian massacre there would never have been a second? But though England for months entreated the Tsar to intervene he actually by his silence and his stolid and cold-blooded refusal to give any sign, furnished the Sultan with all the encouragement he needed. Blood streamed under the doors of Armenian churches where hundreds of girls were outraged and murdered, but the Tsar cared nought, and the Kaiser appeared cordially to approve of the development of the determination to wipe out Armenia. It has never been made known to the world that Nicholas II. has felt any anger with his brother despot, or that he even now feels the slightest sorrow for the fate of a hundred thousand tortured and slaughtered Armenians. And for this negative reason I, for one, still believe in Jesus Christ alone as the Prince of Peace, without the help of the Tsar of the Russias, who is still permitting the cruel oppression of pious Stundists, Dykhobortsi, Jews and dissenters from the dark and silly superstitions which form the tawdry state religion of the Russo-Greek Church. How can England or America feel any affinity with such a power?

One Reader's Experience During Those Thirty Years.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I have just read your editorial entitled "Thirty Years an Editor," and it thrilled my heart with such reflections of the past that I cannot refrain from writing you a letter of Christian affection and friendship. . . . I had only been preaching a few years when we first met. I was young and had been very successful and flattered beyond prudence, and having had the best of religious instruction and association, although lack of means and pressing circumstances drove me from college before I graduated, I felt that so far as related to first principles I understood them; and you know that it was from that standard the successful preacher was measured at that time.

At the time you wrote your first editorial, of which you speak in the editorial which called up the memories that influenced the writing of this letter, I was connected editorially with the ——— at ———. I wrote a notice of your appearance as editor of the Gospel Echo. I then said, and have often repeated it since, that you would make a successful editor. How far this prediction has been verified an editorial life of thirty years, during the most trying period of the century, abundantly testifies. The immortal Benj Franklin, at the time your editorial career commenced, had reached his zenith and was in the decline of a truly noble life, and the talented Isaac Errett, like the morning star, had also just appeared. The great reformatory movement, inaugurated by the Campbells, Stones and Scotts, had just crossed the Red Sea and entered into the wilderness of religious confusion growing out of the Civil War and the great work of sending the gospel to heathen lands and home fields through missionary societies. It looked for awhile that neither Moses nor Aaron would survive to lead the hosts that were coming to us from all parts of the land by scores and hundreds.

Soon the Evangelist and Christian sought matrimonial relations and set sail on a sea upon which several of our papers met an untimely death. Across the field of the lamented Franklin the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST and Christian Standard joined hands and hearts and became the journalistic stars of the Eastern and Western Empires. All efforts to revive and sustain the American Christian Review failed. It was a case in which the paper could not live and speak without the voice of the master, and no man could answer to his name. In other words, our John the Baptist had come and gone, and gone forever, but the work that he accomplished will never cease, and he will ever live enshrined within the hearts of thousands who sincerely loved him.

The temperance question then arose in our midst and demanded a hearing, and, to the utter astonishment of thousands, the Standard and CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST clashed arms and waged the warmest battle that was fought in our ranks during that exciting period. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST evidently conducted the struggle for truth bravely and won a victory that impressed a temperance lesson on the minds and hearts of the Current Reformation that has ever since been a great aid to Prohibition.

From the extremes to which Bro. Franklin had gone in many things, it was thought by many of us that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST had gone to other extremes even more dangerous than the Review had advocated. I thought I could see a conspicuous silence in the editorial department touching first principles. Then again, it seemed quite strange, not to say novel, to see so many letters from preachers of other churches appearing in the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. And such letters were editorially endorsed sometimes. About this time I learned that the editor of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST came to us from the Baptists. I felt sure then that I could see that the course of the star of the western empire was set to land us into a Baptist or some sectarian camp not far from Babylon, but a long distance from Jerusalem.

The dawn of higher criticism then threw its intrusive shadows across the old Christian pathway, and it seemed to find a welcome by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The editor did not say so much, but his correspondents seemed to take large and very dangerous liberties with our dear old Bible, and, it seemed to us—many of us—that the editor was serenely watching the conflict with some doubt in his mind as to which way his ship would head after the battle was over. Personally, I felt that you were sincerely leading thousands into a most dangerous field of investigation. It seemed to me that our Christian faith should not admit of sufficient doubt to acknowledge the necessity of an investigation, as this would imply a doubt as to the genuineness and authenticity of the source of our faith, which is the Bible. About this time the sainted Longan appeared as the chief defender of this and other strange interpretations of the Bible, as I then sincerely thought, and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST threw around him such protection as led many to conclude that it, too, was tending towards this new doctrine of destructive criticism.

To add additional danger and anxiety to this eventful period in our history and included in your thirty years of editortal life, the ablest minds among us either remained silent or seemed to advocate or at least sympathize with the higher critics. Many among us, in the simplicity of their Christian faith and unbounded confidence in the Bible, never for a moment presumed that the Bible could ever possibly become the subject of serious criticism by its friends, and as a result they became alarmed and wondered what would be the end of this, to them, sad departure from the old faith of the apostles.

I will now say to you that the course of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST concerning higher criticism, for one year, put my confidence in the credibillty of the historic part of the old Bible in absolute peril. No man in the Christian brotherhood ever gave me as much unhappiness and anxious thought concerning the inspiration of the Bible as did the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during those dark days. I have never felt a pang of anger towards you in my life, and your honesty, which has ever shone brightest in darkest hours, together with your universal kindness to foe and friend alike, always held me in the relation of sincere admiration for you personally, which also made your influence over me, and thousands of others, the more dangerous.

For relief I turned to other papers, and read all that was said, at least in our ablest papers, and it seemed to me that the replies to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST were prompted more by personal resentment than by the desire to learn the truth and allay the rising fears of a large number of our more advanced and spiritual thinkers. I then went back to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and bought a number of books such as treated upon the matters that were giving me serious trouble, and by careful and prayerful study I soon found myself, with here and there a minor difference, alongside the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and in the enjoyment of my greatest spiritual happiness.

There have been times that it seemed to me you would destroy the future of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST beyond hope of redemption. At such times your editorials seemed utterly oblivious to danger or consequences. I have read your editorials, laid aside the paper, closed my eyes and in silent meditation wondered where you would be when I heard from you again! Had I turned away from you and your paper in anger or doubt, I know not whither I might have drifted, for when our moorings are severed from our old faith and hope, no human conception can measure the distance between where we started and where we may take harbor again. But I now see that your course compelled me to do one of two things, namely, abandon my old faith concerning the historic portions of much of the old Bible chronology, or give the matter a candid and sincere investigation, so far as I was competent. I felt that it would be both unwise and cowardly to adopt the former, and certainly no worse consequences could result from the latter.

It is truly wonderful how much our own happiness and even our future destiny may become involved in the course and life of another, and that other one know nothing about it. This leads me to say that I believe that which may be called silent influence is solving the grandest problems of the ages, and that such influences are absolutely immeasurable in their good or evil consequences, both for time and eternity. Life brings with it such immense responsibilities and capabilities that it is truly a fearful thing to live. I wish now to express to you my voluntary and sincere appreciation of your labors in your high and responsible calling for the past thirty years, and especially for the great good you have done me personally, and I am led to believe, through me to many to whom I have preached and am preaching.

All flattery apart, even were there any motive for flattery—which there is not—permit me to say that you have every reason to feel grateful to God for the great ability and opportunity he has given you for the accomplishment of immense good through the columns of such a paper as the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Without any desire to reflect upon any paper among us I will say that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can justly claim the distinction of molding, spiritualizing and influencing more people, by an immense distance, than any paper among our people, and we have many excellent papers and noble editors. May God, who never slumbers or sleeps, keep you in health, grant you abundant prosperity through life, and at its close give you life eternal, is the sincere prayer of your friend and brother in Christ.

BARNABAS.

New York Letter.

A delightful farewell reception was held aboard the steamship "Servia," of the Cunard Line, on Saturday, Jan. the 20th, at noon, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Royal J. Dye, who were leaving home and native land as our missionaries to Africa. A number of students from the schools where they had studied in New York and Brooklyn, together with friends from our churches in Greater New York, were present, about fifty in all, and united in singing, "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me," "Blest be the Tie that Binds" and "God be With You Till we Meet Again." Bro. W. C. Payne offered prayer asking God's blessing upon our dear brother and sister and upon their work in the "Dark Continent." Mrs. Dye, nee Miss Eva M. Nichols, of Ionia, Mich., has visited our church on 169th Street several times and we have learned to esteem her very highly in the Lord. We feel sure that the Foreign Christian Missionary Society has made no mistake in sending out these heralds of life and salvation. Their going is another appeal to us at home, to enlarge our support of the world-wide work of preaching Christ. We are glad that the Executive Committee is securing the Bolengi Mission in Africa, formerly occupied by the Baptists, for these workers.

Dr. Hillis, of Chicago, accepted the call to the pastorate of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, as we felt assured he would. Here are two sentences of the letter of acceptance:

Oft, dwelling apart with God, if he so wills, I would be to you a prophet and a divine voice. Full oft going in and out of your homes, I would be your pastor and friend, baptizing your babes, welcoming your sons and daughters into Christ's church, burying your sacred dead, sharing with you the sorrows and joys, the temptations, duties and rewards of Christian discipleship.

I am wondering how this famous young doctor of divinity can harmonize his "prophetic office" and "divine voice" with the "baptizing of babies," or of any of these things with the teachings of the Prophet of Galilee, with the Divine Voice that spoke from heaven, and with believers' (the only water) baptisim taught in God's Word. Can it be that Prophet Hillis expects to receive revelations, as the pastor of Plymouth, which will supersede or contradict the Savior's will? The popular nonsense of "progressive revelation" is very hurtful and should be replaced by the New Testament as God's final word to man. Providential leading and the spiritual enlightenment of the Christian is not revelation in the sense of inspiration. If men would exalt God's Word more and their own less, the world would be much wiser, and the Church of Christ richer in spiritual knowledge.

The New York Tribune recently gave some editorial advice to missionary societies in the matter of evangelizing our new territorial possessions in the following language:

What we should do with such people is to let them retain their own form of civilization and their own social usages, except only in such particular points as they are opposed to good morals and the welfare of the community. So long as the demands of common decency are respected we have no right to tell the childlike peoples for who u we are to be responsible what clothes they shall wear or how they shall have them cut. We must be prepared to tolerate many ideals, customs and practices with which we as a race can have no liking or sympathy. That has been the course of Great Britain in India, and its success vindicates its practical wisdom. The British Government in that country strictly prohibits the suttee, even though it was a most sacred religious rite, because it militated against morals; but in a multitude of other matters it has allowed the natives to live their own life in their own way, and has even gone to the length of throwing the protection of British law around customs that must seem grotesquely absurd to the average Englishman And though the teachings of Christianity are in many respects so revolutionary, it has never tried to make over a race in that way. On the contrary, it has allowed itself to be made over in all matters outside of fundamental doctrines. Beginning as purely Oriental religion, clothed in Oriental forms and expressing itself according to the Oriental perspective, it first Hellenized itself and then Romanizd itself. By a still later development it became Protestant, in order the better to adapt itself to the thought of the Northern races. It is a far cry from the undogmatic religion of the first apostles to the doctrinal subtleties of the Westminster Catechism. But each type of Christianity met a need of the human mind, and if it would continue to grow it must in the same way make itself "all things to all men."

Our missionaries, Bro. and Sister J. A. Erwin, who will shortly go to Porto Rico, will teach nothing but "the undogmatic religion of the first apostles."

It is reported that Bro. F. W. Troy, of the Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn, has resigned. We have heard nothing of the details of this report.

Iowa Letter.

On Wednesday, Jan. 20th, the chapel hour at Drake University was devoted to the memory of Miss Margaret Craig, daughter of Chancellor W. B. Craig. Her college class had entire charge of the service. I have witnessed a great many appropriate functions, but none more beautiful and tender—none more perfect and fitting—than this. Messenger angels direct from the dear one recently gone could hardly have touched the hearts of the bereaved more deeply or soothingly. It was an hour in the Mount of Transfiguration. But it was the transfiguration of student faces. And I believe, with the words of Chancellor Craig on the morning following, it was a time of decision—the turning-point in more than one life. Such memories left by this Christian girl in her home and in the hearts of hundreds of students, who can tell their worth? May it not often come true that a peaceful, triumphant death of a Christian, like the blood of the martyrs, may become the seed of the church? What a benediction her life might have been! But death, God's enemy and our bitter foe, cut it short. Who knows that in so doing he did not condense the virtues and powers of a long and useful life into seed form and sow that seed in fertile soil against the day of God's great and precious harvest?

A few years ago, a certain Iowa church was taking the usual annual pledges for the year's expenses for their work. A young man—a new convert—astonished the committee by the large amount of his pledge. He pledged one-tenth of his income. His pastor, who was on the committee, had the good sense to cut his pledge in two and take but a part. The other part he was directed to distribute to a half dozen missions or benevolences. Now, if my readers will set aside a per cent. of income for church work and for missions, they will not be bothered so much by the large number of calls, and giving will be a pleasure. I take it for granted that many if not all Iowa readers have pledged and are paying on the current expense fund at home; that you have provided for certain benevolences known to you; that the managers of the Iowa Christian Convention know just what to depend upon from you this year, and I hope that the portion is not niggardly, and that now you are making ready for the March offering for our Foreign Missions. A. McLean and F. M. Rains, Secretaries, Cincinnati, O. If you have given these matters proper forethought—such as to your business—they will not fret or worry you. Do not forget the March offering.

For weeks all news from the Philippines, and especially from Iloilo, have had peculiar interest for Iowa readers. The 51st Iowa Regiment is now, and has been for some time, at Iloilo. It is composed of men from Centerville, Red Oak, Oskaloosa, Des Moines and other places Des Moines and other churches have great interests at stake in the movement of events in the far-away Pacific.

Iowa feels the drawing power of the great cities beyond her borders. Chicago, in 1879, drew from us the Evangelist and, later, the Oracle. Now St. Louis is taking from our state the Midland Monthly, a magazine prized by all Hawkeyes, no matter what their religious or political creed.

The last number of the Christian Standard is devoted to the Hiram College Jubilee Endowment In blessing Ohio it should also provoke the Disciples of other states to good works. From Iowa we have seen the good fortune of Eureka College. We now see the tide rising in behalf of Hiram. We see Missouri in preparation for great things educationally, and Cotner on the west pulling for the shore. But what are we doing towards the indebtedness of Drake University? What are we saying to Chancellor Craig? What are we doing with the conditional gift of Gen. F. M. Drake? Why do the Congregationalists in the East pour money into their Iowa schools? They want the cream of Iowa manhood and womanhood, and they get it. Albert Shaw, editor of the Review of Reviews, is a sample. Why not have our share? But how can it be without unloading our debts and keeping pace with the improvements of the best schools?

More than one Iowa town is figuring on the decline of rents on store buildings. Why? A great many will soon be vacant which are now occupied by saloons. Why? There is a vigorous Law and Order League at work in the state. It has taken hold with such a grip that real estate owners are figuring on the rent problem. Rents will, in all probability, not drop one cent, but if they do, general prosperity will come up so as to more than offset the loss. Keep on figuring and you will find that righteousness pays.

Letter from Bro. Calvin.

Dear Bro. Garrison:—I am sitting up this afternoon for the first time in several days. I have just passed through a severe attack of la grippe which came near resulting in pneumonia. These attacks of sickness are such blessings to us! They give us time to stop and think, and cause us to consider that we and our work are not the only ones in the world.

I had just read your 30th anniversary editorial and decided to write you a word concerning it when I allowed business and care to cause postponement till I took to my bed. I do not know that I began with your first paper, but it seems to me that I began with a little sheet which you sent out from Quincy, Ill. I know I took it when it was The Christian. I cannot begin to tell you how much you have helped me in, not only my ministry, but in my Christian life as well.

I was brought up till I was about 18 years old "a Pharisee of the Pharisees" of the "Anti" persuasion. The American Christian Review was authority in my father's home ever since I can remember such a thing as a religious paper. Had it not been for the influence brought to bear upon my life by the Christian first and afterwards the Christian-Evangelist, and especially by your own writings, I cannot begin to imagine where I would be to day. Before I had gotten fairly under your instructions and the influence of the advanced ideas and Christian spirit which you have always shown, I was beginning to revolt from the dogmatism of my early training, and the tendency was rapidly toward skepticism. When I once grasped the grand plea of "liberty in Christ Jesus," which you have so nobly defended all these years, the light of a new world dawned upon me and I took up the ministry with a zest that has never for a moment found abatement. During the last 20 years your paper has gone with me into six different states, and only he who knows the secrets of human life can tell how much of the success I have had in the ministry is due to your friendship and wise counsel. Please do not think this fulsome; it is but the honest expression of what I have long felt and am ashamed that I have delayed so long to tell you

When you lay down your pen to enter the higher ministry, I may not be there to cast a flower into your grave; but I ask of you to accept of my little offering now in the same spirit in which it is sent, and may the assurance that you have helped at least one fellow-laborer over many darkened places comfort you when others are disposed to criticise.

Most sincerely and fraternally,

F. N. Calvin.

Grandfather's Reminiscences. — Mr. John Wolfe of Mapleton, Ia., relates the following: "I have read a great deal in the Christian Oracle and other papers about the cures effected by Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer. I can remember hearing my grandfather and father speak of the great skill of old Dr. Peter, the grandfather of Dr. Peter Fahrney, the present proprietor of the Vitalizer. He was for years their family doctor in Washington Co., Md. Their names were Hamilton. My grandfather's name was George and my father's Frank."

A medicine cannot live a century unless it possesses merit. It is over one hundred years since Dr. Peter's blood Vitalizer was discovered by old Dr. Peter Fahrney. It is a combination of herbs, roots and leaves. It has been doing a grand work of blood purification ever since. Not to be had in drug stores. Sold only by special local agents. For further information write to Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Ratifying the Action of Elders—Is it Necessary?

The reply to a query in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Jan. 5th inst. raises the question, "Is it necessary for the action of the church to give effect to the recommendation of the elders that an offending member remaining impenitent be no longer recognized as a member?" The reply to this query on this point is too brief to be wholly satisfactory and the serious troubles in churches arising from want of information on the subject fully justify its fuller elucidation.

It is said the elders "may bring charges against an offending member and give him a fair and impartial trial," etc. This is misleading. It is no part of an elder's duty to bring charges against alleged offending members. When a member is charged with offenses by common report, or by responsible persons, they are the court of primary jurisdiction to give him a fair and impartial trial, if it be necessary so to do in order to determine the questions of fact that are at issue. But if the elders bring the charges they thereby disqualify themselves to give a fair trial. They are not to be either accusing witnesses or ecclesiastical policemen. They watch for souls as they must give account. They teach, exhort, admonish, reprove, warn, rebuke and sometimes try offenders. But they cannot rightly recommend that an offender be no longer recognized as a member except for denial of the faith either by words or wicked works.

When a member is known to be guilty of sin and it is necessary to do more than rebuke him, privately or publicly if need be, the elders have only to make known the law of Christ that demands the withdrawal from such impenitents for walking disorderly, or the putting away from among you such wicked persons, and elders and congregations are alike bound to obey such law. The case then rests not on the recommendation of the elders, but upon the Word of the Lord. There is no discretion in the execution of the law of Christ in such cases, and where there is no discretion a vote is not necessary to give effect to the law. Acquiescence is the imperative duty, and this is best given silently. If there be doubt of the correctness of the elders' report as to guilt of the alleged offender, the congregation is not competent to resolve that doubt. If the verdict of the court can be reviewed in a public assembly and reversed by popular vote, the eldership becomes a nullity. That is to overturn the polity of the New Testament and reduce the Christian church to a mere religious rabble.

To sum up the points involved in the query referred to, I say:

1. The elders, as such, have no authority to bring charges against a member.

2. They have no right to hear charges against a member "before the person is notified of" them.

3. Neither elders nor congregations have a right to vote a person out of the church any more than they have to vote him into the church.

4. When it becomes necessary to disfellowship it must be done by compliance with the law of the Lord that commands it, just as persons are received into fellowship by compliance with the law of admission.

Disregard of these plain scriptural principles has led to disastrous results and impaired the usefulness of many churches for years.

W. L. HAYDEN.

Edinburg, Pa., Jan. 9, 1899.

[The main objection we have to the foregoing is that it is pitched on the plane of civil law and is couched in the phraseology of courts and lawsuits, of which the New Testament knows nothing. If an elder comes to know in any way that a brother is walking disorderly he with his co-elders should at once seek to win him from his evil way without waiting for any formal charges. It is better to avoid all semblance of a legal trial. When convinced of his unchristian life, and when all efforts to win the offender to repentance have failed, then they should "tell it to the church." Of course no recommendation for withdrawal will be made by the elders until they are convinced that the Scriptures require such action. But elders are not infallible, though one occasionally acts as if he were. The question is never whether the will of Christ should be carried out or not, but whether the case in hand comes under the rule that requires withdrawal from the disorderly. There may be facts known to some private member which are not known to the elders. The character of the offender may be better understood by some of the unofficial members than it is by the officers. It is far better, therefore, for the officer who presents the matter to the church to ask if there be any objection to the course recommended. If no objection is made then the action has the approval of the church; if an objection be signified the objector should meet the elders and state it, and it should be duly considered. Sometimes this leads to the withdrawal of the recommendation and the saving of the offender. If, however, the objection is seen to be without justification the recommendation can be renewed with this explanation and the church will follow generally the advice of wise elders. But all appearance of arbitrariness should be avoided. It is a family affair, not an affair of the courts. —EDITOR.]

Colorado Letter.

D. W. Conner, recently from Missouri, is now pastor of the church at Canon City. He writes that the outlook for the cause in that city is bright.

Geo. B. Hadfield, recently from Texas, is supply temporarily at the Central in Pueblo. His sermons are warmly commended by the members of that congregation. The Central is one of the strong congregations of the state.

Flourney Payne, of Tallapoosa, Ga., succeeds Leonard G. Thompson in the East Side Church, Denver. He is getting the work well in hand and good reports of the work may be looked for. The East Side Church is but one year old. Starting with 57, members it now numbers 95.

Elmer Ward Cole is doing a fine work at La Junta. Their seating capacity is insufficient for the congregation that attend the regular services. There seems to be no remedy but that of expansion.

The church at Boulder, under the lead of J. E. Picket, is rapidly taking a leading place among the churches of the state. From being a mission of the State Missionary Society it has become this year self-sustaining. Frequent additions by baptism are reported.

Leonard G. Thompson's first visit as state evangelist was to Pueblo, Jan. 15th. He preached for the Central in the morning and at the Mesa Christian Church in the evening. This last is a mission of the State Missionary Society and is under the charge of R. B. Preston. It is, too, one of the worst needed and most hopeful missions of the society. The evangelist remained in the city until Wednesday, the 18th, at which time the organization was perfected with 120 charter members. Of these 34 were from the Central Church and 42 from the former church at Bessemer, which was abandoned about a year ago. About 20 members were of the old Mesa Church which was allowed to disorganize six years ago. Of the other 24, one came from the M. E.'s, one by baptism and the others from Eastern churches, having previously no membership in the city. There are about 25 others in the vicinity who are members of the Christian Church at large who are expected to come into the new organization at an early date. A Sunday-school has been organized, there being 27 at first service and 40 at the second.

A strong ladies' aid society has also sprung into being, which will devote all its energies toward securing a lot upon which to erect a church building. For the present services will be held in the women's club rooms in the Masonic Temple. The evangelist's sermon at the organization was upon "The Distinctive Plea of the Disciples." It was peculiarly appropriate for the occasion and was pronounced by all who heard it a masterpiece. A goodly representation of the board and members of the Central were present and Geo. B. Hadfield, the acting pastor, assisted in the service.

Our new state paper, The Way, published in Denver and edited by B. O. Aylesworth, is greatly stimulating the mission work of the state. In it will be found regularly the substance of all the reports of missionary pastors. In the December issue I find the following complimentary reference to one of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST staff:

Much of the new courage and zeal in the state is due to the presence of Dr. B. B. Tyler, who is in charge of the church at Colorado Springs. It is the case of a noble man come to lead a noble company of faithful and generous Disciples. . The congratulations of a brotherhood are ours upon the possession of "The Bishop of the United States, including now the Philippines and Porto Rico." His counsel in the board, his indomitable course and seer-like good cheer—for he has seen the vision—have set our faces toward the East. We are praying toward Jerusalem in downright good earnest.

It has long been a matter fully conceded that ancer was a disease incurable, but recent disoveries have now proven that if cancer is properly nd promptly treated in its early stages, that its ourse can be so changed and altered that nature will come to the aid of the physician and a complete and speedy recovery will be the result. A FREE BOOK is prepared by DR. RINEHART, Lock Box 221, Indianapolis, Ind., on this subject, and the book will be sent o any one writing to him for it.

Wisconsin Notes.

A. F. Willett, formerly of Petoskey, Mich., now the Bishop of the Richland Center Church, is getting hold of things there in good earnest. He has organized a good Bible class of young men. The house is full every Sunday. They talk of building an addition in the spring.

F. N. Calvin, "Bishop of Milwaukee," is moving things there. Attendance is increasing constantly. There have been four additions, a brother of D. M. Haggard, a cousin of J. W. McGarvey and two others who were baptized at prayer-meeting last Wednesday evening.

D. G. Wagner, of West Lima, held a good meeting at Werley, with four additions. He is now in a meeting with the Berea or Mill Creek Church at Sabin.

J. H. Berkley, of Monroe, preaches also at Twin Grove, where he started a protracted meeting lately, but became sick and closed. The interest was good and there were three additions. He reports one addition at regular service in Monroe since then.

F. W. Muchler, pastor at Center and Footeville, is holding a meeting for the state board at Pardeeville. His churches donate his services to the board. It is expected that all our churches will do the same and make that a permanent rule.

Lynxville has been resurrected. They had not met as a church for about two years until I visited them in December. Preachers of other religious bodies had used their building occasionally. They began meeting regularly Jan. 1st, and will continue to meet each week "to break bread." I am hoping to locate a preacher with them for a part of his time.

Chippewa Falls has about completed their new chapel. This is a Norwegian church, perhaps the first purely Norwegian church of our brotherhood in America. I dedicate their house for them Jan. 22nd.

Sugar Grove talks of building a new house there before our state convention, which will be held there in September. This they ought o do. And they are amply able.

W. F. Nuzum is getting a good hearing at Viroqua. He is a recent accession to our Wisconsin forces from Ohio.

I have been to Green Bay prospecting. We have some fifteen Disciples there, ten of whom have not gone into any sectarian church. If you know of any Disciples or friends who live there please notify me of their names. I want to hunt them up. You will hear from Green Bay later, I believe.

Some of our churches have not yet observed Wisconsin day. Some have sent small offerings. Let all remember that the state board is depending on an offering from each church equal to fifty cents per member. If your offering has fallen below that the balance should be made up at once. Send all money for State Missions to E. M. Pease, treasurer, Richland Center, Wis.

There have been three notable deaths among our sisters in Wisconsin. Mrs. P. S. Olson, wife of our Oconto county missionary, P. S. Olson, of Hickory, died, after a lingering illness, Dec. 15th, 1898. Mrs. W. H. Trout, wife of our Milwaukee elder, W. H. Trout, who was a charter member of the church, the auxiliary and the Ladies' Aid Society, died very suddenly Dec. 30th. Mrs. Smelker, widow of Elder Smelker, former pastor of the church at Platteville, died at Platteville, Jan. 7th, after a long illness, at the age of 81. A wide circle of friends join with the kindred in mourning the loss of each of these.

The Needed Upward "Forward Movement."

In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Jan. 12th I found what I had been looking for with an intense longing. Was glad to see you presenting the questions whether we were going to make Christians of the 100,000 converts or only going to brand them with our mark and pass them on to the low-grade spiritual and moral life characteristic of so many church members. These are all important questions. The world needs to be taught first principles, and above all it needs to see the Christ-life embodied in the church. Then in the prayer-meeting topic you present some church problems, such as the unification and mobilization of our forces for active services, the problem of national purification and of the liquor traffic and of the social evil, etc. You are doubtless right. These are all church problems and can only be rightly solved under the leadership of the church. God calls his church to lead in all moral reforms. Without taking higher moral and spiritual ground by our present evangelizing methods can we purify the nation? We cannot, no matter howmany converts we may make.

In Iowa we have gained over 150 per cent. since 1890, while the population has increased only about 12 per cent. Has the state been purified during this period? No, it has been demoralized. Divorces, the social evil, cigarette smoking and drinking have increased. Drinking probably tenfold, while the number of convicts in our penitentiaries has increased over 100 per cent. During this time in consideration of a bribe we have licensed the liquor traffic. This has been done by the consent of the voting members of the churches. And this destructive agency, under the protection of our laws, is destroying more people than the church is saving. Shall we face these facts and let them lead us to repentance, or shall we suppress them and go on until our candlestick is removed out of its place? A great reformation will yet be wrought in this nation. Shall we lead it? May God help us to do our duty fearlessly.

Whosoever Circle.

This is not a new society; it is only a name for a work that is carried on systematically in every well-trained church, the work of soul-winning. In order to systematize these efforts and make constant what is prone to be fitful, I called all who were interested together one Sunday night after the sermon and told them my plan. Every one who will promise to engage in personal work for the salvation of men is enrolled as a member of the Circle. There are no officers and no committees. The Circle meets once a week for reports, counsel and instruction in this divinest of all arts.

Our motto is John 3:16 and Rev. 22:17. Cards like the following are distributed to the members:

Danger In Soda.

Serious Results Sometimes Follow Its Excessive Use.

Common soda is all right in its place and indispensable in the kitchen and for cooking and washing purposes, but it was never intended for a medicine, and people who use it as such will some day regret it.

We refer to the common use of soda to relieve heartburn or sour stomach, a habit which thousands of people practice almost daily, and one which is fraught with danger; moreover the soda only gives temporary relief and in the end the stomach trouble gets worse and worse.

The soda acts as a mechanical irritant to the walls of the stomach and bowels and cases are on record where it accumulated in the intestines, causing death by inflammation or peritonitis.

Dr. Harlandson recommends as the safest and surest cure for sour stomach (acid dyspepsia) an excellent preparation sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These tablets are large 20 grain lozenges, very pleasant to taste and contain the natural acids, peptones and digestive elements essential to good digestion, and when taken after meals they digest the food perfectly and promptly before it has time to ferment, sour and poison the blood and nervous system.

Dr. Wuerth states that he invariably uses Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in all cases of stomach derangements, and finds them a certain cure, not only for sour stomach, but by promptly digesting the food, they create a healthy appetite, increase flesh and strengthen the action of the heart and liver. They are not a cathartic, but intended only for stomach diseases and weakness and will be found reliable in any stomach trouble, except cancer of the stomach. All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents per package.

Notes and News.

Presented to the Church.

Christian Church at Centerville, Iowa, has introduced individual communion cup system and are much pleased with the change. It has many advantages over the old way. Our elegant new communion set was presented by Gen. F. M. Drake. The church is in good condition for a forward movement. Largest S. S. in county. All other work being pushed as well. Three additions recently. Bro. Moffett, our pastor, and church planning for meeting in February. J. N. DUNBAR, Elder.

"Egypt" Again.

Congregations wanting pastors might find a "near cut" to the goal, should they correspond with us. A week recently spent with our people in Edwardsville leaves them with brighter hopes and stronger courage. Here is a fruitful field for some worthy pastor. Bro. C. J. F. Musgrove is stirring things at New Douglass; is already spreading literature for the March offering for missions. He is an indefatigable worker. W. BEDALL, Cor. Sec.

Flora, Ill.

Springfield, Mass.

The church has lately had its annual business meeting and a roll call service. All members were heard from. Thankofferings amounted to $50, and removed every indebtedness but that of love. Twenty-one were added during the year; lost three, one of whom was Dr. H. Detchon, one of the founders of this work; two added this month; present membership, 51. Money raised for all purposes, $731, one-fourth of which was given to missions and church buildings. Our work is partly sustained by the A. C. M. S. and the N. E. C. M. S. We have outgrown our chapel.

A Protestant Mayor.

The all-absorbing topic in San Antonio, Tex., is the municipal election that comes off Feb. 8th. We have for a candidate against the old regime for mayor the Hon. Marshall Hicks, a Christian man, member of the Presbyterian Church, the first time in the history of this city that a Christian has ever dared to offer for this high office. Under the present mayor, "Father Calahan," the Salvation Army dare not hold open-air meetings. Every time they have attempted it they have been arrested and imprisoned. Pray for our success. LEE D. MARTIN.

San Antonio, Tex., Jan. 21, 1898.

Dedication.

Sunday, Jan. 1st, witnessed the dedication of the new church building which had just been completed and furnished at old Scottville, Ill., at a cost of about $3,000. The building has a seating capacity of about 400 and was packed to its utmost capacity. Eld. J. P. McKnight, of Peoria, was master of ceremonies, and delivered an able and eloquent sermon The dedication ceremonies were very impressive. Bro. McKnight then concluded the morning service with the ordination of the elders and deacons and deaconesses of the church, which was also very impressive. Communion service was held at 3 o'clock P. M., and preaching service again at 7 o'clock, when Bro. McKnight delivered another very able sermon to a large and appreciative audience. Every dollar of expense incurred in the erection and furnishing of this beautiful edifice had been fully paid before the day of dedication.

The church is in a harmonious condition and, while we have had no pastor for more than a year, we have kept up our regular meetings. We also have a "live working" Endeavor Society. We are now ready to employ a pastor for one-half time and perhaps hold a series of meetings before March 1st

J. A. TURNER, Elder.

Scottville, Ill.

Peabody, Kansas.

The six churches of Peabody, Kan., are in a union meeting. All of the churches and preachers are working freely and with a good will. Each preacher conducts the services his night after the custom of his own church, but is not allowed to preach on controverded subjects. One amusing thing occured: the Christian preacher was put last as usual, but all during the week some were at the mourners' bench each night, and when the Christian preacher's turn came he advanced the seekers a step by asking them to stand up and make the good confession, and told them the Lord was not hard to find. Imagine what was going through the minds of the other preachers just then! "Great is the mystery (?) of godliness!"

I am invited to hold a meeting for Bro. G. C. Ardrey at Burrton, Kan., beginning Jan. 30. I hope to be able to do so, although we have sickness in our family.

Bro. W. D. Adams will continue at Winfield. Florence, Whitewater, Herington, Canton and Lincolnville are all without preaching now. Bro. Pomeroy, of Marion, has been down sick, but is convelescent. J. A. Walters, of Council Grove, has gone back to Iowa.

The work at Peabody now is in the best shape for prosperity it ever was, and I am confident that you will hear of a strong church here. Yours in the one faith,

L. W. KLINKER.

That One Thousand Dollars.

Through appeals in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we have received a number of donations to our "Fredericksburg Building Fund." We started out by asking the brotherhood for $1,000. $700 of this amount has been secured in cash and pledges, leaving only $300 yet to be raised. Pledges have been asked for and made to this fund upon condition that they are to be paid when notified that the full amount has been raised. It is frequently asked, "What do you propose to do with $1,000? You can't build a house of worship with it."

Our plan is this: Our present old antebellum, building is situated on Main Street, near the center of the town, on a splendid lot It has good, solid brick walls, good slate roof, is 40x40 feet, lofty ceiling with galleries. $600 put on the inside of this old building in the way of repairs, furnishings, windows, baptistery, etc., will give us a handsome, commodious and modern interior with a seating capacity of 500. $800 put on the outside will give us a new front and vestibule of pleasing and attractive design. This $1,400 put into our present old "war relic" and "eyesore" would destroy its identity, entirely remodel the old structure and give us a good church home in the old historic city of Fredericksburg valued at $4,000 and free from any encumbrances of debt.

This "$300 yet to be raised" means a $4,000 church and our cause firmly established in this section of the state. This is a great field for our people. I am here at the call of our state, assisted by our general home boards to cultivate it. But we must have a better building. Will not the great brotherhood of Disciples come to our help with this $300? We must have it before we can touch the $700 cash and pledges already subscribed.

Will not the brethren reading this article send us a small amount in cash or pledge? It will be duly credited through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and other papers.

The Sana-Cera treatment for the cure of Catarrh, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Deafness and all diseases of the Head, Throat and Lungs.

MISS LILLIE FRUSH, Elwood, Ind., writes:—Three years ago I was a mere skeleton and thought to be a hopeless victim of Catarrhal Consumption. My entire system was saturated and diseased with the catarrhal poison. I belonged to a consumptive family and no one ever expected me to get well again; but I was placed in charge of Dr. M. Beaty who gave me his Sana-Cera treatment. Shortly, the coughing spells left me, my appetite returned, I grew stronger, increased in weight and after a 3 months' course was completely cured. Kansas City Missions.

There are now three missions under our care and all are growing. There have been 126 additions during the year and 185 since September, 1897, with 92 by primary obedience. My time has not been given entirely to the missions, as I have preached in six churches also at different times, having preached 221 sermons in 1898 The missions have raised $754, not counting the Sunday-school work.

The church at Sheffield, this city, was assisted in a meeting until a pastor was secured.

One new mission with a good Sunday-schoo has been started at Ivanhoe. There have been three aid societies organized and two Endeavor Societies. One young man was baptized who will give his life to the ministry in place of law.

The churches here are taking a deeper interest in this needy work We expect to enlist every church in the city this year. It was never our privilege to labor with young peopl more intereste in missions than those in this city. Truly, they are a great host. Our motto for the Jubilee Year will be overshadowed as the young soldiers grow into manhood and womanhood. The C. E. Societies of this city stand ready to help in every good work.

Sister B. and myself were remembered kindly at Christmas by our C. E. workers, especially by receiving a beautiful gold watch from the C. E. Society of the city. May we prove worthy of it.

It costs on an average $80 to save a soul in heathen lands. It costs $630 to save a soul in America. It cost the city mission board in Kansas City about $15 for every soul baptized into Christ in 1898. Besides, there were 100 secured by statement, letter, etc., not counted in above figures. It costs $16 to make a drunkard. Will it pay to save our boys and girls? What will you do this year? Choose ye! Pray for us. FRANK W. BOWEN,

State Mission Notes.

I have been down in South Central Missouri for a week. I have visited Pomona, where we dedicated the church last Lord's day. It was a beautiful day and we had a delightful service. The Warrens, father and sons, are to be credited with the building of this beautiful house. They have labored here at great sacrifice and, oftentimes, at great inconvenience, but their joy is great in the consummation of their work. The little band deserves great credit, also, for what they have done.

Monday night I was at West Plains, and I never had a heartier greeting than I had there. T. B. Carmical, Dr. Hockensmith and a number of ladies had been at the dedication the day before, and they turned themselves into so many advertising agents and the house was full. Here we found A. F. Holden just entering on his work as pastor. He is worthy of all their confidence and trust. The church here has some of the best people on the earth, and they are doing and will do a mighty work for Christ and the church.

The next night I was at Mountain View. Here the brethren, under the leadership of T. J. Head, are building a house, a good one. Yet they wished to go on record as one of the contributing churches, God bless them. Then I visited, in order, Willow Springs, Cabool, Hartville and Mansfield, and every church visited owed its very existence, in part, at least, to the work of our mission forces, and they all heard us gladly.

My visit has convinced me more than ever that right now is the time to strike for the permanent establishment of our cause in all this region. The country is fast settling up with a desirable class of citizens, who are making homes for themselves and families. It is, beyond question, the great fruit region of Missouri. The people are open to our plea, and the possibilities for us in all this territory are just past telling. But the work must be permanent. Too much ephemeral work has been done already. Evangelists would come along and organize a congregation, go off and leave it, and then it was "root hog or die;" and in many instances it was die. Hence, we have said to our workers, "Make your work permanent;" and while it may not show up with great brilliancy on paper in the annual reports, it is beginning to tell in all this region. Place after place has been entered, and when the meeting was successful the work of building was taken up at once. Thus Hartville, Cabool, Mansfield, Pomona, Waynesville, Kenoma and Hulton Valley have houses either fully completed or in process of construction. Then Doniphan, Koshkonong, Nebo, Weaubleau and Quincy are being moved into the building fever, and ere many months roll around will have the cause firmly established. It is slow, but why? Because the laborers are few. Oh, that I could make the brotherhood to see that this is the day of our opportunity! It is here now. We have a grand man in Bro. D. B. Warren. He loves the cause; he is identified with the interests of all this region, but he can't meet the calls, so many and urgent, that come. We ought to have not less than two more workers in this territory.

Brethren, I beseech you, do not cast this aside as of no importance. We must take this country for our King; with your help we can, without it we fail. Shall we not have such hearty responses to the call for funds that we can immediately put another good man in this territory? Men and women are dying "without hope and without God in the world." They are eager to hear; they are hungry for the bread of life. Shall we not send it? Will you not help? Will you not join with us in this effort to take Missouri for Jesus, our Savior and King? Yours in His name.

Siloam Springs Meeting.

Our meeting began Jan. 1st and lasted over three Sundays, closing with 19 additions to the congregation; 15 heads of families, three young men and one young lady. State Evangelist E. C. Browning was the preacher. He is true to the commission. Plain, practical, pointed, clear, candid and conclusive; just the kind that every congregation needs. No effort at flights of oratory, no attempt to say pretty things to tickle the ear, no disposition to "steal the hearts of the people," but an honest, fair and next to faultless presentation of gospel truth. I have been in the ministry a quarter of a century, and it has been my pleasure to know many of our great preachers, but I have never known a safer teacher. True to the gospel of Christ, to the church and to the preacher in charge. He left the congregation more in fellowship with their preacher than it was when he came; the people see more need of sound Bible teaching, they love the Old Book more, and have a greater respect for the man who preaches it. I never had a teacher in the congregation for which I was workting that did the preacher and the cause more good. God bless Bro. E. C. Browning.

Endowment by the People.

The Hiram Jubilee Endowment has now been fully inaugurated. It is in the power of the Disciples to make this movement a brilliant success, and that, too, without imposing a financial burden upon anybody. Surely, no well-informed Disciples will call in question the worthy character or the importance of the work. The time has come when we must endow our colleges if we would meet our obligations as a religious people. Why not begin by giving to Hiram College an Endowment that is in some degree adequate to the wants of a great college in this day of advanced educational standards? Hiram has a history of which every Disciple may well be proud. Its present condition and future prospects afford ample inspiration and a sufficient guarantee for the gifts of benevolent people. Our educational interests offer richer returns for the money invested than any other channel of benevolence. If you would invest a little money where it will do the most possible good for the cause of humanity, unite in the endowment of Hiram College. We ought to have the names of at least a hundred thousand people who will unite in this work. If we could get "an offering from every church and a gift from every member," Hiram could be sufficiently endowed in its Jubilee Year. If this could be continued for ten years every college in our great brotherhood could be placed on a solid foundation and the success of our educational work be assured. If our colleges could be adequately endowed, our gifts to all lines of benevolent work every year would be multiplied by ten.

Brother, sister, friend of Christian education, have you yet joined in this great Hiram movement? If not, stop! think! consider! Can you afford to neglect this call? Send in your name at once! Join the army of those who will give one dollar or more for the endowment of one of our oldest and worthiest institutions.

Missionary.

TIME FOR

MARCH OFFERING.

Prepare for It.

1. By preparing it well.
2. By preaching about it.
3. By distributing the Missionary Voice.
4. By distributing the March Offering Envelopes.
5. If you are a preacher, by using the Pastoral Letters.
6. By devoting the Prayer-meetings during February to world-wide missions.
7. By observing the Foreign Missionary Rally.

Aim To:

1. Take the offering on time.
2. Reach your full apportionment.
3. Have an offering from every member.
4. Average $1.00 per member.
5. Make the offering an act of worship.

Importance of the Offering.

1. Including native evangelists and helpers, there are 41 more missionaries this year than last.
2. The work will require at least $15,000 more this year than last.
3. There is danger of closing the year with a debt if there is not a considerable increase in the receipts.
4. Six missionaries are under appointment, ready to go as soon as we are prepared to send them.
5. We are already borrowing considerable money to pay the missionaries their salaries.

Let there be a united and determined effort to go beyond all previous records in the approaching Annual Offering. A. McLEAN,
F. M. RAINS.

How to Prepare for the March Offering.

For the benefit of that large class of preachers who want to take the March offering, and yet who feel that they do not know just how to prepare for this event so as to make a complete success of it, the following suggestions are presented:

I. The preacher's preparation.

1st. He must know missions.

It is not enough for him to be missionary in spirit. He must be well read on the subject of missions in order to impress his people on this subject. And for this purpose the Bible is the best book for him to read. There he will find, in the commission, the authority for missions. In Acts of Apostles he will see the results of missions. For the success of the apostles is the success that always attends the preaching of the gospel in all ages. But the preacher should understand modern missions as well. To do this he should read as many of the excellent works upon this subject for which he has the time. Lists of good books upon this subject have been prepared by A. McLean and can be found in McLean's Handbook on Missions, which in itself is the best book of its isze I have seen. Then the Foreign Society will gladly furnish every preacher with the Missionary Voice, and with one or more valuable tracts that will give material enough for one or more good discourses on missions.

2nd. The preacher should make this work a subject of earnest prayer. He should pray for missions, for the success of the missionaries and for his own success in presenting this cause. He should also pray for his own people that they may become thoroughly missionary in spirit and in their giving.

3rd. He should study his people. He ought to know each one's attitude toward missions. In this way he can prepare to remove all objections to missions, and he will know how to present the motives that will secure the largest and best results when he takes the offering.

II. The preparation of the people.

1st. One or more sermons on missions should be preached before the time for the offering. It is always better to have these sermons come along through the year, and just before the first Sunday in March the pastor should present some of the strongest reasons for supporting missions. All argumentation should be done before the day of the offering. On that day only a tender appeal and prayer for all who engage in the great work should be had.

2nd. The proper distribution of literature. The Foreign Society furnishes free of cost the Missionary Voice for distribution in each congregation. A copy of this paper if put in each family will materially increase the offering. You can get as many copies of this paper as you can use by sending to F. M. Rains, Cincinnati, O.

3rd. The pastoral letters. On the week before the first Sunday in March these letters should be sent out by the pastor of the church. These are letters prepared and furnished by the secretaries of the society for your use. You are expected to sign them with your own name and send one to each member of your congregation. Ask for an offering and urge that this offering be as liberal a one as the circumstances of the giver will allow and the cause demands. You will find that the use of these letters will help you to increase the receipts for missions.

On the day for the taking the offering you want to be in your best trim for that day's service. Have this work upon your heart as well as in your mind. Let it burn in your heart, and you may be sure that it will burn in the congregation when you present it to them. If done right, the best plan is to ask for definite sums from the people. But it must be remembered that this is not a time for jesting. It is serious work, for souls are at stake, even in the amount you shall raise for the sending of the gospel to the lost. Before closing that service you should thank God and the brethren for what they have given.

In the hope of helping some these suggestions are offered. B. F. CLAY, Western Field Secretary.

AUSTRIA (Vienna).

The city of Vienna is one of the most beautiful and interesting in Europe. It is essentially a city of music and musicians, having been the home of many of the greatest composers. It also ranks with Paris as the creator of fashions, dress being cultivated as a fine art by the Viennese women.

Its simplicity of parts, easy operation, great range and excellence of its work specially commend the Singer to the artistic dressmaker. Thus Singer sewing machines are preferred by Vienna modistes, and the number of Singers used there exceeds all others.

The population of Vienna is made up of many nationalities, so that the original Viennese type no longer exists.

The two young women pictured in another column were photographed in Vienna by an agent of The Singer Manufacturing Co.

They wear their usual holiday dress, similar, in the case of the one seated at a "Singer" sewing machine, to the costume worn in Egra.

The dress of the woman beside her is a combination of the Swiss and Austria (Tyrol) costume.

A Wonderful Cure for Kidney Disease and Rheumatism.—A Free Gift.

The Kava Kava Shrub as previously stated is proving itself a wonderful curative for diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder or other maladies caused by Uric acid in the blood. The new botanic discovery bids fair to change medical practice in these diseases, and its compound, Alkavis, is now regarded as a sure specific cure for these maladies. We have many letters on the subject from business men, doctors and ministers, of which the following from Rev. J. H. Watson, of Sunset, Texas, a minister of the gospel of thirty years' standing, is an example. He writes:

"I was suddenly stricken down on the 22nd of June with an acute attack of kidney trouble (uric acid gravel). For two months I lay hovering on the border line of life, and with the constant care of two excellent physicians, I only received temporary relief. My family physician told me plainly the best I could hope for was a temporary respite. I might rally only to collapse suddenly or might linger some time. But the issue was made up, and as I had for years warned others to be ready, so now more than ever I must needs put my house in order and expect the end. Meantime I had heard of Alkavis and wrote to an army comrade (now principal of a college), who had tried it. He wrote me by all means to try it as it had made a new man of him. At the end of two months and then only able to sit up a little, I dismissed my physicians and began the use of Alkavis. In two weeks I could ride out in the carriage for a short time. The improvement has been * * * constant and steady. I am now able to look after my business. I feel I owe what life and strengh I have to Alkavis. * * * I am fifty-five years old, have been a minister over thirty years, have thousands of acquaintances, and to every one of them who may be afflicted with any kind of kidney trouble, I say, try Alkavis."

THE KAVA-KAVA SHRUB
(Piper Methysticum.)

Mrs. James Young, of Kent, Ohio, writes that she had tried six doctors in vain, that she was about to give up in despair, when she found Alkavis, and was promptly cured of Kidney disease, and other ailments peculiar to woman. Many other ladies give similar testimony.

So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, of No. 420 Fourth Avenue, New York, are its only importers, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, difficult or too frequent passing water, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers it is sent to you entirely free.

Lines on the Death of a Little Girl.

BY WILL H. DIXON.

'Tis not death; 'tis only sleeping
Thro' the passing peaceful years;
Angels bright their vigils keeping,
Till the morning dawn appears;
Only wrapped in peaceful slumbers,
These shall rise in countless numbers,
In that land of endless day.

Free from every care and sorrow,
Sleeping gently by the way;
There will come a glad to-morrow,
On the Resurection Day.
We should trust in him who giveth,
Altho' he gives and takes away.
Tho' here she sleeps, up there she liveth
In a land of endless day.

'Tis not death, this quiet slumber,
Altho' she rests within the grave.
All these will rise in countless number,
To reign with him who came to save.
Altho' we bow our heads in sorrow,
And tho' our hearts are filled with pain,
There will come a glad to-morrow,
For these shall wake and rise again.

A Blind Optimist.

BY MISS ZUE ODER.

"Mamma, what is a blind optimist?" asked Gussie, as she seated herself in a willow rocker. And before there could be an answer, "Is it worse than a pessimist?"

Mrs. Stone was working leisurely at her embroidery when her daughter came in from school. She noticed there was considerable concern in her daughter's manner, but attributed it to some school affair. She replied, "I rather think that a blind optimist is a person indifferent to the needs of the hour, unwilling to see or admit actual conditions as they exist, satisfied with the present so well as to care to make no advancement. A pessimist sees things from a gloomy aspect, has no courageous, cheerful disposition as to the way out, no remedy for the improvement of conditions. Why?"

"Because at our Endeavor business meeting we had a discussion which arose from the reporter reviewing the past year's work and also from propositions and plans for the new year. It was stated that not one soul was saved during the year, that we had made money, had a good time socially, very good attendance, but that our advancement along the most important line,such as soul-saving, was a blank. Are we selfish? What can help us? What ails us? were some of the questions asked."

"What did you think of it?" said her mother.

"I didn't like it, for it just spoiled the meeting and I said so," replied Gussie.

"Well, was it true?" asked Mrs. Stone.

"I guess it is, but I never thought of it before, didn't know it, and was awfully surprised, have to think about it yet. But I don't think it was smart to tell it in meeting. I worked so hard for our success this year and we made over one hundred dollars bought new songbooks and helped all of our church boards by financial contributions. We have been represented at every one of our union conventions. That comment was so churchy," said Gussie warmly. "What did you say about it in the meeting?" asked her mother wonderingly.

"I said it was fogy, churchy and pessimistic, after accomplishing so much," replied Gussie quite triumphantly, "and Miss Granger said I was a blind optimist.

"The professor said to-day that he was inclined to think that a blind optimist was about the size of a pessimist," continued Gussie as she waited for her mother to say something. "Mabel Snick is the only member of the graduating class that agrees with Miss Granger," added Gussie.

Mrs. Stone was thinking of the C. E. pledge, just what to say that would do the most good, for she saw that her daughter had some mistaken ideas, and decided to talk a little about the pledge.

"I believe that you can give me your Christian Endeavor pledge, Gussie; I would like to know something more about it, and your constitution, too, but your pledge will do just now; so you will not need to go into the library," and Mrs. Stone looked up to hear the pledge repeated.

Gussie sat in mute indifference, looking as though her mother had run away from the subject. Finally she said, "Why I can't repeat it, never could, it is so long."

Mrs. Stone thought of the numerous recitations her daughter had given in response to program invitations, any one of which were three times as long as the pledge, but she was too wise to remind her of it by the unfavorable comparison at this juncture, and decided to ask her about certain features of the pledge which she herself knew —the identical features that she would have specialized had Gussie repeated the pledge.

"Can't you tell me what it says about the church?" said her mother.

"It says support your own church in every way," said Gussie, "and we have; we even contributed to city evangelization,and that made the last of every one of the departments of the various boards, and it wasn't very important, any way."

"Do you think financial support is the whole of the meaning embraced in that clause?" queried her mother.

"I suppose it isn t, for the pledge says, to attend all the regular Lord's day services and midweek prayer-meetings, but only a few keep the midweek part of it, none of the swell set do, and only one girl in my class does," replied Gussie as though that was sufficient to brush the whole thing aside.

Mrs. Stone was seemingly a devout woman, regularly attended the Lord's day services, both morning and evening, when there was preaching, and rarely ever failed to be present at social meeting if the pastor was absent, but she was very careless about the midweek prayer service. This thought occurred to her as she was thinking of what to say to Gussie. Her conscience smote her and she said to herself, the pledge of the Young People's Society asks nothing that any Christian should object to and requires only the performance of those duties belonging to any Christian and a church member. Study of God's Word and sincere, earnest prayer with consistent practice would surely revive the church work, save souls and build us up in Christ's life! She decided to share her own imperfections with her daughter, for perhaps she was only her model.

Gussie broke the silence by saying, "You mustn't say anything against the 'support of the church' from a financial standpoint, not even by comparison, because folks are so squeamish whenever the subject of money is mentioned. We have a hard time as it is trying to accomplish anything."

"That is true," said her mother pleased at the thoughtfulness, "but we must not leave other important matters undone; the spiritual and financial should go hand in hand. I think you ought to keep your pledge about the midweek prayer-meeting. The 'swell set' are poor examples of the Christ-life and Mabel Snick, your one girl in the class who attends prayer-meeting and keeps her C. E. pledge, is a beautiful Christian character, much loved."

"Well, Mamma Stone, and you don't go to prayer-meeting yourself," said Gussie.

"I know it, dear, but I am going to do so from this on. If the young people are asked to do something that all Christians ought to do, a Disciple of Christ should do as much without a pledge, do it as a duty, joyfully zealous to advance the cause of Christ in the world. This ought to make it easy for you to keep the pledge."

Mrs. Stone was thoughtful, conscientious and well informed. Gussie was very much like her mother. Mrs. Stone almost invariably knew the regular topic for the midweek prayer-meeting,the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST kept her posted, and she thought to herself, the topic for this week is "An Inward Look." I certainly needed it and Gussie has opened the way.

She said, "Well, Gussie, let us both take our places at the midweek prayer-meeting; perhaps we can get a score of others to come. Let us improve the new year by saving souls at home, and not diminish the support of the church boards either. May be many souls were saved by the use of the money sent away. We can't tell how far-reaching the work of the home and foreign missions are. Your society may have been the means of saving a score of souls, but that must not excuse us in reaching the unsaved at home. Double the forces at home and the work elsewhere will have a corresponding increase."

And Gussie said rather slowly, "Well, I will, but I don't think some of the girls that I would like to have come will do so, for they are so critical. They think Mr. La Bore is enough to listen to twice on Sunday, and sometimes just twice is a plenty. He is so peculiar that he don't 'draw' anybody. One of the boys said that was the reason why no souls were saved and the

TEN YEARS AGONY FROM ECZEMA

CURED BY CUTICURA

For ten years I suffered untold agonies from Eczema, my lower limbs being so swollen and broken out that I could hardly go about. My brother, a physician of thirty years' practice, and other physicians of splendid ability, tried in vain to effect a cure and signally failed. I became absolutely disheartened, and had lost all hope, when a friend induced me to give CUTICURA REMEDIES a trial. I used two cakes of CUTICURA SOAP and two boxes of CUTICURA (ointment), and it resulted in an absolute and permanent cure.

Endeavor Society was not to blame for it. He says a sentence over and over, prefaces nearly every sentence with, "And if you please,' or 'And so it is.' In one sermon he used 'and so it is' forty times by actual count. Chad Brown counted. He is one of our associate members and the girls all like him. They were tickled nearly to pieces when he handed them a slip of paper with 'and so it is' plus forty on it. He might have confessed Christ if he liked La Bore."

"Well, Gussie Stone, it is no wonder the associate members are not becoming active ones; your society don't 'draw' towards the church. You share the ridicule of a habit to the exclusion of every precious truth Bro. La Bore utters. I have heard of this before, but it never did sound so out of place as now. 'Most anybody can find fault, and if Chad Brown or any one else was before an audience numerous faults might be found. The critic as frequently needs to be criticised. Going to church to study elocution, rhetoric, language, and to see how many mistakes are made, is most reprehensible indeed. A good voice, language and delivery are not to be underestimated, but they are not the whole essential for a pulpit. A devoted, consecrated preacher and pastor is as important. In fact a preacher without devotion, piety and consecration, even if he were an orator, would not meet the demands. We need goodness. Perhaps that is one trouble you will have to overcome in the new year," said Mrs. Stone earnestly, for she thought how easily a good influence from a sermon could be injured by ridicule and fault-finding, and it should not be sympathized with.

Gussie was feeling the force of all the facts as her mother presented them in her conversational manner.

"Miss Granger says she thinks we are so worldly-minded, so deceitful, find so much fault with the preacher's articulation and superfluous repetition, have so little confidence in each other's sincerity, and have so much jealousy in our minds, that we have grieved the Holy Spirit away. That is what ails us. But she is so churchy," said Gussie, "and an old maid, too."

"What do you mean by 'churchy,'" asked Mrs. Stone seriously. Gussie was unmindful of the C. E. motto: "For Christ and the church."

"Oh, I don't know," said Gussie, "only she always stays for church and goes to prayer-meeting, is more apt to miss our Endeavor meeting than she is the church service and she always takes the preacher's part, and says something nice about him to offset any criticism. I think she is good, mamma"

"What is the motto of your socieiy, Gussie."

"For Christ and the church," answered Gussie, growing red.

Gussie rocked away, but she was becoming serious. She always liked to have her mother commend what she said and did, as was usually the case.

"Really, Gussie, I am afraid your Endeavor Society is in need of being reformed if you have correctly reported it and I believe you have. Jesus Christ instituted the church, it is not a human but a divine institution. The real, true, genuine Endeavorer so regards it. The pledge honors it, the motto is its badge. 'I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do,' does not mean that the society is a substitute for the church. The Endeavor Society should 'draw' people into the church, especially its associate members, as their special evangelistic work; be a recruiting agent for Christ and the church. The way you have talked alarms me. The first thing you know you will hear of some one asking for the Endeavor Society to baptize, officiate at funerals, weddings, and you won't want any church. But that is all contrary to the original Endeavor idea." Mrs. Stone spoke solemnly.

Gussie laughed for she thought it ridiculous about the society baptizing, officiating at weddings and funerals. She said, "It will never get to such an awful extreme as that if I can help it. But sometimes it is pretty nearly a substitute. We don't have a preacher more than half the time."

Mrs. Stone felt the last remark keenly, for how often she had been grieved over the pastorless condition of the church. Once her son ,Raymond, now in heaven, had said to her that the Methodists always had a preacher. The tears fell over her face as she thought, How can we remedy the pastorless condition of so many of our churches? We must educate both preachers and people to consider this grave and serious subject.

Gussie would not offend her mother with an unkind remark. She knew how often her mother had talked about having to go visiting in order to hear a sermon. And wasn't she a member of the church herself? Yes, and joined the Endeavor Society afterwards. So she said yieldingly, "I never thought how it looked, but I guess you are right, and so is Miss Granger, and I'm going to help her to get us to doing better. The Qniet Hour would be a wonderful help, as she says. It would make us more devotional. I suppose she keeps it. If we have the Spirit of Christ in our work and really work for him and the church we will see souls saved."

"Yes," responded Mrs. Stone, "for the gospel of Jesus Christ is the 'power of God unto salvation to every one that obeyeth.' We shall have to be patiently earnest in retrieving lost ground. The Lord requires faithfulness at our hands. He giveth the increase."

They went to prayer-meeting with Mr. Stone, and the "Inward Look" truly helped them to determine more fully to be fruit-bearing Christians in 1899. Mr. Stone was so thankful to have his wife and daughter accompany him to prayer-meeting. Gussie says nothing would suit her better for a topic for her graduating essay next June than "A Blind Optimist."

No amount of argument can convince the experienced, honest grocer that any other soap will give his customers such general satisfaction as Ivory Soap. He knows that they prefer Ivory Soap to new kinds, of unknown quality.

Ivory Soap will sell because the people want it, the other soaps may look like Ivory, but his customers want the real thing—they may buy a new soap once to try it, but they come back again and again for Ivory Soap, and they insist on having it.

The Dignity of Labor.

STELLA CLANTON.

The dignity of toil is oft forgot.
To simply labor well is nobly grand;
For toil is greatly honored. Know ye not
That God hath touched it with Almighty Hand?

O, weary laborers in life's vast field,
Rejoice and praise the mighty King of kings!
Conquer the cares of earth! Let us not yield,
But climb up with their help to higher things.

Why should bend our eyes upon the sod,
And sigh because we are sons of toil?
By toiling well we are the sons of God.
Work bravely on, then, amid the world's turmoil.

Work faithfully. We struggle not alone.
If you would stop to idly moan and cry,
Remember this great truth—God helps his own.
We are colaborers with him on high.

The Sin of Magnifying Trifles.

The habit of magnifying trifling matters is very common. Most of us regard it as a weakness rather than a sin. Certainly it is a weakness. But it also is a sin. It involves self-deception and often the deception of others. It is a violation of truth. It means the substitution as an object of thought and endeavor of something of little consequence for something of real importance, as if their actual value were reversed. It causes distorted views of life, misdirected effort, unsatisfying results and mental and spiritual unhappiness. They who are guilty of it soon lose the confidence of others in some measure because it becomes evident that their judgment cannot be trusted, even if nothing worse is believed of them.

More is involved than the mere loss of the habit of accuracy. The habitual lack of just discrimination, the growth of a weakened and misleading sense of proportion—these affect the moral quality of life. Evils lose something if not the whole of their sinful quality, and the good is not sure of being recognized and honored for what it is. It is hard enough to do right when we know clearly what the right is. But when we have allowed ourselves to look upon minor matters as vital, it becomes much more difficult to be sure of duty and to do it.

This sin is peculiarly objectionable also because it is so undignified to magnify petty things into importance. There are sins which, without ceasing to condemn them, we nevertheless recognize as characteristic of great and noble natures. But this is not one of them. It is mean and contemptible. It deteriorates character rapidly and mischievously and its influeuce is wholly and lastingly evil, excepting when it serves, as it sometimes may, as a warning. It causes needless worry, inexcusable peevishness and prevalent ill-temper, and it goes far to hide one's really noble qualities and to blind others to the honorable and Christlike efforts which one makes.

It is especially likely to be a temptation to those whose lives center chiefly in some single sphere of action—the home, the schoolroom, the office. It is to be corrected by the sturdy refusal to be petty, by the cultivation of large and noble views of life and truth, by effort to be exact in judgment and in speech, and by prayerful, loving imitation of Jesus Christ.—Religious Review of Revews.

WHAT STATISTICS HAVE PROVEN!

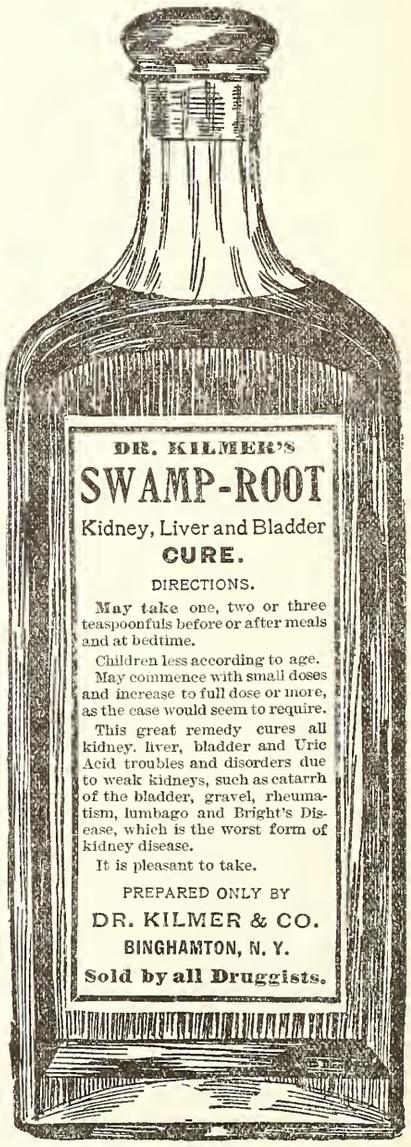
What Medical Science Has Accomplished.

THIS GREAT DISCOVERY IS OFFERED FREE TO CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST READERS.

Statistics prove that more people are brought to the grave by diseases of the kidneys and bladder than by any other disease.

Kidney trouble is in itself so insidious and deceptive that thousands have some form of it and never suspect it.

For many years medical science has been trying to discover some remedy that would positively overcome these dangerous troubles.



But not until recently was the discovery made. Doctor Kilmer, the eminent physician and scientist, after years of study and research, and after test on test that never varied in the grand result, announced the discovery of Swamp-Root, which has proven itself a most wonderful cure for all diseases of the kidneys and bladder.

While Swamp-Root has proved such a remarkable success in curing kidney and bladder diseases, it has also proved equally invaluable in the cure of blood diseases, rheumatism, liver and stomach troubles and in the regulation and cure of all uric acid troubles.

Swamp-Root has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who have not already tried it, may have a free sample bottle of Swamp-Root and thus test for themselves its wonderful curative properties.

If you will send your name and full address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free by mail postpaid, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from people who owe their good health, in fact, their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of Swamp-Root.

This great modern discovery is for sale at most drug stores in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. Don't make any mistake, but make a note of the name, SWAMP-ROOT, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember that it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

One half the 50 ct. size—one quarter the $1.00 size.

If you take advantage of this generous offer and write for a free sample bottle be sure and mention the ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

The danger of an uncivil and hasty reply to persons seeking information by questions is well illustrated in the following story from the Chicago Tribune:

"When does the next train that stops at McAllisterville leave here?"

"You'll have to wait four hours."

"I think not."

"Well, may be you know better than I do, ma'am."

"Yes, sir, and may be you know better than I do whether I'm expecting to travel on that train myself or whether I am inquiring for a relative that's visiting at my house and wanted me to call here and ask about it and save her the trouble because she's packing up her things and expects to take that train herself and not me, and she'll have to do the waiting and not me, and may be you think its your business to stand behind there and try to instruct people about things they know as well as you do, if not better, but my idea is that you're put there because they couldn't use you in the switching department and perhaps you'll learn some day to give people civil answers when they ask you civil questions, young man, my opinion is you won't."

(With a gasp) "Yes, ma'am."

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

George felt that he could not wait for Friday to come, for the thought of camping out was dear to his soul. Perhaps if he had known what a strange adventure he was destined to pass through, he would not have been so anxious to camp. On Wednesday, the scholars in Jennie's room were asked to bring into their class the next day an example in arithmetic. It was about three men who went under the clearly assumed names of A, B and C. It seemed that these gentlemen had gone into business without counting the cost. A was unfortunate from the start. For a while B got along pretty well, but he borrowed a large sum (ending with an ugly fraction) from C, and then began to make partial payments every few months at seven per cent., while C jealously counted the days, which were generally odd numbers, such as 19. To make matters worse, a person named D was dragged into the story near the end, though he clearly had nothing to do with it and went to working at $ .73 a day for every day he worked, and forfeiting $ .37 a day for every day he idled. The way he idled was quite reckless, and in the meantime 187 of A's horses and 13-23 of another horse had died and how many had he left? And how much did D get? And how much did B owe C at the end of 25 years, 11 months and 29 days?

Jennie was quite in despair over this example, but she decided to "put in the evening on it." She knew it was important for her to learn these things, because she might have 13-23 of a horse of her own to die some day and she would want to know how much she had left to hitch up to her buggy. And then, it is an every-day occurrence to hire men for $ .73 a day to plaster your house, who idle half the time and then pay you $ .37 out of their own pockets. So when she went over to Tattie's after school, to help fix up a corner in the sittingroom, she entered quite breathless, and said she must not stay later than five. Mrs. Marsh was not at home, so they had the room to themselves. Jennie showed Tattie the corner she meant, where the light from the window was not very strong, but you can't have everything just as you might want it. It was the corner where the broom and dustpan stayed, when they were at home.

"Here is my plan," said Jennie. "Get two goods boxes about three feet long, and wide and high enough to sit upon, and put them in this corner at right angles to each other. Then make cushions to put on them, and little curtains sewed to the edges of the cushions to hide the box part. And collect pictures like mine to hang up over your seats, and put up a little shelf right in the edge of the corner to keep something pretty on, and then you will brighten up the whole room!"

"But where am I to get my boxes?" said Tattie, "and the cushions?"

"Oh, I have a great pile of denim that I have no use for," said Jennie carelessly. "You come around and I'll show you about that. And if you haven't two boxes, take a large one and saw it in two."

"But I haven't o*ne*," sighed Tattie.

"Oh yes, you have," returned Jennie. "Here it comes now!" At that moment a voice at the door was heard crying, "Here's your goods box, good and cold, full of nails and knotholes. Hurrah for poetry!" It was George, who had brought over a high and narrow box on the wheelbarrow. "Where's your saw?" he added. Jennie explained what she wanted and George was willing to do anything to keep his mind off of the camping expedition. Tattie ran for the saw and they went around to the back yard and worked and laughed and were very busy and happy. George made a door to each of the seats, "so you can keep things under 'em," he explained; and for hinges he used the top of an old shoe discovered in the alley. The ends of the boxes were joined at right angles, and a back was made by nailing four uprights to the sides and joining their tops with two planks, thus forming a sort of railing to lean against, "and keep off of the gilt wall paper," said George. This part took longest, because George insisted on sitting upon the seat after driving each nail, "to see how she was goin' to set." All three carried the box into the room and when it was placed in the corner George sat on it, and then Jennie and then Tattie and then all together, laughing all the while, till Jennie exclaimed, Oh, it's five, and that dreadful example!"

When she got home company came in and stayed till suppertime, and after supper came Aunt Lou, who stayed all night. As she came from the country Jennie had to stay in the room to show she was glad to see her; and of course she was glad, but all the time she was thinking about A, B and C, not to mention D. When she went to her room she got out the arithmetic and tried to get the answer, but she was so sleepy she had to give it up. And at night she dreampt that the alphabet had come to life and all the letters were chasing her. When she woke up in the morning she cried out, "I've got it! I've got it!" All of a sudden she knew how to work that example! It was very strange. She had not thought it out herself, unless her brain kept digging at it after the awake part of her mind had gone to sleep.

"Got what?" cried Aunt Lou, starting up in alarm—she and Jennie had slept together. "I am sorry I woke you," said Jennie. "It was nothing."

Aunt Lou seized her spectacles from the chair and put them on, and stared at Jennie. "Got what?" she repeated. When Jennie explained, the other laughed and said the same thing had happened to her several times when she was a girl. "It is a result obtained by the action of the subjective mind," she explained, "while the consciousness is asleep." Of eourse Jennie was glad to hear this, since she now knew all about it.

But at last Friday, that day dearest to the soul of youth, rolled around. And that sweetest hour of Friday–four o'clock–came at last, when it is a perfect joy to be alive, with two full days, fat days, besides the rest of this one before you. Uncle Tom in his big wagon drove up before the door and George climbed in unable to keep back the grin of delight. Mr. Pump, the man who worked for Uncle Tom, was also in the wagon. And there were boxes filled with things to eat and a pile of bedclothes and cooking utensils and a lantern, and guns—three of them. The bottom of the wagon was carpeted with hay. Uncle Tom wanted George to "sit up on the seat," but this the boy rejected with decision. The hay was good enough for him! They drove right by Uncle Tom's farm, just as if they didn't know who lived there. Uncle Tom's wife and little children had gone to Kansas City on a visit—this was one reason why Uncle Tom was camping out. He was lonesome all by himself.

The Red Woods was about a mile from the farm, and here was an old cabin, with a rusty stove and a milkstool, by way of furniture. There were just enough clapboards off of the cabin to make it seem like sure enough camping out. Hay was strewn in a corner and the bedclothes placed upon this. Then a fire was started in the stove, which smoked a good deal more than it burnt. Then Mr. Pump went "down in the woods" to hunt. Uncle Tom persuaded George to wait till the next morning before he tried his skill, since it was already growing dark. So he amused himself by wandering in the woods and wondering when they would have supper. Mr. Pump returned with a young rabbit which he cooked outdoors, filling the whole earth with a delightful odor.

It was after they had lain down, and the other two were asleep, that George suddenly remembered he had not read a verse of the Bible that day. He started up and looked at his uncle's watch, which lay on the milkstool. It was ten o'clock. After two hours it would be too late, and so he would fail to keep the Advance Society resolutions! He began to dress quickly. Not long after he slipped from the hut and sped toward his uncle's farmhouse. It was still Indian summer in Missouri and a delightful south wind was blowing. He reached the familiar yard and ran around to the kitchen window that had no bolt. It was only after he stood in the dark room that he began to feel queer. He had no matches, but he knew where they were kept. As he reached for the box he was seized with the conviction that somebody was in the house besides himself. At that moment a bright light flashed under the door that led into the dining room. The light disappeared, then came again. Filled with alarm, George turned to escape, when his arm struck a tray of dishes and sent them banging upon the floor. The dining room door was flung open and a savage face glared at him from the doorway.

Week after next we will tell about George Weston and the robber. But next week this page will be filled with young people's letters and names of new members of our advancing society.

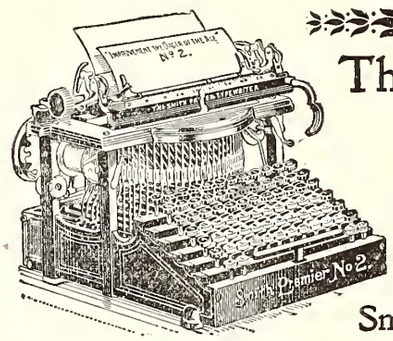
THE CLAIMS OF CHRIST.*

John alone of the evangelists preserves for us those notices of the Jewish feasts which enable us to arrange in some order the events of Jesus' life. The second year of his ministry had apparently begun, and according to his custom he attended the passover is the spring of that year. There was in Jerusalem a pool called variously Bethesda, Bethsaida or Bethzatha. Unlike the numerous other pools of Jerusalem this one had the reputation of possessing properties of healing. The reason for this may have been twofold. One cause is given in the interpolation which appears in verses three and four of this chapter, and reads as follows: "Waiting for the moving of the water: for an angel of the Lord went down at certain seasons and troubled the water; whosoever then after the troubling of the water stepped in was made whole, of whatever disease he was holden." This gloss which has been excluded from the Revised Version embodies a fact and a traditional explanation. The fact was the intermittent character of the spring which caused the bubbling of the water at certain periods; the traditional explanation was that an angel came at times to stir the water which then for a moment possessed healing properties. Criticism has shown the unreliable character oi this gloss and we are left with the simple fact that the pool possessed, or was believed to possess, healing qualities at intermittent periods. It is possible also that the springs which fed the pool possessed those mineral or gaseous properties frequently found in medicinal springs.

Passing one day, Jesus found here a man too feeble to reach the water and healed him. Whether it was true that a bath at any other season than the moment of agitation would be useless, at least the man so believed; and belief goes far both in creating or healing disease. The act of Jesus was simple and like hundreds which he had performed; but its consequences were important, involving the whole question of Sabbath observance. This question was to emerge again shortly in connection with the plucking of grain by the disciples and the healing of the man with the withered hand (Matt. 12:1-14); but thus far this was the first instance in which Jesus' conduct had been called in question. The cured man was ignorant of his benefactor, and when questioned by the Jews could only assert that he had been told to take up his bed and walk. He had not questioned the morality of this burden-bearing on the Sabbath when commanded by one with such power. Jesus meantime had disappeared to avoid a collision with the authorities, but soon after the Healer and the healed met in the temple, and Jesus said to his new friend, "Now that you are made whole, be careful that a worse disaster does not befall you Sin no more." In this, as in other cases, Jesus seeks to trace the connection between sin and suffering. Not that it is always immediate, but it is certain. No disease or sickness springs out of the soil of obedience and holiness. Somewhere in the range of relationship or circumstances the cause of trouble lies in sin. Jesus here as always insists that sin shall cease. It is not the consequences of sin, but sin itself, from which he would deliver men. He does not ask them to compromise, nor to sin less, nor to sin elsewhere, but to sin no more.

The healed man, thus aware of his benefactor, reported the matter to the Jews who had questioned him. They came at once to Jesus with accusations of Sabbath-breaking. But their reproof was based upon the supposition that God wrought in creation six days and rested on the seventh. They believed that the Sabbath rest of God had continued ever since. In this they were like many to-day, who apparently regard God as a distant creator, who, having once provided for the creation and redemption of the world, concerns himself but little with its affairs and abides at an infinite remove rather than indwelling by his presence and Spirit every man who opens his heart to the divine presence. There are apparently even yet those who believe as little in the divine immanence as did the Jews of Jesus' day.



Jesus declared, on the contrary, that the Father had never ceased to work and that his own labors were like those of the Father, continuous and compassionate. This evoked a fresh outburst of indignation, beccause it could be interpreted only as implying the divine Sonship of Jesus, as well as justifying his breaking of the Sabbath. The Jews were quite right in putting this interpretation upon his language. Jesus deliberately asserted his divine character and authority on this and many other occasions. Then continuing, he sets forth still further his intimacy of life and purpose with the Father. What he did was the expression of the Father's will. The two lived in a unity of perfect love and the divine purposes were disclosed to and through Jesus. The miracles which he wrought caused men to marvel, but these were small compared to the greater works which he was yet to accomplish. Clearly he refers here to the superiority of those regenerative works which were to follow the preaching of the gospel, to the mere restorations of health and life. Jesus repeatedly assured the disciples that they should perform greater works than did he, referring to those redemptive agencies for the transformation of human character whose marvelous workings have been the wonder of the ages. No miracle of healing is comparable to the miracle of a redeemed soul, transformed by the grace of God and the indwelling power of the Spirit from faulty conduct and low ideals into the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. In such works as these Jesus receives that honor which belongs first of all to the Father, and which by unity with the Father in character, purpose and power he must evermore share.

But two other results flow from the bestowment of power through Sonship. Jesus is the dispenser of life and of judgment, which stand at the two poles of human destiny. Life is obtained only through Christ, because he alone can explain the method of its obtaining. He came to give life and to give it more abundantly. The whole process of becoming Christlike is a passage from death unto life. Herein lies the secret of eternal life. This is first of all unity with Christ in disposition and purpose. One who becomes a follower of Christ, not in the formal sense, but by becoming an expression of Christ's life in the world, has already within him eternal life. To use Paul's phrase (Col. 3:1), he has risen with Christ into a new life, and this thought of new life to be lived here and now is what Paul means by the resurrection, for neither he nor Christ seem, in these passages, to speak of a resurrection which is not first of all contingent upon the new life of the Christian in the world. But this leads at once to the thought of any necessary transformation in the future, which death may render necessary, and so our Savior assures us that his voice shall be heard by the dead and they shall live, and Paul declares that there is a spiritual body and that death is to be swallowed up in victory. Both, however, clearly indicate that this change is but the natural result of judgment, which is the attitude of disapproval toward the soul that refuses to live in harmony with the divine ideal as expressed in Christ; and such must ever be the attitude of the Son of God toward the indifferent or scornful soul. This attitude in itself is judgment; it is rejection; it is punishment; it is death.

TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 12.

THE JOY IN FINDING THE LOST.

(Luke 15:1-10.)

Perhaps there are few sensations so trying as that which comes over one when something valuable is lost. There is a h lplessness and a sinking of the heart, an empty and fluttering void that involves body and soul alike. This trying condition increases with the value of the lost, and when it is a friend or loved one the vague, weak, powerless grief is multiplied well-nigh beyond endurance.

In proportion to the intensity of such grief is the sense of relief when the lost is found. It seems as if a great weight were lifted from one's chest, the heart fairly raises, the breath comes freer and ones whole soul is exalted. That which seemed gone, hopelessly, forever, is restored; and life itself, in cases where that which is of great value is found, seems to take a new lease.

Suppose a mother, whose son has long been dead while he lived, has given way to appetites and all the tyranny of his lower nature, sees him rise to himself, assert his manhood and shake off the shackles of his sin. Is it wonderful that her joy passes all bounds, and that her love overflows like sunshine on a fair day and fills all the earth around? Was it wonderful that the father of the prodigal made a feast?

There is joy even in the presence of the angels when sinners are found. What is the presence of the angels? Who is there? Who can it be but the Great One who inhabiteth eternity? "The presence of angels" is but a beautiful phrase to avoid the use of that divine name which, through deep reverence, any Jew hesitated to utter. In modern English, "There is joy in the heart of the Father of all over one sinner that repe teth." What efforts, then, shoud we put forth to restore the lost and to bring joy—think of it!—bring joy to the Father's heart.

Much joy is added to one's stock of joy by sharing that joy with others. Sympathy in sorrow or in joy helps one always. See a fair bit of scenery, hear an interesting story and share it with another, and is not the pleasure enhanced? So the woman called in her friends to rejoice when she found the lost piece. Let us work together to find and we shall rejoice together over the found.

A friend told me a story—I may have told it in this column before—of his keeping sheep in his boyhood with his father. One night when they drove the sheep all home into the fold, the father called their names all over and said, "One sheep is gone. We must find him." Down into the great pasture they went, one in one way, the other in the other. At last they found him alone on the far side, trying to get through the fence to another flock in the distance in another pasture. They tried in vain to drive him home. He struggled away toward the fence and the strange flock. Finally the father said, "Come, I know what we will do" And they went back to the fold, loosed the entire flock, and took them all down to the far end of the pasture to bring the one sheep home. And when the great Church of Christ shall learn to go down all of them together, to seek and to save the lost, even one, there shall be increase of joy, and that, too, in the presence of the angels.

Words of Praise bestowed upon Hood's Sarsaparilla by those who have taken it indicate that it is restoring health to thousands of people, and that it will help you also.

Back to the Beginnings.

By F. D. Power, Director.

In our first year's study we had just considered the evil of human creeds. To find the true faith and practice of the church we must go back to apostolic foundations. To know the beginnings of things is of vast importance in reaching a correct understanding of them. The rise of families and empires and movements must be well understood before we can comprehend their genius and character. The universe had its birthday, revelation had its beginnings. Dispensations have had their starting-point and their close. There is no day so full of meaning to a nation as its birthday, as the Fourth of July to the United States; or to society as the birthday of some great institution or great genius, as the 10th of November or the 22nd of February. So the birthday of the Christian institution is one of great significance to us. The history of any being or any movement begins with its beginning. Moses began at the beginning in giving the history of creation. Matthew, Mark, Luke and John began at the beginning in giving the biography of our Lord. Where did Christianity begin? is a great question. We know when the Church of England began, when the Church of Scotland had its origin, when Wesleyanism came into being, but when did Christianity begin—Christianity pure, simple, original, evangelical? When? Is it as old as Adam? as Abraham? as Moses? as John the Baptist? as the birth, death or resurrection of Jesus Christ? What is the answer?

I heard one of the ablest preachers to whom I ever listened, an eminent bishop, declare in the pulpit that the Christian Church began in the Garden of Eden! Christianity neither in its doctrine nor its institution, neither in its faith nor its practice, was instituted in Eden, nor in the time of Moses or John the Baptist. There was not a Christian Church on earth until Jesus Christ was crowned Lord of all. What is Christianity? What is the gospel? It is a symmetrical whole, a well-rounded system of facts and teachings. Even during the public ministry of Christ, the topic of preaching and teaching was the coming reign or kingdom. "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." "On this rock will I build my church." "Some of you standing here shall not taste of death till you see the kingdom coming in power." Pray, "Thy kingdom come." Not yet was the Christian institution established among men and its doors thrown wide to mortals. Not until the ascension and coronation of the Lord Jesus was supreme authority in heaven and earth secured to him, and he sent the great Spirit of the godhead to the national assembly in Jerusalem, and then, on Pentecost, and there, not in Eden, or Samaria, or Rome, or Geneva, but Jerusalem, the Christian Church began.

This was a matter of prophecy To learn the time and place of the beginning of a new institution we have but to go to the prophets. Isaiah and Micah foretold the event, and our Lord himself declared its beginning should be at Jerusalem, and commanded his disciples to go there for its manifestation. The coronation of the Incarnate Word by God the Father, in the presence of all the angels of heaven, was the last act antecedent to the new government. With this the theocracy ceased. Angels, authorities, principalities and powers were subjected to Immanuel and commaded to obey him. The Holy Spirit was sent forth by him, and through his chosen ministry, attested by visible, manifest and sensible gifts, and the annunciation of the sublime fact is made known. This was the beginning, not of the first church, but of the whole church or kingdom of the Lord Messiah. The law was finished, the prophecies fulfilled, the dispensation changed, the kingdom come, and the Christocracy, or reign of the Christ, there and then began.

Do we wish to begin at the beginning? Come here to Jerusalem. Would we study the fulfillment of prophecies? Come here to Jerusalem. Have we desired to behold the unfoldiags, inauguration and establishment of the Kingdom of all kingdoms? Come here to Jerusalem. Are we so reverent for God, so anxious for ourselves, that we must have purity of doctrine, fidelity and practice, genuineness of service in all things as God requires? Come, then, to Jerusalem. Is it possible to take up the gospel just as the apostles left it, receive the ordinances just as our Lord delivered them, discover the church just as it existed in its primitive purity and simplicity, establish ourselves on the eternal rock, just as Saul of Tarsus did and the thousands of that early time and revive once more among men with the glory of its virgin beauty and splendor and truth and force the Christian institution? Yes, come here to Jerusalem.

We cannot find the originial, apostolic, Christian institution anywhere else. We cannot look for it at Rome, Constantinople or Westminster. We cannot expect to restore it from any of the human systems or human institutions since the apostles. We have but one guide through the labyrinth of centuries, creeds and traditions to the beginning of the dispensation of Christ, and that is the Word of the living God. And taking this, we may come and sit at the fountain-head, and know the pure waters that give life and healing to the nations.

Why is the religious world filled to-day with different parties and systems, oftentimes warring against each other and by their wrangling and contradictory teaching causing indifference, and not infrequently the rejection of all religion? Did this state of things begin at the beginning? Was it in any sense tolerated by Christ and the apostles? Has it any sanction in the Word of God to-day? To ask these questions is to answer them.

What did begin at Jerusalem? The Christian institution. What is the Christian institution? The church with its doctrine, ordinances and life. What are the positive or cardinal ordinances of the Christian institution? The Lord's baptism, the Lord's day, the Lord's Supper, the Lord's ministry. What are the marks of apostasy from this position? The Lord's baptism is changed in form to a human substitute and applied to subjects without faith, knowledge or repentance, and its significance is destroyed by the declaration that it has no essential connection with the remission of sins. The Lord's day is not consecrated to the celebration of the Lord's ordinances. The Lord's Supper is not observed in the assemblies of his people on every first day of the week in harmony with the primitive practice of his disciples. The Lord's ministry is not commissioned to preach and teach Jesus Christ as the sole basis of regeneration, Christian union and co-operation. What is the remedy for these departures? A return to the beginning. A restoration of these cardinal positions which enter into the spirituality, sanctity and efficiency of the Christian dispensation. A scriptural understanding of the belief in and submission to the positive ordinances by every one who would enjoy the love of God shed abroad in the heart, and would be a fruitful and efficient member of the body of Christ. A movement back to the spirit, the unity, the practice, the faith, the name, the foundation of the early church—back to Jerusalem.

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC

The best cure for Cough, Weak Lungs, Indigestion, Inward Pains and the ills of the Feeble and Aged. Combining the most active medicines with Ginger, it exerts a curative power over disease unknown to other remedies, and is in fact the most revitalizing, life-giving combination ever discovered. Weak Lungs, Rheumatism, Female Debility and the distressing ills of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys and Bowels are dragging many to the grave who would recover health by its timely use.

Literature.

THE SELF-INTERPRETING NEW TESTAMENT: Compiled and arranged by Ashley S. Johnson, LL.D.; published by the author, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn. Price, prepaid, $2.25. For sale by the author alone.

This book is simply the New Testament without introduction, preface, comment or anything else, except the introduction in connection with the various passages, texts from both the Old and New Testaments, which explain or throw light upon these passages. Instead of a New Testament with references which cites passages from the Old and New Testament to which the reader must turn and read, we have these passages quoted in smaller type in connection with the text, so that there is no disturbance in the reading. It is a capital idea, and the author, so far as we have been able to examine the book, has manifested a wide and discriminating biblical knowledge in making these citations. One is impressed on reading this self-interpreting New Testament with the unity of the Bible, and how all its parts are tied together by a continuity of purpose. It is often said of the Bible in general that it is its own best interpreter, but this saying finds its confirmation and proof in this work. The author has done an excellent service to the cause of biblical knowledge in the preparation of this work, which evidently has cost him no little labor, and we sincerely trust that his labors may be rewarded and the good work in which he is engaged in training evangelists may be strengthened by the generous sale of the book. It is printed on large page, double column, and in clear, bold type, on good paper and is substantially bound in cloth.

REVIEW OF MISSIONARY FIELDS AND FORCES.—It was with great pleasure that I recently read the little volume of the Bethany Courses—"Missionary Fields and Forces," by Bro. Lhamon.

Coming lately from the field, I could not help being struck with the up-to-date-ness of the information contained in it. The author has not only kept himself well informed, but presents the most important features in an interesting, yet condensed form.

One paragraph of the introduction I should like to quote, as it has lately received, in China, remarkable confirmation: "The misionary who goes out with the Bible in his hand and the Holy Spirit in his heart has the whole power of truth and secret of success of the apostolic day."

This equipment, being found sufficient in foreign lands, is reacting upon the churches of our homeland in favor of larger charity, scriptural against speculative teacing, practical piety and Christian union.

This year over one hundred perminent missionaries, representing nearly all the societies in Central China, signed a paper called the Declaration of Unity, agreeing to exalt union in Christ and work in undenominational lines as far as possible.

In the chapters giving the gist of Confucianism and Buddhism the author has accomplished—well, a difficult task even to one who knows them at first-hand, and doubly so to one who has to rely on books for his information.

These chapters with those on Hinduism and Mohamedianism alone are worth the price of the book for reference as clear, interesting statements of the mixed, contradictory beliefs with which the contrast of Christianity is made to stand out in bold relief.

Every friend of missions must rejoice to have this book come before our young people, and the pastor will find here a mine of information for his missionary sermons.

JAS. BUTCHART.

P. S.—The price of this admirable handbook is 25 cents. All orders should be sent to J. Z. Tyler, 798 Republic Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

DID MAN MAKE GOD, OR DID GOD MAKE MAN? By Dr. John P. D. John, ex-president of Depauw University. Frank Caldwell, 929 Udell St., Indianapolis, Ind., publisher. Price, 50 cents.

There are probably no easier replies to the Robt. Ingersoll class of objections to the Bible and to its God, for young men, than those contained in this little book.

KOREAN SKETCHES. By Rev. James S. Gale. Fleming H. Revell, Chicago, publisher. Priee, $1.00.

Primarily this book is a description of things Korean. It is pithy, humorous, interesting, fascinating. There are a number of striking illustrations. It is a fine book for a missionary library for young people.

THE PLEDGE OF ENDEAVOR. By Rev. Wm. M. Campbell, Ph.D. Fleming H. Revell Co , publishers, Chicago, Ill. Price, 35 cents.

For an excellent treatise on the nature, value and strengthening qualities of the Y. P. S. C. E. pledge the above work is a clear, concise, convenient book.

MAGAZINES.

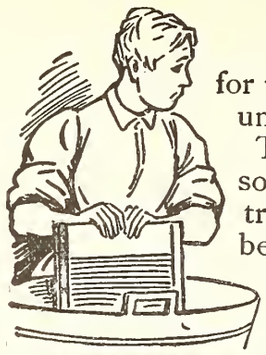
The Record of Christian Work is sparing no efforts to make itself of practical value to ministers and lay workers in giving aids to Bible study. Many of the best known Bible students in this country have been secured as writers for the magazine. Among the articles promised in the near future is one on "The Second Coming of Christ," by Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, of Union Seminary, and among the writers for the coming year are Dr. John Davies, Mr. John Willis Baer, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, D. L. Moody, Rev. F. B. Meyer.

No finer selection of able and timely articles can be found in any of the great magazines for February then is given us in the Atlantic Monthly. The articles ring with the note of leadership where they touch upon national issues and speak with the confidence of master minds in their positions. The Atlantic Monthly is at the forefront in American literature as an educator on great national questions.

In these days of doughty deeds by land and sea—in Cuba and in the Soudan—an article in the February number of the Pall Mall Magazine, by Mrs. E. T. Murray Smith, describing how a great nation honors its naval heroes, should prove of interest. The article is entitled "Naval Heroes in Westminster Abbey," and its author is the historian of the Abbey.

In the February number of the Century General Shafter will tell the story of the Santiago campaign and Lieutenant Hobson will follow his account of the sinking of the "Merrimac" with a narrative of his imprisonment in Morro Castle.

Senator Hoar, in the February Scribner's vigorously defends Garfield from the charge of having been untrue to the interests of John Sherman when he accepted the nomination for the Presidency. Senator Hoar presided over that convention and tells the true story of the nomination. It really turned on Senator Hoar's interrupting Garfield and calling him to order when he was about to object to his name being voted on by the convention.



The January number of the Annals of the American Academy contains the following: "The Growth of Great Cities in Area and Population," by Professor Edmund J. James; "The Final Report of the Monetary Commission," by Mr. F. A. Cleveland; "Wealth and Welfare," Part II., by Professor H. H. Powers; "A Unit in Sociology," by Professsor Albion W. Small, and "A Reply to Professor Small," by Professor S. M. Lindsay. Besides these papers there are the usual departments of Personal Notes, Sociological Notes, Notes on Municipal Government and the Book Department. Philadelpnia, $1.00.

Two articles on subjects of commercial interest will be found in the February Chautauquan. In the first "American Lumber" is discussed by Dr. B. E. Fernow, director of the New York State College of Forestry at Ithaca, whose knowledge of our lumber wealth is extensive and authoritative. The second paper treats of conditions of "Mill Operatives in the South," and is the work of Day Allen Willey.

The Preacher's Helper is the name of an ably edited journal, large magazine form, 48 pages, published monthly at Cleona, Pa., at $1.00 per year. This number contains several ably written, practical articles, well worth the attention of any preacher. The departments of sermon outlines, homiletics, suggestions, are of a high order and very helpful to the preacher.

J. Fischer & Bro., 7 Bible House, N. Y., have published a new musical work entitled "The Juvenile Entertainer," being a collection of harmonious choruses, action and tableau songs, suitable for class and concert. Price, 75 cents.

We have just received the syllabus of a course of six lectures on the history of Christianity, by C. C. Rowlison, S. T. B., in Harvard University, 1895. Bro. Rowlison is now pastor of the Church of Christ at Marshalltown, Iowa. Price of the syllabus, ten cents.

BRONAUGH.

Dr. Geo. W. Bronaugh, of Stanford, Ky., was born in Jessamine County, Ky., Sept. 24, 1821. He graduated in medicine from Transylvania University, Lexington, Ky., in 1843. He was married to Miss Mary Mundy, of Madison County, Ky., March 25th, 1856. To this happy union was given three children, Reuben, Annie R. and Willie, the first of whom only is left to comfort the broken-hearted mother. Suddenly and painlessly the Doctor passed through the gates of death, Jan. 16, 1899. His was a life of devotion to his God and fellowman. Few came so near to loving his neighbors as himself. No man ever had a better neighbor, no cummunity a better citizen, no wife a truer and more affectionate husband, no child a more painstaking and loving father. Sorely shall we miss him. While our loss is irreparable his gain, thanks be to God, is infinite. FRANK W. ALLEN.

Stanford, Ky.

CORRELL.

Clinton Correll recently died at his home in Canton, O., at the age of 53 years. When able to work he was an employee of the Canton Bridge Company. Thirty-two years ago he was married, to which union six children were born. These with their mother survive him. Bro. Correll was baptized at New Berlin, O., at the age of 14 years by Elder Dibble and has since been an active member of the Christian Church. A. E.

HENSHAW.

Horace Henshaw was born near Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 12, 1811, and was married to Martha Montgomery May 1, 1831. They moved to Ohio in 1837 and settled in the town of Stow, where they lived till 1857. Then they moved to Michigan and became charter members of the Church of Christ at Cascade. In 1877 he lost his wife, since which time he has made his home with his daughter, Mrs. R. J. Stow, of Grand Rapids. Although for many years he lived in Grand Rapids he retained his membership and office in the church at Cascade and was faithful in his visits to the church he so much loved. At his last visit, with feeble voice and tearful eyes, he expressed a fear that he would never visit them again. He died at his daugher's home Dec. 1, 1898, at the good old age of 87 years, one month and 18 days. His children, his friends, his kindred in Christ mourn, but not as those who have no hope. The funeral was held at his late home, 525 Jefferson Ave., and was conducted by J. Jay Findley, of Cascade, assisted by E. B. Widger, of Grand Rapids.

Expansion.

W. D. CREE,

Supt. of Subscription Department.

Expansion means growth; and growth should be evident where there is life.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST stands as the exponent of expansion. "Whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap," applies to religious papers as well as to individuals. The truth of the saying is manifested in the growth of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Are you helping?

Our editors admire brevity in the writings of our contributors. This department is also inclined to prefer that letters be not unnecessarily long, but there is one item which we never desire omitted, and that is the post office address of the writer. We have a letter from Lydia Sheneman to which we cannot give proper attention because of such omission. Kindly let us have the address.

This company is pursuing steadily the policy often announced in these columns of supplying the brotherhood with the very best possible journal. It is our fixed purpose to make it creditable to the cause from whatever angle seen. We believe that it is not only possible to combine loyalty to the cause we espouse, literary merit and mechanical skill, but that this should be done in the interest of the Current Reformation. We also give evidence from time to time of our desire to make the subscription price as low as due consideration for the object stated will at all permit. Hence, our price is reduced this year to one dollar and fifty cents. There is one thing, however, that we believe we have no right to do: that is to have one price in one state and another price in another state. Our published price and our "private" price are the same. Our present readers may rest assured that they will not be taxed fifty per cent more than prospective readers for no better reason than that they are old subscribers, and therefore old friends. Whenever we find it possible to make a lower rate we will make it general and print it in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

It is pleasant and helpful to receive words of encouragement in our efforts in any direction. Human nature demands sympathy and companionship. We enjoy, therefore, and are greatly strengthened by the sincere words of appreciation which we receive in our labors of providing a paper which shall meet all the demands of the situation. Here are some of our "grains of comfort;" from the samples you may estimate the generous stock.

"My best wishes for the increased success of your liberal minded and liberty loving paper. I will take pleasure in forwarding its interests wherever my lot is cast." WM. WOODS.

Conyers, Ga.

"I am happy to know we shall have our own history written by such men as you promise for 1899. Make it a book and count me as one subscriber." J. D. GREER.

Mexico, Mo.

"The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in its new form is fine. I took the numbers of the last six months of 1898 and glancing through them saw they would make a valuable and elegant book, if bound. It is useless to tell you what you already know, that the rich and varied contents of such a volume make a library in itself."

THOS. E. CRAIG, printer.

Charleston, Ill.

Publishers' Notes.

J. H. Stark may be aptly called the Chas. M. Sheldon of our brotherhood, with the difference in his favor of more tersely and scripturally telling his readers what Jesus would have them do. J. H. Stark's last book, "Mary Ardmore, or a Test of Faith," is a carefully written and beautifully printed work of 328 pages and interesting from start to finish. It ought to be in every Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor library in America. Any disciple having relations in other churches should buy a copy of this book for them.—Rev. Geo. F. Hall, Decatur, Ill.

"Mary Ardmore, or A Test of Faith," is J. H. Stark's latest literary work and has recently been published by the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo. It is bound in latest style cloth and the price is $1.00, postpaid.

The editor of the Living Church, of Chicago, recently examined Prof. A. Fairhurst's late work, "Organic Evolution Considered," and we take pleasure in giving the following notice as it appeared in that paper:

"It is greatly to be desired that one of the strong advocates of the theory of organic evolution, one of those who are so certain in their own minds that the only truth lies in this direction, would stop long enough from his affirmations to answer a few of the multitude of objections that seem to the ordinary reader to be crucial difficulties. Deeply interested in the subject, and even anxious to accept evolution as true, we have read everything that has been written upon the subject that we could obtain, and we have yet to find any answer to even a few of the many difficulties with which this book is crowded. We imagine that Prof. Fairhurst has had just the same experience. He has marshaled his objections in logical order and put them forth in this book. Now will some one please point out where he is wrong? The work seems very strong and particularly well done. There is no air supporting a theory or refuting an antagonist, but a manifestation of what seems to us the true scientific spirit, a careful examination of all claimed results of investigation, and an honest effort made to weigh them, not making for or against any particular theory, but as very fact.

The universality of Prof. Fairhurst's reading and the broad range of this special examination relieve him from any fair charge of special pleading. A carefully compiled index makes the book a convenient one for reference."

Agents are wanted in each community to sell some of the publications of the Christian Publishing Co. Liberal terms are offered to agents to sell such books as "A Circuit of the Globe," by A. McLean; "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope," by John L. Brandt; "Life of Alexander Campell," by T. W. Grafton; "People's New Testament with Notes," by B. W. Johnson; "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism Examined and Refuted," by D. H. Bays; "Alone With God," by J. H. Garrison, and many others as found in our catalogue. Agents' terms quoted on application to the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds tanght by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which mon bave split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versu petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

GOSPEL MELODIES

REVISED AND ENLARGED.

First Lines of Some of the Best Songs in this Excellent Book

Praise Him! Praise Him!
I love to steal awhile away.
Delay not, Delay not.
Softly and tenderly.
If God has riches given you.
Oh, I want to be still nearer.
Where the billows roll the highest.
There is a land beyond somewhere.
Oh, would to me were only given.
The Bible reveals a glorious land.
The voice of the Savior says come.
The path is set with many a thorn.
Oh, the love of God to me.
List to the song of the reapers.
Night with ebon pinion.
In the presence of our God we meet again.
Preaching Jesus on the way.
I ask not earthly treasure.
Oh, bless the Lord, Oh my soul.
There'll be room enough in heaven.
I am going to Jesus.
Broad is the road that leads to death.
There is a home, a beautiful home.
Attend young friends while I relate.
Peacefully lay her down to rest.
In thy name, Oh, Lord, assembling.
Toiling for Jesus day by day.
How sweet 'tis to know.
When our earthly life is ended.
Just beyond the shad'wy valley.
The Lord's our Rock, in Him we hide
Far beyond the rolling Jordan.
Lead me gently home, Father.
How firm a foundation.
Go on, you pilgrims.
Oh, how lovely! (Anthem.)
List to the voice of the Savior.
In our Father's home above.
There is one thought that cheers my way.
Make channels for the streams of love.
I've found a friend in Jesus.
It is the hour of prayer.
When storm-clouds arise in the sky.
I wonder if any poor sinner will come.
Oh, the wondrous love of Jesus.
See the ranks of sin approaching.
A thousand lords had gathered in the palace of Belshazzar.
Glory and praise to the Lord who died for me.
See! on the cross, the Savior bleeds.
There's a city of light 'mid the stars, we are told.
Just over the river are palaces grand.
Christians, are you growing weary?
There is a rock in a weary land.
O pilgrims, look forward to glory.
When the day is full of gladness.
There is a precious fountain.
Beyond the golden sunset sky.
Do you know a soul that's fainting?
Yes, we have a friend in Jesus.
Come now and let us reason.
When the waves are rolling high.
There is a house not made with hands.
Gone from our home.
I am on my journey to Canaan's happy land.
In thy temple, Lord, we gather.
Christ is knocking at my sad heart.
Let me sing the old song o'er again.
I will tell you an old simple story.
I'll rejoice in the love of Jesus.
There's a beautiful land far beyond the sky.
There's a hand ever ready to lift up all the fallen.
All for Jesus, all for Jesus.
There's a city that is far, far away.
When the trump of God shall sound.
Where are the ones we love fondly?
Teach me thy way.
God of our salvation.
Oh, there is joy in believing.
Praise Him, praise the name of God most high. (Anthem.)
Great is the Lord. (Anthem.)
One sweetly solemn thought.
Make a joyful noise unto the Lord. (Anthem.)
Hear the call to labor for the Lord.
Savior while my heart is tender.
Of the old time I'm thinking.
Twilight is stealing.
At home or away, in the alley or street.
Mother, tell me of the angels.

GOSPEL MELODIES contains several good easy anthems that will please choirs and singing societies. It is the only church music book of its class that does.

REFORMATION OF THE 19th CENTURY

OR NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

A Series of Historical Articles to Run Through the Christian-Evangelist During the Year 1899

I. Introductory Period—1809 to 1819.

BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

This will include those stirring events which occurred in the formative period of our reformatory movement with which the present generation should be thoroughly familiar.

II. From the Organization of the Christian Missionary Society to the Outbreak of the Civil War—1849 to 1861.

BY DR. B. B. TYLER,
Contributing Editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

This period of our history, embracing the first decade of operations under the American Christian Missionary Society, with Jerusalem and Jamacia missions, will be full of interest to readers of to-day.

III. The War Period, rom the Firing on Sumpter up to the Death of Mr. Campbell—1861 to 1866.

BY DR. W. T. MOORE,
Dean of the Missouri Bible College, Columbia.

This is a turbulent period in our country's history, and one that tried most severely the principle we had adopted, of unity in Christ, in spite of differences of opinion. It ends with the death of Mr. Campbell, an event which opponents of the Reformation thought would practically end the movement.

IV. The Period Between the Death of Mr. Campbell and the Organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society—1866 to 1875.

BY T. W. GRAFTON,
Pastor Christian Church, Rock Island, Ill.

This period covers one of those turning-points in our history in which our whole future was involved. The conflict between Christian liberty and strict constructionism, and the conception and trial of the "Louisville Plan" of mission work, enter into this part of our history.

V. The Period from 1875 to the Close of 1899.

1. AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
B. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec. A. C. M. S.

2. FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
A. MCLEAN, Cor. Sec. F. C. M. S.

3. CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.
Miss Lois White, Cor Sec. C. W. B. M.

The closing period in our analysis is the period of expansion. Liberty has triumphed in its contest with legalism, and it manifests its power in the formation of new organizations through which to carry on a more aggressive work. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society came to birth, and the old Mother Society through their aid, soon comes to the consciousness of its own mission. The history of these societies will be given by their respective corresponding secretaries.

The whole series will be under the editorial supervision of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Series begins in the issue of Jan. 12th. Subscribe at once and secure the entire series.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The sudden death of General Garcia in Washington a few weeks ago complicated the problem of making a satisfactory settlement with the Cuban insurgents and securing their disarmament, but the desired agreement has now been reached. A sum approximating $3,000,000 is to be divided among the native soldiers, and they are to surrender their arms and disband. This amount is based on Gen. Garcia's estimate. The money had been appropriated to be used at the President's discretion, and negotiations were proceeding favorably when the death of Gen. Garcia left Gen. Gomez the undisputed leader of the Cuban army. Under orders from him the Cuban Commission in Washington raised its demand from three to fifty-seven millions, the latter estimate being based on a demand for payment of an army of 40,000 for three years' service at U. S. regular army rates. For himself Gomez claimed the modest sum of $33,000, the salary of a lieutenant-general for that period. The Cuban army is as rich in officers of high rank as it is poor in everything else, and recruiting to the ranks became more rapid when the news of this demand was circulated than it had been when the war was on. In addition to the preposterous extravagance of these demands, Gomez insisted that the payment should be made, not by U. S. paymasters to the individual soldiers upon proof of their services, but in a lump sum to the colonel of each regiment, who would settle with the officers and men under him as cheaply as possible and pocket the change.

Such wild demands as these seriously embarrassed the policy of conciliation and threatened to defeat it. But as the result of a visit from Mr. Porter, the President's representative, Gomez has declared his willingness to accept the offer of $3,000,000, though he still thinks it insufficient, and try to make it go as far as possible. The money is to be placed to the order of Gen. Brooke, at Havana, immediately and the distribution will be effected by American officers, assisted by Cuban officers. The army, upon payment, shall be disarmed and disbanded and the committee on distribution shall take steps to get permanent employment for the ex-soldiers. It is distinctly understood that "the sum paid to each man shall not be regarded as part payment of salary or wages due for service rendered, but to facilitate the disbandment of the army, as a relief of suffering and as an aid in getting the people to work." Gen. Gomez' previous course of action has not been such as to leave him free from all suspicion of mercenary motives. He has, upon occasion, sulked in his tent, while the insurrection was in progress and before the United States had declared war, and refused to return to the fight until his countrymen had provided him with considerable sums of money. At present, good sense, if not patriotism, has triumphed over avarice, but his reputation has had a narrow escape.

Gen. Eagan got into trouble for couching his official testimony in objectionable language. Gen. Miles is very likely to be called to account for giving to the newspapers, in strong but unobjectionable language, statements which ought to have been reserved for official testimony to the Board of Inquiry. In an authorized interview in a New York daily Gen. Miles reiterates his assertion that the beef furnished to the troops was not only useless but dangerous, and states that the same sort of beef is still being supplied. He says: "The beef sent to our soldiers was loaded and saturated with chemicals, various acids, which made them sick and filled the men's systems with poison, unfitting them for fighting or campaign work. Those who were in camp suffered even more than the men in the field." The testimony of regimental commanders, substantiating these charges, has been published in the newspaper, but has never been submitted to the commission. The only excuse for not bringing the case with the evidence before the commission is a frank avowal on the part of Gen. Miles that he has little confidence in the sincerity of the commission. Even Gen. Miles' friends feel that, by this abrupt change of venue from the President's Board of Inquiry to the daily press, the commanding general is guilty of a grave irregularity for which he may, perhaps, be answerable on the charge of "conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline." The same rule which demanded that Gen. Eagan should confine his defense to the orderly and legitimate processes provided by the regulations demands also that Gen. Miles shall make and prove his charges in the same orderly fashion and before the appointed body. Gen. Miles is not open to the charge of "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman," but so far as "conduct prejudicial to good order" is concerned it is surely as disorderly for the commanding general to ignore the appointed tribunal, carry the case into the public print and transform a military investigation into a general army scandal as it was for the commissary-general to pour vituperation into the ears of the commission when he should have given testimony. The President does not like Gen. Miles' course, and it is reported that another Board of Inquiry will be appointed to consider his case when the present commission has finished its work.

The Army Reorganization bill has been passed by the House, raising the strength of the standing army from 25,000 to 100,000 men. The bill, as originally presented by the committee, underwent several important modifications before it could command a majority of the House. With its rigid provision for a strength of 100,000 men, it had the opposition of some expansionists as well as of all the anti-expansionists. All debates nowadays come around to a discussion of the expansion issue, and much of the debate on this bill was directly on that topic. The unanimous support of the expansionists was gained by an amendment giving the President discretionary power to cut down the number to a minimum of 50,000, by reducing infantry companies and cavalry troops to only sixty men each. There was also a reduction in the proposed number of staff officers. The most important amendment of all, from the moral standpoint, was that abolishing canteens, and prohibiting the sale of liquor in camps. This is a measure for which the temperance reformers have long fought and its enactment will remove what has been perhaps the most conspicuous blot on our military system.

One of the most aggressive of the newer trusts is that which now exercises practical control and is rapidly gaining complete possession of the print-paper mills of the country. Within the last ten days the International Paper Co. has acquired fourteen mills, and the others for which it is now negotiating with every probability of speedy success will give this company control of the total output east of the Rocky Mountains as well as control of all the available tracts of spruce timber from which the pulp is made for this class of paper. The operations of this trust are aided by the fact that there is an import duty on print-paper and pulp under the Dingley law. When that law went into effect two years there was an immediate increase in the price of paper amounting in the aggregate to $2,000,000 for the first year. If the paper-making industry was once an "infant," needing protection, that time has passed. The International Paper Co., which is reaping a rich harvest here where it is protected, is successfully competing with foreign manufacturers in the open markets of England, Australia and Japan. Under these circumstances it is not probable that these same foreign manufacturers will be able to do business enough here, in spite of distance and tariff, to make the tax reliable as a revenue-producing measure. The removal of the tax, or better still, placing paper and pulp on the Canadian free list, would have four desirable results: (1) It would check this trust more effectually than any direct anti-trust legislation could, by widening the field of competition. (2) It would relieve the strain upon our supply of available spruce timber, which is in danger of exhaustion. (3) It would relieve the publishers and indirectly the readers of books, newspapers and magazines, of a tax of about $2,000,000 annually—a tax upon intelligence paid, not into the United States Treasury, but into the treasury of the paper trust. (4) It would be a valuable concession to our Canadian neighbors, and so would contribute toward the establishment of reciprocal trade concessions.

The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives has decided that members who accepted commissions in the army thereby forfeited their seats in Congress. It will be remembered that the question first attracted attention when Gen. Wheeler's right to resume his seat was challenged. His popularity would have carried him through if anything could, but of course no man's personal popularity can have any bearing on his constitutional right to occupy a seat in Congress. The question was raised whether the forfeiture, if it applied to those who had served in the army, would not also apply to those who had held positions on the Postal, Industrial, Hawaiian and Canadian Commissions during recent months. Some members of the committee held that service in the army, so far as the question of forfeiture of congressional seats is involved, but the majority of the committee reported that only those who had held army commissions had vacated their seats. The same question has been raised in the Senate regarding senators who are members of the Hawaiian Commission. The Senate Judiciary Committee has not made its report and perhaps never will. Nobody has much heart in pushing the case or any special desire to see the pluralists in this instance ejected. They belong to both political parties and it cannot easily become a party question. The solution sought is one which will do justice to the constitutional point involved, prevent the establishment of a dangerous precedent and leave the present case just as it stands.

The officer in Shafter's army who did not receive a brevet for valuable services and conspicuous bravery is a lonesome man. One is tempted to recall the fictitious Mr. Clay, who modestly explained the decoration which he had received from the Sultan by saying that the Sultan gave them to his callers instead of cigars. One also wonders how bravery could have continued to be so conspicuous when everybody was conspicuously brave and valuable. Few will be disposed to criticise this free distribution of rewards in so far as it is a testimonial to the personal courage of the men rewarded and of the army as a whole, but the question still arises whether those military virtues would not have been more effectually rewarded by a less lavish and more discriminating distribution of brevets. If there is a fault here (and the data at hand do not warrant positive statement that there is), it lies not withthe brevet board, which really exercises but little discretionary power, but with the commanding officers who furnish all the evidence and whose lists of candidates are forwarded to Congress practically unchanged with the recommendation of the brevet board.

Not content with singing the song of imperial Britain, Rudyard Kipling has assumed the task of American poet laureate and written the lay of imperial America. It is a welcome from England to America as the latter enters upon her new career as a civilizer of distant and reluctant savages; a warning of the price of that career—it will cost us the best of our sons, bound to exile "to serve your captives' need," and "it may bring the hate of those we help;" an exhortation not to allow the hardness of the task to deter us from entering upon it. This is "the white man's burden"—to toil without respite or recompense, to endure exile in the tropics or the artics, to "fight the savage wars of peace," to serve the tribes as their master when it would be pleasanter to let them alone, to give his sons, to give his blood and to lay down his bones by the wayside—all that these strange and savage people may be lifted "slowly toward the light." As a statement of what we are going to do, now that we seem about to enter upon an era of expansion, Mr. Kipling's poem is not of great value. But it has great significance as a statement of our duty as it appears to the English writer who has been the most profound as well as the most impressive spokesman of British imperialism. Mr. Kipling believes in imperialism—not mere expansion, but genuine imperialism—no for national aggrandizement, not as a national luxury, but as the prime duty which the Anglo-Saxon race owes to the world. The performance of this duty means, not self-gratification, but self-sacrifice. No one has shown a more vivid conception of the price of empire and admiralty than has Mr. Kipling in his "Song of the Dead," in "A Song of the English," but he believes that it is duty and that it is worth the price.

The center of interest in the senitorial contests is being rapidly narrowed down to Pennsylvania, but even there the interest is in danger of waning through undue prolongation of the deadlock. Quay has gained one vote during the past week and now lacks only thirteen votes. Every one knows that Mr. Quay lacks several other things also, namely, all of the virtues and most of the graces, but these deficiencies will not count if he can get the thirteen votes. The deadlock in Pennsylvania seems to be a timelock set for sometime in the next century, or a combination lock of which nobody knows the combination. In Montana the fight ended when Mr. Clarke's enemies agreed to drop the investigation of the bribery charges and he was easily elected. Joseph V. Quarles was the winner in Wisconsin, the four other Republican candidates withdrawing in his favor. In California the deadlock still continues. Mrs. U. S. Grant is taking great interest in the election and is sending messages of thanks to the members who vote for her son, who is one of the promising candidates.

A good deal of nonsense is from time to time finding its way into print in regard to the case of Mr. Roberts, bigamist and Congressman-elect from Utah. Petitions have been circulated and articles and editorials have been published protesting against the seating of Mr. Roberts on the ground that he is a leading member of the Mormon Church and a tool of its priesthood, and on the ground that his admission would be a signal "victory for Mormonism over Congress, a notice that Mormon political methods and social scandal are safe from national interference." If these were the sole objections there would be absolutely nothing for Congress to do but to accept Mr. Roberts as a regularly elected member. The question of his religion is not to the point, and even to mention it gives color to the Mormon claim that they are being persecuted, in the person of Mr. Roberts, by unconstitutional discrimination against their religion. The case will be far stronger if it is stated without reference to religion. Mr. Roberts is a polygamist by his own confession. He is, therefore, not a citizen of the United States, for the grant of citizenship at the time of the admission of Utah as a state was conditioned upon the abolition of polygamy. He is likewise disobedient to the laws and constitution of the state which has elected him. This of itself ought to be enough to justify Congress in declaring his election invalid. But if it were not enough and if there were no constitutional ground for rejecting his election, Congress has still the power to expel a member for gross immorality and there ought to be no difficulty in classifying polygamy under this head.

The increasing hostility of the Filipinos toward the American troops in the Philippine Islands culminated in an attack on the troops at Manila on last Saturday night. The fighting continued through the night and all of Sunday, resulting in a loss of twenty-two of our soldiers and more than one hundred wounded. The loss of Filipinos is said to be very great. The insurgents were defeated at every point and driven to the country. Many of their suburban villages were captured. The troops under Gen. Otis were assisted greatly by the use of the war-ships under Dewey. Owing to the restlessness of the insurgents and the growing insolence of their leader, Aguinaldo, a conflict has been feared by our authorities at Washington for some time, but it was hoped that an early ratification of the Paris Treaty would prevent the battle. But now that the attack has been made the impression in Washington is that the battle will make sure of the ratification of the Paris Treaty, to be voted on to-day, and that the government should and will proceed to put down all rule and all authority in the Philippine Islands save that of the United States only.

The peace treaty was ratified by the Senate on Monday, the day set for the vote. The vote stood fifty-seven for and twenty-seven against the treaty, which gave a plurality of three votes in its favor. Of the six senators who were absent four were for and two against the treaty. Some of the doubtful senators declared in favor of the ratification of the treaty at the last moment, thus giving more votes in its favor than was counted on by some of the leading friends of the treaty. The budget appropriation, carrying the $20,000,000 to be paid to Spain within ninety days after the ratification of the treaty has also been passed. It only remains, therefore, for the Cortes of Spain to act and the $20,000,000 to be paid, and the drama of our late war with Spain will be at an end. The policy of the administration toward the Philippine Islands is not yet known, but a protectorate over the islands is foreshadowed rather than a colonial government. However, it is evident that the President will do nothing hastily in the matter.

Further developments concerning the battle with the insurgents at Manila on last Sunday tell of terrible slaughter of the Filipinos. The news at this writing say that two thousand Filipinos were killed, three thousand were wounded and five thousand were taken prisoners. The greatest slaughter of Filipinos was in their trenches and from Dewey's gunboats. The revised list of casualties in the ranks of the American troops is also greater than at first reported. The number of American soldiers killed is now said to be fifty instead of twenty-two, and three hundred wounded instead of one hundred and fifty. The reports bestow great praise upon the American troops for their heroism and bravery in resisting and driving back the attacking Filipinos. This has been a severe lesson to Aguinaldo for the ingratitude he has shown to those who were and would have continued to be his friends and protectors but for his fanatical aspirations for power and for wealth. As for liberty he opposed the brightest and only prospect that his people had by his opposition to and attack upon the American flag in Manila.

THE FULLNESS OF THE GOSPEL.

No one can fail to be impressed in reading the New Testament with the high conception which the inspired writers possessed of the divine fullness and completeness of the Christian system. There is a wealth of language and imagery employed to exalt Christ and the fullness of salvation in Him that would seem, in our modern times, to border on the extravagant. To these writers it would seem that through Christ the very gates of heaven had been opened to men, and that those who accepted Him and His proffered salvation already had citizenship in heaven. They had fellowship with God the Father, Jesus Christ the Son, and with the Holy Spirit the Comforter. By means of prayer heaven's richest treasures were accessible, and in union with Christ the believer could accomplish all things.

It must be confessed that we have allowed this high ideal of Christianity to be modified, restricted and impoverished until it appears to be a very different thing from that which the first Christians enjoyed, described and commended to the world. In the first place, we have limited much of the divine power of which we read in the New Testament to the apostolic age, and have marked it "miraculous." In this way we have sought to harmonize the difference between the marvelous achievements wrought by the first generation of Christians and the meagerness of results now in the great body of the church. Another tendency has been to limit the scope of Christianity to a mere section of human interests, which we call spiritual, ruling out the whole realm of man's meterial wants as belonging to a different category. In the early age of the church this does not seem to have been the case. Christianity was supposed to be an antidote for every ill, and Christ was Savior of the bodies as well as of the souls of men. Another class of thinkers have sought to eliminate the supernatural from Christianity and reduce it to a purely human plane. As a result of all this philosophizing, tampering and trimming, we have an emasculated Christianity as it is received in the minds of a large number of the professed Christian people of to-day.

The result of this process is seen in the numberless substitutes or offshoots of Christianity which have sprung up in modern times to meet certain real or fancied needs, as sprouts grow up about the trunk of an unhealthy tree. We believe that many of these modern religious organizations, including the various schools of "divine healing," "faith cure" and "Christian science," are to be attributed to our impoverished and emasculated Christianity. Men instinctively feel that the Christianity as taught by the different divisions of the church does not meet the demands of the New Testament, nor answer to all the needs o fthe human heart and body, and they have sought to remedy this difficulty in such movements as those to which we have referred. No doubt, many of the advocates of these movements carry their theories to hurtful extremes and give an undue emphasis to the healing of bodily ills as compared with the needs of the soul. And yet, it must be confessed that these needs are very real and that if Christianity has nothing to offer for them, we must not be surprised to see men looking elsewhere for relief. In our judgment, after much reflection upon the subject, the only remedy for these extreme theories and hurtful tendencies is a return to the fullnes of divine life and power which Christianity possessed in its original purity.

Much more can be accomplished by prayer than many of us have yet dreamed of. We are in much closer connection with God and with the spiritual world than many seem to suppose. We have not a doubt that if Christians of to-day were to put away their worldliness, their skepticism, cleanse themselves from all impurities and consecrate themselves to the service of God, we should still see mighty wonders upon earth, and such marvels of power as would be most convincing to the skeptics of our day. As long as we are compelled to point men back 1900 years for unmistakable tokens of God's power and presence in the world, our Christian life will be lacking in evidential value. We believe God is working in the world to-day if we only had faith to discern it, and we believe he is able and willing to accomplish wonderful things through his church now if we would put away our carnality, our strife, our contentions, our idle speculations, and follow Jesus Christ in singleness of heart and purpose.

These are not words of fanaticism. We are not pleading for any new pretense or claim of modern miracle-working, nor are we seeking to apologize for any such movements that exist. We are pleading for the restoration of primitive Christianity in fact as well as in form, in power as well as in theory. We believe this is what the world needs. It is in the exact line of the historic plea of our fathers to restore to the world a purer, a simpler, a diviner, a more effective and resistless Christianity than that in the modern church. And this must be realized before the world is conquered for Christ.

Some Christians give as if the grand cause of missions were a tramp at the back door of our churches, and only needed a few nickels or some soup!

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY NEW TESTAMENT.

It is a singular fact that the race which has in modern times given to each of the tongues and tribes of all the other races the Word of God in its own vernacular has not seen fit to do as much for its own! We are reading our Bibles in the English of three centuries ago, while Hottentots, Kaffirs, Fijians and the rest are reading it in the tongues and dialects wherein they were born! The idioms and archaic forms of the time of King James, imbedded in our Scriptures, have become a kind of sacred English in which the Holy Spirit must of necessity express himself to the modern Anglo-Saxon. To such an extent has this been the case that all attempts at Bible-making have been revisions of revisions and versions of versions, leaving translations from the original into languages and dialects as they are now spoken to be made for the sole benefit of the heathen! The Holy Spirit expressed himself in colloquial Aramaic and vernacular Greek in the time of Christ and the apostles, and it has occurred to a company of English scholars that "English as she is spoke" might not be an unworthy medium through which to give the people of England and America the Word of God in the New Testament. Part first, consisting of the five historical books, has just been issued from Mowbray House, London, at the extremely low price of eighteen pence.

This is a remarkable translation, and perfectly fascinating from beginning to end in its fresh and vivid English. Open it where you will and the eye is riveted on familiar scenes and passages which have been invested with quite a new and charming interest. Unlike the Revised Version, it does not lean on other translations or retain archaic terms unsuitable to modern English. If there is an apparent lack of dignity in some of its renderings, it only results from the use of phrases and idioms perfectly admissible in the literature of our own day. We are apt to forget that the antique flavor of our English Bible is purely adventitious. It was the common tongue of three centuries ago, and has been made more sacred by usage and the lapse of time.

It is clear at a glance that no pains have been spared in the production of this book. In addition to the selection of modern language the translators, working upon a critical text, have endeavored to give the true meaning of the original in passages where this has been commonly missed. The scholarship that underlies the translation is delightfully unobtrusive. It is a fine instance of art concealing art. Critical questions have been carefully studied, and in many cases the happy selection of a single word marks the result of elaborate exegetical study. To add to the readable character of the book, the old but not original divisions into chapters and verses are only indicated by figures in the margin, while the narratives are divided into sections with paragraphs, and the conversational parts are set in broken lines in accordance with our usual methods of printing books. Inset headings further break up the page and greatly increase the utility and attractiveness of the work. By no means the least valuable feature is the printing of citations in italics, with references in foot notes. Thus, for the first time, the reader discovers how frequently the Old Testament is echoed in the New.

While not a paraphrase, this is by no mean a word-for-word translation. It is by design that the idioms of the original are rendered by their nearest equivalents in idiomatic English. This, beyond a doubt, is correct translating, if the object aimed at is to convey the impression intended by the authors. There is a temptation in this method, at times, to translate an explanation into the text, as though it were the undoubted meaning, when this may be opened to question; but the gain is so great that some risk must be run. In many instances the novel phrase lights up an obscure passage with a flash of correct significance; in many others it makes the narrative start into new life.

Mark comes first as the earliest written Gospel. Here we light on such expressions as the following:

A man under the power of a wicked spirit (1:23);

Jesus' heart was moved (verse 41);

Then Jesus immediately sent him away with urgent injunctions (verse 43)

—a careful rendering of a difficult Greek phrase;

When they had made an opening they let down the mat on which the paralyzed man was lying (2:4);

Levi, Alphæus' son, sitting in the tax offi e (verse 14):

I did not come to invite the pious, but the godless (verse 17);

"the consecrated bread"—for "the shew-bread" (verse 26). The golden rule is rendered:

Always, then, treat others as you would like them to treat you; that, indeed, is both the Law and the Prophets (Matt. 7:12).

Of Zacchæus we read:

So he ran on ahead and climbed up into a mulberry tree (Luke 19:4).

Instead of the meaningless "Hosannah," "Hosannah in the highest," of our versions, we have the cry of the people at the entrance into Jerusalem translated:

God bless him.

God bless him from on high (Mark 11:9, 10).

What could be more exquisite than this rendering of the story of the raising of Jairus' daughter:

"Before he had done speaking, some people came from the house of the president of the synagogue and said: 'Your daughter is dead! Why should you trouble the Teacher any more?' But Jesus overhearing what they were saying said to the president of the synagogue: 'Do not be afraid: only have faith!' And he allowed no one to accompany him except Peter, James and John, James' brother. Presently they reached the president's house, where Jesus saw a scene of confusion—people weeping and wailing incessantly. 'Why is there this confusion and weeping?' he said, on entering. 'The little child is not dead; she is asleep.' They began laughing at him; but he sent them all out, and then took the child's father and mother and his companions and went in where she was lying. Taking her hand, Jesus said to her, 'Taleitha, koum!'—the meaning of which is, 'Little girl, I am speaking to you; get up.' The little girl stood up immediately and began walking about, for she was twelve years old. Directly they saw it, they were utterly astounded; but Jesus repeatedly cautioned them not to let any one hear of it, and told them to give her something to eat."

Much else might be said of other characteristics of this charming work, and something by way of criticism on a few points, but space does not permit in this review. It is not likely that this translation will supersede the older versions either in the realm of English literature or in the usages of public worship. Many will cherish and refuse to give up the familiar phrases of the old classic Scriptures, associated with precious memories and the deepest experiences of life; but for the common people to be able to read the New Testament in their language will be an unspeakable advantage. Old narratives are clothed with a new realism that will come home to the hearts of the people with peculiar freshness and charm. For children and young people this version will be of great value. Read in a mission service or in the Sunday-school, it will present the gospel stories with singular clearness and force. It will invest the book with a new interest to the ordinary reader. The writer gave his people a taste of its quality last Sunday, and it created quite a sensation in the congregation. Many of the people came up at the close of the service and said, "We want to get that book." It has not yet appeared in this country, but assuredly it will be here before long.

ANTI-IMPERIALISTIC LITERATURE.

The Anti-Imperialist League, of Washington, D. C., has been flooding this office, and, presumably, the offices of all other religious and secular journals of the country, with choice excerpts from the sermons of anti-imperialist preachers of the East. We are going to preserve these sermons for future reference. They will make very interesting reading, say a quarter of a century hence. These good men mean well, no doubt, but they have allowed themselves to be worked up into a condition bordering on hysterics in contemplating the awful results to follow the ratification of the Treaty with Spain, and the acceptance, on our part, of the responsibility thrust upon us by the recent war. These preachers tell us that the Constitution forever prohibits this government from extending its authority over neighboring islands and peoples for the purpose even of bringing them into a condition of self-help and self-government. This would be hard on the Constitution if it were true; but happily it is not true, as the whole history of this country proves. Of course, it is a very serious question as to what is best to do with the Philippines; but that the ratification of the Treaty commits this government to any particular method of dealing with them is what we have steadily denied.

John Bach McMaster, Professor of American History in the University of Pennsylvania, in an article on "The Dread of Expansion," in the Outlook, quotes extracts from the speeches of senators against the ratification of the Louisiana Purchase, and also against the establishment of a territorial government in Oregon. The anti-expansionists in those days saw nothing but ruin and disaster in extending the limits of the United States territory beyond the Mississippi River, which some regarded as the natural boundary line; and others still more radical were willing to go as far as the summit of the Rocky Mountains, but there they declared that God Himself had erected a limit to the Western extent of the country. "Sir," exclaimed Senator McDuffie, of South Carolina, "does any man seriously suppose that any state which can be formed at the mouth of the Columbia River, or in any of the inhabitable parts of that territory, will ever become one of the states of this Union? . . . . Even in the most sanguine days of my youth I never conceived the possibility of embracing within the same government people living 5,000 miles apart!" Further on he said: "Why, all the wealth of the Indies would be insufficient to construct a railroad to the mouth of the Columbia. You will have to tunnel through mountains 500 or 600 miles in extent!" Besides all that, the Senator said the country wasn't worth anything when you got there. "Why, sir, of what use will this be for agricultural purposes? I would not for that purpose give a pinch of snuff for the whole territory!" The whole speech will make very interesting reading for the citizens of the Pacific Coast states.

There is, in our judgment, more genuine, pure, unselfish religion in the following poem by Rudyard Kipling—his latest message to America—than in all the anti-imperialistic, sermonic literature with which the country has been flooded. It recognizes such a thing as the moral obligation of stronger nations in lifting up the weaker and helpless peoples to a higher civilization and to a condition of self-help. This is truly "The White Man's Burden:"

Take up the White Man's burden—
Send forth the best ye breed—
Go, bind your sons to exile
To serve your captives' need;
To wait, in heavy harness,
On fluttered folk and wild—
Your new-caught sullen peoples,
Half devil and half child.

"SEND US THE GOSPEL A LITTLE FASTER."

A woman dying in India said to the missionary with her last breath: "Do ask your people to send us the gospel a little faster. Tell them we suffer, we die, with no one to pity, with no one to help. Do ask them to send the gospel a little faster." Some ill people sent to a missionary several times to come and teach them. He was not able to go. They said to him: "We die like beasts and are buried like dogs; ought you to neglect us?"

It is almost nineteen centuries since Pentecost. Even now not more than one-third of the race have heard the message of salvation. Each hour of the day 2,700 die without hope because without God. In thirty years a whole generation passes away. Two-thirds of these never had a chance to hear the truth as it is in Jesus. They do not know that he gave himself for them that he might redeem them from all iniquity and purchase unto himself a people for his own possession, zealous of good works.

Has not the church been able to make a better showing than this? Could she not have carried the gospel to every kindred and tongue and tribe and people on the globe before this time? Lord Shaftsbury gave it as his opinion that in the last hundred years the church has had the men and the money to do this many times over. A veteran missionary on his deathbed expressed it as his conviction that the Church of Christ was able to evangelize the whole human family in twenty years, if she were what she should be. If the whole body of believers were enlisted, if in every heart there was an unfaltering enthusiasm and an inflexible determination, the thing could be done.

A few are doing their part and doing it nobly. Some of these go out; others give to support them. There are churches whose heart's desire and prayer to God is that the gospel of his grace may be carried to all the ends of the earth. If this could be said of all, it would not be necessary for those who sit in darkness to ask that the gospel be sent to them a little faster. The whole earth would be filled with a knowledge of the glory of the Lord.

As a religious people we are doing something in this direction. We are doing five times as much as we did fifteen years ago; we are doing twice as much as we did five years ago. But even now we are not begun to do all that we are able to do. More than two-thirds of the churches stand aloof; three-fourths of the million members have no part or lot in this matter. From every field requests come for more workers. If the churches would do their part we would be able to man the present stations and to open many more. In this great and notable year there should be an advance all along the line. There should be decided gains both in the number of contributing churches and in the number of contributors in the churches that are already enlisted. The increase should be by leaps and bounds.

Editor's Easy Chair.

There are days in one's life that are weighted with unusual gravity. Among these, and, perhaps, the most significant of all, is the anniversary of one's birth. It is scarcely possible for a thoughtful person to pass one of these milestones on life's journey without pausing to ask himself some very serious questions. This is particularly true of us as we grow older and the milestones seem to come more frequently. After the half-century mark has been passed, the years glide by with great rapidity. It is said that sailors on the sea drink to their friends behind them until they pass a halfway point, and then they drink to the friends that are on the other side. It is, no doubt, true of most persons who have a well-grounded hope concerning the future, that after the meridian of life has been passed, they naturally think more of the country which they are approaching, and where so many of their friends have gathered and are gathering. We ought not, however, to lose any interest in the life that now is, and in the movements that are affecting the condition of the world and the progress of the kingdom of God.

This is written on the 57th anniversary of the editor's birth. It may possibly be of some interest to our younger readers to know how the world looks to a man of that age, and what effect this lapse of time has had upon his views of life. In the first place, let us say that it seems to us that it is greatly worth while to live. As the years have gone by, and we have come more and more to understand the vast significance of life and the wonderful possibilities of the human soul, we have less sympathy with that disposition which asks, "Is life worth living?" We feel that it is a glorious thing to live, especially in an age like this, where such mighty movements are in progress, and when the whole world seems to be getting so close together. But along with this feeling, the conviction grows that the main thing, the chief concern of human life, is the development of character. The attainment of wealth or of positions of influence and power among our fellowmen are not the chief ends of our being. Indeed, they are not ends at all; they are only means to an end; and that end is the development of character and the accomplishment of good for our fellowmen. But if poverty and adversity accomplish this end better, then welcome poverty and adversity.

We suppose it is a rule, at least, that age tends to the cultivation of charity and larger sympathy with our fellowmen. In our earlier years, we may be able to pass wholesale condemnation on all who disagree with us, but the soul that keeps close to God comes to understand Him better, and to know that "there is a wideness in his mercy like the wideness of the sea," and he feels kindly toward all his fellowmen. He has more pity for even the poor slaves of appetite and passion, and learns to look upon them with something of the compassion that moved the heart of the Son of God when he was here in the flesh. We must confess to a greater love for humanity, in spite of all its weaknesses and frailties, than we felt in our younger years. We have also large hope for it. We have learned to know that in all men there is a streak of good, and that in every heart there is left something that responds to the love of God if we can only find the key that unlocks it. Christ knew the sin of this world as no other has ever known it, and yet he was a sublime optimist. He saw the good in men where others saw only evil. He did not despair of humanity, but believed, to the last, that when men came to understand his mission to this earth, and his love for men, that they would all be drawn unto Him.

From our present point of view, the most blessed life, the life fullest of joy and happiness, is the one that is lived in the sunshine of God's presence and is full of service for God and for humanity. Looked at from the angle of vision we now occupy, a childlike faith in God and in his Word is the most rational thing in the world, and doubt and distrust the most unreasonable, the most barren of good results. At 57, if a man has lived a Christian life many years, he finds his faith to be quite independent of many props and arguments which in his younger life seemed to him very important; but if he is a wise man he will not destroy these props as long as others may find them useful. A lantern is a very helpful guide to one who walks in darkness, but it is quite unnecessary when the splendor of the noonday sun shines full upon us. And so, as the light of God's presence falls increasingly about us, as we near the borderland, we can no more doubt the reality of God and of the future life than we can doubt the reality of the sun and its effects upon the earth. Indeed, the spiritual life now seems to be the main thing. The fleshly life is only an incident, a passing phase in human experience. The wants of the body are subordinate. "Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

To sum up our experience in a few phrases: Love and reverence God. Love and help your fellowmen. Trust God and obey Him. Believe in Christ and follow Him. Be charitable toward all men. Be patient; it takes time. Be hopeful; God lives. Be humble, for only God is great. Live in the Spirit, for that is highest. Keep the body in subjection, for that is servant. Be loyal to your conscience, the witness in every man of God's presence. So living, the flight of years can only hasten the fulfillment of our loftiest ideals, our fondest hopes, our most divine aspirations.

Hour of Prayer.

THE HOLY SPIRIT IN MISSIONS.

(1:8; 13:1-5; 16:6-10.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Feb. 15th, 1899.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The Holy Spirit selects the missionaries, endues them with power for service, and guides them in their labors.

[NOTE: Three good readers might be asked, beforehand, to read the three Scripture passages cited above and to state the points brought out in each passage concerning the action of the Holy Spirit in relation to missions.]

The book of Acts is sometimes called the "book of conversions." It might well be called the Acts of the Holy Spirit. If one reads the entire book with the single thought before his mind as to the agency of the Holy Spirit in relation to the growth of the church and the spread of the gospel, he will be surprised at the prominence given to the subject. It would be an excellent thing to read the book at one or two sittings with that thought in mind, and with a pencil and paper marking down the passages and the thought.

In the very first sentence of the book of Acts we learn that the Great Commission itself was given by Christ "through the Holy Spirit." He it was who inspired the vision of world-wide conquest of the gospel of Christ.

In the fifth verse we learn that while John's disciples were baptized in water Christ's disciples were to be baptized in the Holy Spirit. This was the distinction John himself pointed out between his own ministry and that of Jesus.

In the eighth verse is recorded Christ's definite promise to his chosen ones: "But ye shall receive power when the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and Samaria, and in the uttermost part of the earth." Vain would it have been for even these first disciples to have undertaken the great work of evangelizing the world without the power of the Holy Spirit. Note the difference between the conduct of the apostles before and after they had received the endowment of power. Before that event they were halting, hesitating, fearful, with their material conceptions of the kingdom of God yet lingering with them. After they received the Holy Spirit they were fearless, outspoken, heroic defenders and exponents of Christ's spiritual reign among men.

The question is certain to be raised with some as to whether this promise of the power of the Spirit is to be limited to the apostles and to the first age of the church, or whether it is a perpetual promise that we may claim to-day. Omitting the miraculous manifestation of power, for which there is no necessity in our time, we see no reason why Christians of to-day should not claim and seek for such power and manifestation of the Spirit as will fit them for the service which they are called upon to render in their peculiar situations. We believe the promise of the Spirit is a perpetual promise. Whether we call it a "baptism," or being "filled with the Spirit," or being guided by the Spirit, does not seem to us to be material. The matter of supreme importance is that we do not undertake the work of spreading the kingdom of God among men without the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in us, without which no man can render permanent and effective service. The careful reader of the book of Acts will see that the universality and abundant supply of the Holy Spirit to all classes and conditions of men is the great and striking peculiarity of the Christian dispensation.

It may be doubted whether the church at Antioch that was prospering so well under the labors of Saul and Barnabas would have consented to part with these distinguished teachers if it had not been that the Holy Spirit said, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." It is to be noted, however, that it was while the church was ministering to the Lord and fasting, seeking for divine light and guidance, that the Holy Spirit impressed this truth upon their hearts. If churches would look more for divine guidance and pray for it, they would, no doubt, receive more of it. It was, no doubt, a sacrifice for the church to give up these great men to go out among the heathen, but they readily assented to set them apart to the great work. When Luke records the fact of their departure he says: "So they being sent forth by the Holy Spirit, went down to Seleucia; and from thence they sailed to Cyprus." No doubt, it was under this strong conviction that these men of God went forth. It is no wonder, therefore, that they accomplished marvelous results.

When our missionaries go to New York or San Francisco and set sail for their distant fields of labor, do we think of them as being "sent forth by the Holy Spirit?" And yet, is it not true? Was it not the Holy Spirit in their hearts that called them to this service, and was it not the Holy Spirit in the hearts of their brethren that made them willing to send them forth on this great mission? We must not lose sight of the divine element in our mission work. This should always be kept well to the front that all may realize that we are working under God and with God in carrying out the Great Commission which Jesus gave to us before he left.

In the passage cited from the 16th of Acts, we learn that the Holy Spirit directed the course of Paul and his companions, forbidding them to preach in certain places and directing them onward and calling them by a vision in the night across the Ægean Sea into a new continent. It is not said how the Holy Spirit communicated this message to them, but they were impressed, in some way that was clear to their minds, that it was not the desire of the Holy Spirit that they should go to certain places and they should go to other places. A great deal depends upon going to the right place at the right time. There is no reason for doubting that men of God to-day, who seek to follow the divine leading in all their work, will be providentially led into those fields of labor where they are likely to accomplish the most good. This is not always an easy thing, however, to do. We like to follow our own inclinations and tastes and judgment. Paul thought he could do most good among the Jews, but the Lord thought he was the very man to carry the gospel to the Gentiles and he submitted his judgment to that of the Lord.

Is it not very plain at the conclusion of this study that we have not made enough of the Holy Spirit in connection with the work of missions, and, perhaps, with our whole church work? If we have erred in this respect let us seek to make amends by invoking the power and the guidance of the Holy Spirit in all our efforts to extend the kingdom of God among men.

PRAYER.

Oh, God our Father, incline our hearts continually, we pray Thee, to do Thy will. As Thou hast laid upon us the duty of making known the riches of Thy grace in in Christ Jesus our Lord to all nations, wilt Thou be pleased to so endow us with Thy Holy Spirit that we may be capable of rendering this high service. May we, on our part, put away all our worldliness, our skepticism, our pride of intellect, our love of ease, our unselfish aims and ambitions and present ourselves to Thee as living sacrifices, to be used of Thee for the promotion of Thy glory and the advancement of Thy kingdom. May Thy Holy Spirit strengthen, comfort and guide our missionaries in all the fields wherein they labor to the end that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. For Christ's sake. Amen!

Questions and Answers.

In a recent number of the Outlook Dr. Lyman Abbott, preaching on the text, "For the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God" (1 Cor. 2:10), says: "Scholars are divided in opinion respecting the meaning of this verse. Some think that by the word 'spirit' here is meant the Holy Spirit; others think by the word spirit is meant the spirit of man. The latter is my view." What is the view of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST? Abijah.

Our view is that Dr. Abbott is wrong. The context seems to make it very plain that the Holy Spirit is meant. The apostle having quoted from Isaiah the lines:

"Things which eye saw not and ear heard not,
And which entered not into the heart of man,
Whatsoever things God prepared for them that love him," adds: "But unto us God revealed them through the Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For who among men knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man, which is in him? Even so the things of God none knoweth, save the Spirit of God." Now, if we make the "Spirit which searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God," mean the human spirit, what becomes of the analogy between the two spirits? Indeed, what becomes of the sense of the passage? Dr. Abbott is a brilliant writer, but he is not a safe exegete, we fear.

In Johnson's Commentary on John, at chapter 3, verse 5, he quotes from Abbott: "The Jewish proselyte, as a sign that he had put off his old faiths, was baptized on entering the Jewish Church." Johnson seems to have endorsed this. Is it true? Was the proselyte to the Jewish religion baptized on entering the Jewish Church? I have not found it in the Bible or elsewhere in my reading. E. L. Frazier.

Some able authorities claim that this was a Jewish custom. See the discussion of this subject by Bros. Willett and Briney, in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of last year, when the lesson was on John's baptism.

Will the "Nine Decades of History," by Prof. Loos, begun in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, be published in book form, and if so at what price? John Kenyon.

It is the plan to revise and publish these articles. Prof. Loos deals with only one period; other writers treat the other periods. See our advertisement. It is too early to name the price.

What is the scope and function of the Christian Endeavor Society? The answer to this question will determine the reply concerning Bro. Tyler and Christian Endeavor. If it is to become co ordinate with the church, then it will be desirable to carry out the proposed program. But if it is to hold to its original purpose, namely, to help equip its members for active service in the church, then it is quite desirable to return to first principles, that "unto him may be the glory in the church." N. S. Haynes.

The very nature and pledge of Christian Endeavor prevent it from becoming "co-ordinate with the church." It is an organization of young people in the church to promote their own spiritual development, aid in converting others, and to add to the efficiency of the local church. What Bro. H. refers to, perhaps, is a tendency sometimes manifested by a local society to regard itself as a sort of young people's church, separate from and co-ordinate with the local church. But nothing of this kind finds any favor among our Christian Endeavor leaders. The fact, however, that local societies are a part of the churches in which they have their being does not argue that no one is needed to have charge of this depar ment of work. The Endeavor Society is a special method of promoting Christian culture and Christian work. It is seeking to diffuse greater intelligence among its members concerning our mission and our missions, as well as to aid in every good work. Its success in these respects will depend largely upon the wisdom with which these lines of study and work are projected. We do not see, therefore, that the employment of a national secretary hinges upon whether the societies are co-ordinate with the churches any more than the employment of our state Sunday-school secretaries imply that the Sunday-schools are co-ordinate with the churches.

It is said that during the Franco-Prussian war, whenever the dead body of a Prussian officer was found, a map of France was usually found in his pocket. General Francis A Walker once remarked to a friend that he never looked out over a stretch of country without considering its facilities as a place of battle. Even so should God's army know the enemy's country, and be planning its battles.—Christian Endeavor World.

OUR COLLEGES IN MISSOURI.*

DEAR BRETHREN:—It has pleased God in due time to plant a great religious body in the central part of the United States, whose unselfish and unpartisan effort is to set forth and defend the simple faith in the Christ and absolute loyalty to him as the spiritual ruler of men. This body has always been disposed to honor learning in all branches of liberal instruction and freely to use the most approved results of scholarship.

In accord with this spirit these people have founded many schools and colleges, and taught their youth to seek and secure the largest educational attainments within their reach. They are not disposed to establish institutions of learning for the sole purpose of competing with others of equal advantages sustained by other religious people or by the state; but, on the contrary, they desire to contribute an honorable share to the intellectual advancement of the world, to propagate and maintain the original Christian faith, and in some measure to prepare coming generations for that interpretation of the Jewish and Christian Scriptures which will make most evident the whole truth of God.

Such an unsectarian attitude toward truth and learning enables the Christian Church without fear of endangering any principles of its own to patronize and encourage freely every department of scholarly investigation. No state in the land can thus maintain any institutions designed to uphold Christian principles; and it would not be easy to find any other religious people so naturally fitted to foster the most liberal study, and consequently on whom rests so great an obligation to endow colleges and universities.

In Missouri at this time our people have six colleges that are strictly the property of the church. Three of these are female colleges, viz., Christian College, at Columbia; the Orphan School, at Camden Point, and the Orphan School, at Fulton. Three are co-educational, viz., Christian University, at Canton; Central Christian College, at Albany, and the Bible College, at Columbia. The usefulness of any of these schools could be increased by a larger endowment; but it has seemed imperative that some of them should receive, immediatly, a better financial support.

Accordingly, at the last meeting of the Missouri MissionaryConvention, at Nevada, Christian University, which with the Fulton Orphan School is under the auspices of that body,asked in its annual report that the convention adoptsome practical measure to raise for the university an adequate endowment. As the fullness of the convention program afforded little time to consider this matter, it was resolved to call an educational conference and lay the responsibility of this question upon that conference. Up to this date the conference has had two meetings; the former, in November, 1898, was preliminary; but the latter with about one hundred representatives from various parts of the state, duly considered the condition of our colleges, and devised plans for speedy improvement. The full import may be most accurately discerned from the following full text of the resolutions passed:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this conference that it would be unwise under existing conditions to attempt to limit the benefactions of the brethren in the state to any one institution in the state to the neglect of the others, but in view of pressing needs we would most earnestly recommend as folllows:

1. That the work of Christian University in the past justifies an effort on the part of the brotherhood of this state to raise a minimum amount of $100,000 for endowment and such an expense fund as will meet its present necessities; and that we will co-operate with any feasible plan looking to that end.

2. That the best interests of the Bible College, at Columbia, require the erection, as early as possible, of such a building on its lot as will meet the demands; and that we commend this enterprise to the liberality of the brethren of the state.

3. That the Christian Female Orphan School, at Fulton, in view of its financial misfortunes and the benevolent character of the institution, deserves the sympathy and active co-operation of the brethren of the state in relieving it of its present indebtedness and otherwise aiding it in fulfilling its beneficent mission.

4. That we appoint an executive committee of seven brethren to act under the direction of this body, to execute its work, and report to this body the progress of its effort, at every meeting of this conference.

5. That the Annual Educational Conference shall meet in connection with the State Missionary Co-operation at such time and place as shall be designated by the executive committee.

Afterwards the following motions were adopted by the conference:

That the first Lord's day of July be observed as Educational Day by our brethren in the state of Missouri, and that our preachers be asked to present our educational interests to their congregations on that or some other day more convenient to them.

That this conference instruct the executive committee to appoint a solicitor or solicitors to raise funds for the purposes set forth in the resolutions already adopted, acting in co-operation with the trustees of the colleges interested; and that the committee be empowered to raise funds to pay the salaries of said solicitors.

All of these measures have been taken in the interest of harmony and unity of action and of practical results in the direction of our greatest educational needs. In spirit with these efforts, to reach the brotherhood in such a way as speedily to provide for our colleges, the executive committee in its meeting at St. Louis, Dec. 28, 1898, passed and published the following resolutions:

Whereas, The Educational Conference, at Moberly on the 5th and 6th instant, arranged a program of educational work which harmonizes all our educational interests in the state; and,

Whereas, This program involves the raising of over $150,000 to meet immediate and pressing wants; and,

Whereas, It is desirable that the entire brotherhood of the state participate in this forward movement in behalf of our colleges;

Therefore, Be it resolved by the executive committee appointed to carry out the recommendations of the conference above mentioned:

(1) That each congregation in the state be requested to contribute a sum that will be equal to one dollar for each member in its membership, for this purpose.

(2) That each congregation be rqeuested to appoint a committee of three to have charge of this matter, to canvass the church for subscriptions, and to collect and forward the same to the proper persons.

(3) That the churches be earnestly requested to complete the canvass for subscriptions as far as possible by the first Sunday in July next, and that the subscriptions be collected by that time, if possible, and reported to the treasurer of this education fund.

(4) That the press and our ministers in the state be and are hereby solicited to co operate heartily with this executive committee in bringing this matter to the attention of our churches and urging its paramount importance upon them.

(5) That all moneys coming into this educational fund without instructions be prorated among the institutions mentioned at the Moberly conference according to the resolutions there passed.

The above resolutions of the conference and its exectutive committee set forth in full the steps that have been taken for the relief and enlargement of our colleges. An effort with fair prospects is being made to secure a competent solicitor to urge these vital claims at once upon the people. Meanwhile, the immediate friends of each college in behalf of which the conference has taken this action are busy in its own locality and through its own agencies attempting to make a good beginning of its funds.

The executive committee greatly desires to raise the $150,000 which will berequired to accomplish the work laid out by the conference as quickly as possible, and would much prefer that this be done before the next meeting of the conference, at Jefferson City, in October. If the Christian people of Missouri will rally zealously to this task, and complete it promptly, they will add to our educational work an interest and an impulse that will quicken all our energies in this direction, give us greater confidence in our own abilities, and lay foundations of educational efficiency and enlargement that will move every true heart with gratitude.

It is a matter of deep gratification that the men who have been foremost in this work in the state have fully agreed upon the objects and methods of this effort, giving us at once unity of sentiment and concentration of energy. So far as this committee knows there is not a man in the state that so lightly estcems the value of this hearty co-operation as to attempt to defeat it. It will certainly be a point of personal pride and an inestimable blessing to the whole cause for each one to lend it his liberal and active support.

We believe that no appeal to the generosity of our brotherhood has been more important than this. If we have a great plea to defend and great principles to sustain, we must have institutions for the training of worthy defenders and advocates. If we are a missionary people, what do we need more imperatively than well-educated men and women for every mission and to encourage every missionary enterprise? If in the sight of men and of God we would seem to favor education, we should devote our best efforts to our colleges, and train our youth for educators of whom coming generations will not be ashamed. We are writing our own history as a people, and it is right that we should desire an honorable record, not that our descendants should ever utter a boast of vanity, but that we and our posterity may bear the fruits of a creditable work for God and humanity. Surely, this generation of Disciples should not let a few struggling colleges and some unredeemed and irredeemable failures mark our collegiate field. Must we not do better than that? Is not this our time to act?

Perhaps we may be asking, Why have we no great university in the state? May it not be that our very neglect of our smaller colleges is the reason? If it is a principle of divine government and of right that "he that is unrighteous in a very little is unrighteous also in much," ought we to expect Providence to favor us with a large university so long as we permit our smaller schools to languish? At the very least it is patent that large success is based on smaller successes, and that this is true of universities. Planting trees on barren rocks will never make great forests. Plant the little trees in deep, strong soil, and the mighty oaks will grow. Make the smaller colleges vigorous and thrifty, and the larger ones will reward our wisdom and zeal.

*An address prepared by the Executive Committee of the Educatinoal Conference to the Churches of Christ in Misssouri.

Can we afford to wait and wonder why others do not support our larger aims? Are we not forgetting that larger schools grow out of a strong sentiment, and that failures do not create sentiment? It is success that brings confidence and hope and help. Let us make our present colleges succeed, and we may be sure that in the providence of God the era of our greater work will speedily dawn.

Our brethren in the state by a large representation in the conference at Moberly have agreed upon this work which the executive committee are asked to present to all the churches in this address. We sincerely trust that an opportunity of a strong and concerted action will not be allowed to pass without a full accomplishment of the ends sought. May we not confidently call upon every church and every Disciple to contribute a liberal share? Let us act, all act, and act promptly, and we shall all rejoice together in a good work done.

CAN THE BARRIER WHICH INFANT BAPTISM PRESENTS TO CHRISTIAN UNION BE SURMOUNTED?—II.

BY REV. JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

(1) The question of ceremony apart, it is all-important that a clear conviction of the relation of the child to the kingdom of God be possessed by the church. Children are to be recognized as belonging to Christ and not to the devil; "for of such is the kingdom of heaven." They are not to be brought up for some future dramatic religious experience; nor are they to be brought into a state of holy nurture as if they were now aliens and outcasts, but they are to be brought up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" in which they have been graciously placed. Their spiritual life is to develop naturally—"first the blade then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." And everything that helps to bring about this ideal experience in which the natural and supernatural blend so completely together that the exact time when the Christian life was begun is not known, ought to be gladly welcomed.

It is for this reason that we urge the public presentation of the child to the Lord in the sanctuary, and the invoking of the Lord's blessing upon him by whoever may be acting as the representative of the church. This would conserve the reality for which the rite of infant baptism has stood. It would emphasize the idea that the whole of life and not the fag end of it merely is to be given to God, and that the demand of God will be satisfied with nothing less than lifelong love and obedience. This dedicatory service might fittingly take place on Children's Day. There would not be the slightest danger of exalting it into a religious ordinance. It would not be looked upon as "dry baptism" or baptism in another form. It would be a simple act of parental consecration, essentially the same in character as the Christian Endeavor monthly consecration. And surely no one objects to the formal act of personal consecration on the part of the members of the Christian Endeavor Societies, although no direct Scripture warrant can be shown for the practice, and why? Because no claim is made that it is a divine ordinance and therefore obligatory upon all Christians. All that is claimed for it is that it is a helpful method of giving emphasis to a Christian duty. The act of consecration itself is admittedly right. Christians are to consecrate their time, their talents, their money, their entire selves to the Lord. Are Christian parents to leave their children out of their consecration? If not, what objection can there be to making this act of consecration public? Would not such an act, accompanied by appropriate religious exercises, afford an occasion for the deepening of spiritual impressions upon the parental mind? Would it not be eminently calculated to lead to great searching of heart, and to a fresh consecration to God on the part of the parents themselves? Instead of being an unmeaning ceremony, it might be so conducted as to be full of the most precious significance and fraught with the most blessed results.

It might also be so employed as to bring to light an aspect of consecration which is in great danger of being overlooked, to wit, that what man consecrates to God, God consecrates to himself. When we bring our children to him he accepts them and makes them in a peculiar sense his own. Along with the blessing which comes to the child through the mediation of the parents by whom the consecration is made, there is the blessing which comes directly to the child through the Divine One who has accepted the consecration. The covenanting of man with God implies the covenanting of God with man. In the Old Testament dispensation circumcision was not only an act of separation and consecration; it was also a seal of what God promised to do for the child. "The Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live" (Deut. 30:6). So, when we consecrate our children to God he comes into covenant with us. He engages to do his part if we will do our part. Nothing that is required for the spiritual culture of the child will be withheld. "I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed and my blessing upon thine offspring" (Isa. 44:3), is a promise which is not yet exhausted. When Jesus laid his hands upon the children whom the mothers of Jerusalem brought to him for his blessing, that act was full of meaning. It conveyed some real, substantial benefit, or why was his blessing sought and given? We teach our little ones to sing:

"I think, when I read the sweet story of old,
When Jesus was here among men,
How he called little children as lambs to his fold,
I should like to have been with then.
I wish that his hands had been placed on my head,
That his arm had been thrown around me,
And that I might have seen his kind look as he said,
Let the little ones come unto me."

Is Jesus not now among men? Is he not still calling little ones to himself? Is he not enjoining his undershepherds to feed and tend his lambs? Is he not anxious for parents to bring their children to him that he may lay his kind hand upon their heads in blessing? Why then keep them back?

(2) This simple act of infant consecration would be in perfect harmony with the principles of adaptation of means to ends which characterizes the entire Christian scheme. Christianity is elastic in its methods and readily adapts itself to existing customs. From the new sense of brotherhood which Christianity awakened there grew up in the primitive church the Agape or the feast of love, which preceded the Lord's Supper. It was a beautiful sight to see master and slave partaking of a common meal. But as the church grew in wealth this feast of love degenerated into a common repast at which social distinctions were observed. When it lost its spiritual significance it fell out of use. The efforts which have from time to time been made to revive it have been only partially successful. In the same way feet-washing and the holy kiss which were practiced in the early church have fallen into disuse. They were peculiarly adapted to Oriental Christians. They have been given up, not because they were wrong in themselves, but because they were unsuited to present social conditions. By parity of reasoning any new custom may be adopted which is found to be in harmony with present conditions and helpful to the meeting of present demands. And this we claim for infant consecration. The thing itself is right. It is involved in the fundamental idea of the wholeness of the consecration which every Christian is called upon to make. To say that it is not forbidden in Scripture is to put the case too mildly. The consecration of parents carries with it the consecration of their children.

Bible Institute.

The Bible Institute at Columbia, Mo., will be held Feb. 19-24. On Lord's day morning Prof. J. W. McGarvey, Lexington, Ky., will speak and on Lord's day night A. Procter, Independence, Mo., speaks at the State University. The program as presented in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST two weeks ago for the five days following is an excellent one and a large attendance is expected. The church at Columbia invites all who can possibly do so to attend the Bible Institute. They will cheerfully entertain all who attend free. Please send in your names to C. H. Winders and tell him that you are coming and a place will be provided for you.

Face was a Mass of Sores—Advice of an Old Physician Followed with Perfect Success.

"Our eldest child had scrofula trouble ever since he was two years old and the doctors pronounced it very serious. His face became a mass of sores. I was finally advised by an old physician to try Hood's Sarsaparilla and we did so. The child is now strong and healthy and his skin is clear and smooth." REV. R. A. GAMP, Valley, Iowa.

Our Budget.

—Foreign Mission offering March 5th.

—Make this a "red-letter" day in the history of our cause.

—Let there be a conspiracy between the preachers and churches for the largest offering in our history.

—All the signs point in that direction and notes of preparation are heard in the land.

—It is the theme of prayer and consultation in the official meetings of the board in many of the churches.

—This is right. It takes both planning and praying, followed by working, to make a successful missionary offering.

—Can any church among us afford to be counted out in the great forward movement of the churches for the world's evangelization? Surely not.

—Are there any preachers so dead to their sense of responsibility to their congregations and to the cause of missions as to fail to preach on the subject and urge a liberal offering? We hope not.

—We have not space to print the names of the preachers and churches that are going to make the offering for Foreign Missions, but if we have any churches and preachers that refuse to have any part in this matter we should like to publish a list of those. Let them send their names on.

—In the absence of such a list we shall take it for granted that our preachers and churches are all in the movement, and are going to do what they can to make this offering worthy of the Jubilee Year. But this work will have to be done in the local congregations.

—We print this week another article of a reminiscent character from Judge Isaac E. Barnum, of Denver, Col., on "Preachers and Impressions." We have discovered in Judge Barnum a most elegant and graceful writer, whose memory is stored with scenes and incidents in the history of the Reformation that will, no doubt, prove very interesting and profitable to our readers. Do not fail to read the article in the present number. We have others on hand which will follow as rapidly as our space will permit.

—We regret that the article in the historical series by Prof. Loos did not reach us in time for this issue. It is to be said in explanation that Prof. Loos had but short notice for the beginning of this series, and he submits nothing that has not been carefully prepared. We hope, however, that after this the articles will appear with few or no intermissions. The other writers, having more time for preparation of their material will, no doubt, be able to furnish their articles in regular order as they are needed We are glad to note the widespread interest that is being awakened by this series of articles.

—The city of St. Louis is now under the X-rays of a "Lexow" committee, and the black spots of corruption are beginning to become more distinctly and definitely visible in its municipal affairs. It appears that some men have secured engineers' license for money regardless of competency, that the excise commissioner has been receiving an income by fees of $26,000 per year and that the wine room attachment to saloons is but a bait for the allurement of girls from the path of virtue. This is about as far as the committee has gone as yet, and the fact that evils have been uncovered in each department leads the honest observer to fear that the worst is yet to come The wine room exposure was made by a Catholic priest of this city and was so appalling that it is said that legal steps will be taken by the legislature for their abolishment. If even this is done this committee will not have done its work in vain. But it is to be hoped that other evils will be removed and reforms instituted, and that the Christian portion of this city will have a purer atmosphere in which to dwell, as the result of its work.

—The comparative statement of the receipts of the American Christian Missionary Society for the first three weeks in this month show a gain of $56.37. This is not a large gain over the same period of last year, but it is enough to indicate, as it does at this season of the year, the larger gains that are to follow.

—The annual Tuskegee Negro Conference will be held this year on Wednesday, Feb. 22, and the Workers' Educational Conference on Feb. 23, at Tuskegee, Ala. The Negro Conference is composed of hundreds of the representative farmers, mechanists, ministers and teachers from all parts of the South. The Workers' Conference is composed of the presidents of and instructors in the colored institutions of high grade in the South. These gatherings have proven most profitable in the past and it is believed that the Conference to be held this year will prove no exception to the rule. All of the friends of the instisution, North and South, as well as all others interested in these conferences, are invited. Further information will be gladly given by Booker T. Washington, principal Tuskegee Institute, if sought.

—In an evil moment, and contrary to our custom, we inserted a notice recently in this paper that a church in a Western state wanted a preacher and would pay $600 salary, and that we would put a preacher properly recommended in correspondence with the church. Since then the editor and stenographer have had their spare moments taken up in answering the letters which that little paragraph called out. There is a moral in this, but we do not stop to draw it out. The place is doubtless filled long ago. Let this notice answer the other letters.

—According to the Catholic News, the Catholics of England are petitioning Lord Salisbury for the establishment of a Catholic University in Ireland, and in favor of this petition the Catholic News offers the following very childish argument:

> This movement is particularly timely now, when the government and people of England have been so quick to provide a university for the Mohammedans of the Soudan as a memorial to Gen. Gordon. If England, in the face of this action in the Soudan, still refuses to give a Catholic university to Ireland, it will be clear that she is willing to treat Mohammedans with more consideration than Catholics.

We fail to see that the conditions of the two classes of people named are parallel, but perhaps we have heretofore overestimated the Catholics of Ireland.

—Missionary Tidings for February is largely devoted to junior work and is appropriately called the "Young People's Number." The first page presents the picture of Mrs. Charlotte S. King, the first superintendent of the Young People's Department of the C. W. B. M. The cover of this number of the Tidings is pleasing to the eye.

—There are times when the bravest and strongest of men, conscious that the weight of the world is resting principally upon their shoulders, cry out in their sense of loneliness for others to assist, in some small degree, in bearing the heavy burden. How poor Atlas, leader of the Titans, must have groaned under the injustice of supporting the vault of heaven on his shoulders, while others went free! These reflections are awakened by the following paragraph, quoted by the Register Review, from a letter sent out by the editor of the Christian Standard:

> It is only in the support of one another that we can hope to accomplish the work assigned to us as a people. It has fallen to the Standard to promote the great undertakings of this Jubilee Year, but we are helpless without the aid of our brethren. We trust we shall have yours in a united effort to bring our foreign missionary offering before our churches in a more effective way than ever before.

Surely, it is enough that the chief burden of defending the faith from the attacks of the evolutionists and revolutionists among us should be laid on the shoulders of our valiant contemporary of Cincinnati, without adding the whole weight of the Jubilee preparation and Foreign Missions. It isn't a bit fair "toatin" and we call upon our other religious papers to help the Standard do justice to our Jubilee Year and to the world's evangelization. Remember the curse that came upon Meroz, because it came not up to the help of the Lord.

—Elsewhere in this issue will be found a very interesting letter from Chaplain C. B. Carlisle, now in Cuba. Some months ago we asked him to make a careful study of the condition of the people of the island and give us an unvarnished report of the facts as he saw them. He has done so in this letter and the picture he draws of the Cuban peasant, as he has seen him in Southern Cuba, is not a very inviting one. And yet, we have no doubt that Mr. Carlisle has drawn it true to life as it has appeared to him. It all emphasizes with tremendous force the utter inability of Roman Catholicism to elevate a people and lift them out of their mental, moral and physical degradation to a condition of enlightened civilization. It emphasizes, also, the great need of the gospel in that field. The letter will be read with interest by our readers. Bro. Carlisle, it will be remembered, contributed to these columns frequently from Iowa before the war with Spain.

—The article on "Sacramental Ethics," in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Jan. 26th, is a contribution of the highest practical value. The following sentence ought to be blazoned before our hearts till we see it and feel it:

> "BEWARE OF TAKING THE SACRAMENTAL ELEMENT OUT OF ROMANISM AND THE INTELLECTUAL ELEMENT OUT OF PROTESTANTISM AND RECONSTRUCTING THEM INTO A LEGALISTIC DOGMA OF THE ORDINANCES AND A THEORETIC SYSTEM OF THE PLAN OF SALVATION!"

Those are brave, true words. They come home; let us receive them. AN EVANGELIST.

—While some of our Eastern friends seem disposed to minimize the issue raised by the election of polygamist, Roberts, to the United States Congress, here is another view of the case from Eugene Young, grandson of Brigham Young:

> There seems to be a disposition in the East, particularly among the politicians, but even among the churches, to treat the revival of the Mormon issue as a minor matter. There is an inclination to view the election to Congress of B. H. Roberts—a three or four-ply polygamist, still living in polygamy, as an unavoidable outcome of that condition in Utah and a mere question of personal morality. Some day they will see, as those who know Mormon ambition see now, that Mr. Roberts is a mere instrument, a representative of mighty forces. They will learn that through his election a people 300,000 strong have turned from American liberty and American morality and have taken the initial step toward the establishment of a hierarchy foreign to our institutions and our social laws, in the midst of our republic. If in dragging polygamy into the House of Representatives Mr. Roberts is representing the defiant sentiment of the whole Mormon people, then the people must not rest until Congress has cast him out as a warning to all covenant breakers and all polygamists.

—Pres. J. W. McGarvey, who conducts the Funny Department of the Christian Standard, presents the following announcement of "A New College," in the last issue of that paper:

> It is our privilege to make the first editorial announcement of a new institution of learning, the special purpose of which is to be the acquisition of intellectual honesty. At present there are only two professors appointed, each a specialist in his department, viz., J. H. Garrison, Dean, and Professor of "The Virtue of Intellectual Honesty;" J. J. Haley, Chancellor, and Professor of "The Rudiments of Intellectual Honesty." Preachers who realize their deficiency are especially desired as pupils. For other information apply to either member of the faculty.

It is kind in Bro. Mc. to give our institution this gratuitous notice, but there is an error in it we beg leave to correct. We especially desire as pupils those who are notoriously unfair in their replies to opponents and who do not "realize their deficiency." Otherwise we should not have enough to do to earn our salaries. Tuition will be free to those who make a specialty of "Biblical Criticism."

—Instead of lugging politics into churches the Chicago churches, according to the Chicago Record, are preparing to go into politics. It is proposed that they hold a great convention this spring, ten days before the first political convention, in order to impress upon politicians the necessity of nominating unobjectionable men to the city offices. Then if the wishes of this convention are not respected they propose to hold another convention, ten days after the last of the party conventions, and making a ticket of their own from the various tickets in the field. This it strikes us is going straight for the key to good government. It is commencing in time and in a good way and upon the right parties. Some of the leading pastors in Chicago, it is said, have expressed themselves in favor of this attempt at better government for Chicago, and we shall be glad to see the result of the experiment.

—The Missionary Intellgencer for February is the splendid forerunner of a record-breaker offering for Foreign Missions on the first Sunday in March. It is a fine number full of live, burning missionary facts. Missionary literature found in this magazine is far from dry reading.

—In speaking of the danger of emotional influences at revival meetings, the Religious Telescope says, "What is needed is the striking of the happy mean between a self sufficient cold formalism on the one hand and a pure emotionalism on the other." The Telescope seems to forget what God has said of those who are neither hot nor cold. What is needed, as we see things, is not a mixture of emotionalism and formalism but of the divine and the human nature according to the gospel of the grace of God. Due regard for the instructions of this recipe will safely avoid these two great dangers to a pure and undefiled religion.

—A Brussels chemist has announced his ability to produce a substitute for meat extracts far superior in nutrition and much cheaper than the natural products, and the Union Signal goes off into a delightful editorial prophetic of the time "now so near to hand when there shall be no more slaughter houses nor butchers, and when barnyard fowls shall live out their natural lives." There may, therefore, be some significance in the almost simultaneous discoveries of a chemical substitute for meat and the ability of men to live without stomachs, as demonstrated by late surgical operations. It is at least a singular if not remarkable coincidence. The world is only at the threshold of its greatest accomplishments and wonders.

—The Michigan Presbyterian says that within a short space of time five ministers from the Detroit Presbytery have given up the ministry for business and that similar offers have been made to four others. These men were not failures, neither had they reached the deadline, it is said; and yet it is hinted by the Herald and Presbyter, through whom we get this information, that they probably had the deadline in view and stepped aside for younger men. If this is so, then we have in their action an indication, not that there are too many ministers in the world, as some think, but that there is not the right distribution of forces in the Protestant world; neither can we have so long as the sectarian spirit is dominant.

—The Daily Observer, Cameron, Mo., Jan. 24th, in its comments upon fulsome eulogies at the funeral of persons of bad repute, says some wise things. While a funeral is not the place for criticisms, rebukes and harsh sayings, neither is it proper to ignore the great facts of life. A preacher may do more harm at one funeral than he can repair in a year's preaching. The mourners are always entitled to whatever comfort there is to offer on such an occasion, and especially to hear of the love of God, a loving Savior and the opportunities which all have in him, but never to be encouraged in their sins. At no time is a preacher's wisdom more severely taxed than at the funeral of those who have rejected Christ or died unrepenting a sinful life. A good rule to follow is to put Christ in your stead and hear what he would say under the circumstances, and follow him.

—The Worker, Pittsburg, Pa., has been enlarged to eight pages and will hereafter be issued weekly. In doing this the editors and publisher are responding to a demand from the churches in and around Pittsburg for a representative local paper. The mission of the Worker will be to meet this demand, and to this end it has a well-organized and strong editorial staff, headed by T. E. Cramblet and W. J. Lhamon. We feel sure that such a paper will be appreciated and accomplish a good work.

—According to a saying of Henry Ward Beecher, when a man sleeps in church it is an indication that the preacher needs to be awakened.

—The Evangel, published at Buffalo, N. Y., for January, contains a sermon by Lowell C. McPherson, pastor of the Jefferson Street Church of Christ, Buffalo, on "Hope in Christ Exemplified." It is the custom of this magazine to print a number of sermons from the pastors of various pulpits in each number.

—The Roman Catholic and the Episcopalian Churches are about the only ones that can talk freely about what is sometimes called the decline of religion in Protestant churches. Would that it were possible to return the compliment by having Protestant churches talking about the renaissance of religion in the Roman Catholic and Episcopalian Churches.

—The Board of Methodist Bishops has called upon the Methodist Episcopal Church for two million converts and twenty millions of money as a twentieth century thankoffering. This is a mighty work, but the Methodists are a mighty people and if aroused will reach the mark before the century closes. Such religious enthusiasm as this ought to arouse the Disciples of Christ to far surpass the mark set by each of our missionary boards this year. In a talk to our preachers of this city in this office recently, A. McLean, our beloved foreign missionary secretary, said that he expected to live to see our people giving a million dollars a year for Foreign Missions alone. Brethren, here is a faith worthy of our emulation. It is the kind of faith that removes mountains and makes easy the task of the gospel. Let us not, then, be surpassed by our religious neighbors in faith and works, about which we have preached so loud and so long.

—During Robt. G. Ingersoll's recent visit at Decatur, Ill., Geo. F. Hall, pastor of the Tabernacle Christian Church of that city, let lose a broadside of shot and shell, grape and canister, against this defamer of the Bible and its God in the hope of provoking him to a public discussion of the claims and merits of the Christian religion, but without effect. This modern declaimer against Christianity has no intention of ever subjecting his knowledge of science, religion, history and logic to public inspection by a competent critic.

—A brother who has wide acquaintance among the churches writes to us concerning an evil under the sun which he notices in going to and fro among the churches. It is the fact that in the neighborhood of some of our colleges, where young men are preparing for the ministry, older ministers with families to support are crowded out by young men who underbid them because they have no families, and are anxious to get even a little assistance in aiding them through college. A worse evil is that of a "farmer preacher," occasionally, who, not depending upon the ministry for support, underbids a preacher who is devoting his life to the work, and the churches in their desire for economy exchange the minister for the farmer. It is plain that these conditions work hardship upon preachers who have surrendered houses and lands for the ministry, and are depending upon their vocation for the support of themselves and families. This matter ought to receive the attention of colleges, and churches ought to be better trained and have a higher sense of responsibility to the ministry than to allow a faithful minister to lose his place because some one else, having another calling that earns him support, is willing to preach for them cheaper. One cannot blame the young men at college for desiring to earn their way as far as they can, but if they could be helped in some other way to get through school it would be far better than for them to displace the men who are already in the ministry. Besides, it would enable the young men to make better progress with their studies. Where is the remedy? A Students' Aid Fund would come in good play in such cases.

—Prof. I. B. Grubbs, whose picture appears on our first page this week, was born near Trenton, Ky., in 1833. He became a Christian at the age of eighteen years and was preaching at nineteen. He graduated with honor from Bethany College in 1857 and has since filled some of the most influential pulpits in Kentucky. He has also made for himself a name as a teacher as well as a preacher. In 1864 he was appointed to the chair of Greek and Latin and Higher Mathematics in Flemingsburg College, and in 1877 was elected professor of Sacred Literature and Homiletics in the College of the Bible at Lexington, which position he has since continued to fill with honor. In addition to his labor as a preacher and teacher, he has also contributed many valuable articles to our periodical literature. As an exponent of primitive Christianity Bro. Grubbs stands in the rank of able preachers who have helped to make the restoration movement what it is to-day, and we hope that his days of usefulness may be greatly prolonged on the earth —The effort to increase the contract schools for the education of Indian children now being made in the present Congress raises the question whether there is any relation between this bill and the personal presence of Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Ireland and other Roman Catholic dignitaries in Washington from time to time as reported. The bill, however, was defeated by the House, and it is to be hoped will be likewise defeated in the Senate, notwithstanding the pressure to secure its passage. As the Independent recently said, the government is amply able to do its teaching; and, besides, it should not be thus made the supporter of a religious sect or sects. The covering is too transparent.

—The receipts of the A. C. M. S. for the week ending Jan. 28th were $930.29, being a gain of $781.51 over that of last year for the same week. $500 of the gain, however, was the personal gift from a friend to Home Missions. All money for Home Missions should be sent to Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

—The genuineness of the alarm of Roman Catholic authorities over the proposed invasion of our new national possession with the Christian missionaries is revealed in a proposition to check the same suggested by the Church Progress. Here is the suggestion:

Gather together a history of the one hundred and forty-three sects, setting forth clearly and succinctly all their contradictions, vagaries and extravagances in doctrine and methods. Translate it into Spanish, publish it in cheap form and scatter it broadcast among the natives of Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

Good. Now let the missionaries show that they are actuated by one spirit and have but one aim in their ministry, and the native people of these new national possessions will have an additional reason for welcoming these missionaries, "their wives and their children," to their native soil, to say nothing of the historical light they might be able to impart to them about the religious system under the dominance of which they have so long lived.

—At a meeting held in the house of the Central Christian Church, this city, on last Sunday at 3 P. M., a Prohibition Union was inaugurated, the object of which is to unite the prohibition sentiment and influence of the various religious bodies against the saloon. The motto of this movement is "In the Name of Jesus Christ as King, the Liquor Traffic must die." The president of the Prohibition Union, of Rochester, N.Y., Mr. C. N. Howard, was present and addressed the meeting. This is not a political movement or organization, but to be the power behind the throne for the better enforcement of present laws, the agitation of thought and sentiment against the saloon, and finally its overthrow. There is an urgent demand for such an agency in this city and the fact that this move proposes to unite the prohibition strength of the churches gives it prominence as a new factor in the social and civil domain of this city.

—We are informed that it is not the Endeavor Society at Southwest City, Mo., that had read 71 books in six months as reuently stated by us, but the "young people." A. B. Carpenter, who is the pastor of the church at that place, instead of M. Rice, as stated by us, says that the prayer-meeting there is attended by nearly all our members and is enthusiastic and edifying. We gladly make the above corrections.

—DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I notice by the Christian Standard that you and Bro. Haley are at the head of a new institution of learning, especially designed to be a source of help for ministers who realize their need of help in the preparation for the preaching of the gospel. Send me particulars please. It has not been my good fortune to go to college to prepare myself, and I need the help of older minds; yet I am not ashamed of the work I have done, which speaks for itself. Possibly your course may be what I need. Yours,

WILL G. LOUCKS.

Lawrenceburg, Ind., Feb. 4, 1899.

The notice in the Christian Standard was only a bit of attempted humor on the part of the staid editor of the department of Biblical Criticism in that paper. He neglected to take the precaution which Artemas Ward used to observe, by adding, "This is sarkasm." We recommend Bro. Mc. to take this precaution when he attempts to play the role of a humorist in order to avoid confusion. At present there is danger that his most serious attacks on other biblical critics may be regarded as only specimens of humor. They are certainly not destitute of that element.

An Ancient Church.

J. Fraise Richard, of Washington, D. C., referring to the Easy Chair reminiscences lately on "literary waifs" gives the following incident:

While I am on the floor, permit me to say, in illustration of the statement you make concerning the influence of even anonymous waifs, that in the autumn of 1888 I was attending a Teachers' Institute in New Castle, Penn. I saw an old brick edifice, a Baptist church on whose front were these characters: "B. C. 48."

On my return to Mercer, Penn., I wrote a squib for the Western Press somewhat like this: "It is usually supposed that the oldest church edifice in America is the Roman Catholic structure at St. Augustine, Florida. This, however, is a mistake. In the city of New Castle is a brick edifice bearing the inscription, "B. C. 48."

The item was copied by the New Castle papers, and then spread all over the country. Papers in New Orleans and Denver republished it.

A few years later a new structure was erected. When its corner stone was laid the clippings from all these papers containing my little freak of pleasantry were deposited as a part of the day's ceremonies.

Truly, a word, a sentiment, piped into the air shall never die. Give us more of your reminiscences.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 20, 1899.

PERSONAL MENTION.

S. M. Parks' permanent address is Decatur, Ill. He was at Pearl for a meeting only.

J. F. McGarvey is laboring for the church at Newark, Mo., instead of LaBell as recently stated in this column.

A. J. Carrick has closed his work at Kahoka, Mo., and that church is now in need of a preacher.

J. M. Lowe says that his work in the East Side Church, Des Moines, Ia., opens up hopefully.

J. S. Smith reviewed Robt. G. Ingersoll's lecture, recently delivered at Carrollton, before an intelligent audience of that city.

T. R. Hodkinson, formerly of Clarksville, Ia., has succeeded J. M Lowe as pastor of the church at Winterset, Ia.

G F. Shields, of Kansas City, Kan., writes hopefully of the work there for the present year. He closed his work at Virginia, Ill., Dec. 31.

F. G. Tyrrell, pastor Central Christian Church, this city, is publishing a paper for his people called the Clarion. It is well named.

The pastor of the church at Elmwood, Neb., John Lewis, says that any church in need of an efficient young minister can be put in communication with one by addressing him.

The editor of this paper will spend a portion of the present week at Irvington, Ind., attending a Bible Institute, in which he is to deliver four lectures. Of the institute further information will be given later.

Claude E. Hill is now in the seventh year of his ministry at Wellsville and Middletown, Mo. He gives one-half time to each church, and says that the work at each place is prospering.

W. E. M. Hackleman is assisting W. D. Starr, at Noblesville, Ind., in a meeting. This is one of the strongest churches in Indiana. Scoville & Scott had 347 additions here last winter.

The Eddyville Tribune, Iowa, speaks in excellent praise of the preaching of G. F. Devol, in that city, this month. On the 9th of January he dedicated the new and handsome house, built at a total cost of $1,350, by the church.

J. D. Greer has been called to the work at Laddonia, Mo., but will continue to reside at Mexico. He has also had his fifth consecutive call to preach for the church at New Bloomfield, Mo. The membership of this church "has more than doubled" under his ministry.

E. M. Johnson, former pastor at Loomis, Neb., now preaches for the church at Norman, West Point and Hartwell. His home, however, is at Minden, Neb. There is no organized church at Hartwell yet.

R. A. Hopper, of Tempe, Arizona, has been sick, but the work there moves forward encouragingly. O. W. Stewart, of Chigago, is to hold a protracted meeting there this month.

M. J. Nicoson and wife, of Monroe City, Mo., have been granted a two months' vacation, which they will spend in Manatee, Florida. The church is reported as in a prosperous state.

Ernest Walling, a student of Eureka College, recently won a scholarship prize offered by President Hardin, in an oratorical contest. Ernest is the grandson of the well-known and greatly beloved father in Israel, Bro. J. C. Reynolds, of Macomb, Ill.

A. E. Zeigler, in reply to a call, has returned to the work at Huntington, W. Va. Their church house which was in jeopardy has been saved by the aid of the Church Extension Board, of which an account will be found in this paper.

At a meeting of the state missionary board, Jan. 20, in Danville, Ky., Eld. G. P. Bowser was elected state evangelist. H will begin work with the church at Mayslick, Ky. His movements thereafter will be subject to the board. His address at present is Millersburg.

George Darsie, pastor of the church at Frankfort, Ky, has announced a series of six sermons on the Bible for Sunday nights, beginning Feb. 5. "What is it For," "Why True," "Why Sufficient," "How Understand It," "How it Comforts" and "Why it Remains," are the themes to be discussed.

There were present at the preachers' meeting in this office on last Monday preachers Levi Marshall, of Hannibal, Mo, and A. M. Harvout, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Bro. Marshall preached at the First Church for Bro. Fannon, who is holding a protracted meeting at Hannibal. Bro. Harvout is assisting Bro. Tyrrell in a protracted meeting at the Central Christian Church.

T. M. Myers, pastor of the church at Jeffersonville, Ill., speaks out strongly for himself and the church on the March offering for Foreign Missions and for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

A speech entitled "Old Kentucky Whisky," to be "delivered on the Fourth of July and such occasions," by James W. Zachary, editor of the Quarterly Christian, appears in the January edition of that journal. It is a strong speech against the liquor traffic.

J. S. Hughes, of Chicago, has come to regard the book of Revelation of first importance in Bible study and suggests that classes be formed everywhere for its study. To this end he offers to render all the assistance possible; also to preachers who are appointed to deliver addresses on this book.

G. A. Perkins closed his ninth year's work with the church at Macedonia and his eleventh year's work with the church at Friendship with the close of the year 1898. Both places are in Audrain county, Mo. Bro. Perkins states that each church put an organ in its house last year without any opposition. Bro. Perkins' address is Moberly, Mo.

A. O. Swartwood has closed his pastorate of two years with the State Line Church. During this time there were 21 additions, with 10 letters granted, and seven deaths. A Society of Willing Workers was formed, numbering 30 sisters. A. O. Swartwood preached his farewell sermon the first Lord's day night in the new year.

H. H. Jenner is now in the third year of his ministry at Buffalo, Ill. That church of 100 members gave $200 to missions last year. This was about one-fourth of all it raised for the year. Bro. Jenner votes for the C. E. and S. S. departments in the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST and for J. Z. Tyler for Christian Endeavor work wholly. Thanks for Bro. J.'s kind words about the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

W. B. Rose, pastor of the church at Dixie, Washington, at the close of a fine meeting at that place, was presented a warrantee deed and clear title to a fine house and five lots in that city by the church of that city. It is needless to say that the gift was thankfully received. Bro. Rose says that he will work harder for the church than ever.

Rufus A. Russell, of Jacksonville, Fla., says: "If you have many such preachers in the State of Missouri as Bro. J. T. Boone, then there is no wonder that the Church of Christ in your great commonwealth has grown like it has. The members of the First Christian Church are very proud of him and feel that he is the man we have been looking for and that the church will grow and prosper in his hands in all departments. The Sunday-school has nearly doubled its attendance since his arrival among us."

After a ministry of 16 months T. D Garvin, pastor of the church at Honolulu, H. I., resigned and accepted a call from the church in Clarksville, Tenn., where he will begin about March 1st. W. A. Gardner, of San Francisco, Cal., will succeed him at Honolulu. Of Bro. G. and the work there Bro. Garvin says: "He has preached for us three Lord's days and the people are highly pleased with him. The work will grow under his care. We are glad of the part we have been able to take in aiding the church to grow out of the condition in which it was struggling when we were called back to the rescue. The work is now in a prosperous condition and we are hopeful. Sixteen have been added to the church, eight of these by obedience; but this may seem a small growth to those who do not know the hindrances."

Preachres and Impressions.—II.

A COUNTRY CONGREGATION IN FIFTY-FIVE.

Elaine the fair, Elaine the lovable,
Guarded the Sacred Shield of Lancelot;
Now made a pretty history to herself
Of every dint a sword had beaten in it.
—Tennyson.

It was about one o'clock on a Lord's day afternoon. A slight breeze was rippling the surface of Eagle Lake, which covered about six hundred acres of land. It was surrounded by heavy forest trees and, shining like a gem in their midst, was firmly held in the setting of a white encircling beach. A company of people were singing on the eastern shore, and looking out to the west over a scene of unparalleled natural beauty; the giants of the forest were throwing their strong arms wide and high like ancient guards around their beloved waters. The lake was reflecting the singers, the green of the forest leaves, the blue of the arching skies, and over all was poured the balmy sunlight of a summer day. Swallows in their flight were twittering along the water and the perfume of wild flowers was borne on the air. Children were watching the proceedings with wondering eyes. The little breeze was suddenly stilled, the wavelets fade away, the leaves are at rest and the singers are mute, as a young minister stands at the water's edge and, lifting up his hands, prays for God's blessing upon the baptismal candidate. The prayer being ended, a bright girl steps forward in whose face there is beaming childhood's purity and trust. He takes her by the hand, and as they walk down into the water the singing rises clear and strong:

"How happy are they who their Savior obey."

"They halt, the music is hushed, he raises one hand and says, "By the authority of our Lord and Master I baptize you into the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost," and gently buries her under the yielding waters and and raises her up in the glow of a new-born life. A benediction is given and the people hasten away to their homes. As I climed a little hill I turned to take a last look at that enchanting picture. It was alone with its divine Artist, and the radiance of beauty was still over it all; there were no signs of moving life save that in the distance a solitary loon in his black shining coat was quietly floating on the placid bosom of the waters. Farewell, bright childhood day! Half a mile north of the lake was a schoolhouse where those people worshiped, which was about five miles from Paw Paw, Mich.

The following winter a long and successful protracted meeting was held. The services often continued until ten o'clock in the evening. The people were pioneers, who had gone into new country, and were chopping out for themselves farms in its great forests. They were mostly from New York and Northern Ohio, and were a strong, happy, sprightly, enthusiastic and thrifty body, and fully realized that they were laying the foundations of great institutions that were yet to be. They were intelligent, devout, of great faith and courage. Had good common-school education, good judgment, were thorough students of the Bible, and had the sword of the Spirit ever ready for any unfortunate opponent who might deride or oppose them. Often had their Bibles in church and carefully followed all the readings of the minister. Two ministers were usually engaged in the meeting, one doing the preaching and the other following with a rousing exhortation, often continuing it during the singing of the invitation hymn. After the dismissal there was a time of handshaking and happy greetings. They all knew each other and there were no waiting strangers. It was a winter of deep snows and howling storms. Some of the people were from five miles away. Their driver calls, "All aboard!" and instantly they are into the straw and under the robes. A crack of the whip, a cry of "good-night," and they are around the corner into the straight, narrow forest road. The driver tightens his lines, the horses spring to their work, and are soon flying along at a ten-mile gait, startling the prowling fox and hooting owl, as the music of song and bells roll out on the crisp night air. A call from the sleigh, a bark of a dog, and a settler's cabin is passed. Look out there, driver! Pretty near a tip-over. The moonlight dances on field and river, and snow-capped posts are fleeing behind. Glee and fun are coming to the front, merry laughter and cheers greet the crowd in the passing sleigh. A light flashes in the distance, the nervy horses have climed the last hill and are dashing along the home-stretch. At eleven o'clock they are standing at the door and their night's work is done. Out of the sleigh and into the house the sprightly people go. With a blazing fire, a report of the meeting, cider, apples and dough-nuts, a happy good-night, they are all off to the dreamland.

Baptisms were still taking place at the lake, but the scene is changed; ice and snow mantle it all. A blinding storm sweeps down the lake. Woodmen's axes are swinging and the air is filled with flying crystal chips. The imprisoned waters joyfully leap to meet the light of day, down through the ice the candidates go, while above the howling storm a song rings out—

"Then let the hurricane roar,
It will the sooner be o'er,
We will weather the blast,
And land at last,
Safe on the Evergreen Shore."

Heroic Christianity that! That young minister was William M. Roe, of Buchanan, Mich. He had just returned from Hiram and been employed for one-half of his time. He was born with the spirit of kindness and of Christ. His life has long been spared for the labor he has loved, and his struggles with ill-health and work for his Master are an inspiration to all who have known his unflagging zeal. In his age he is still loved and cherished by those who in youth were so fortunate as to be brought under his benign influence and also by hundreds whom his labors have brought to the church. A calm and sweet old age is one of the highest blessings which heaven can confer upon man. May such a blessing be abundantly his!

The elders of the congregation were Loyal Crane, Daniel Abbott and Edwin Barnum. They were men of limited means, struggling with the hardships of a new country; were prudent, of even tempers, respected by their neighbors, good judges of men, well-informed on the affairs of the day and of strong and ardent faith. Crane and Barnum were both good speakers for men of their positions in life, and when there was no preacher present would read the Scriptures and explain them to the people as faithfully as they could. They had by heart the conversions of the men on the day of Pentecost, Paul, Cornelius, Lydia, the jailer and the eunuch. The communion was carefully observed on every Lord's day, and appropriate remarks were made as to its significance and the request of the Master that it be done in memory of him. The communion was the leading purpose of their meeting. They used Bible names for Bible things and where the Scriptures spoke they spoke, and where the Scriptures were silent they were silent. Each of the elder's wives loved the church and its work, realized her position, and like a loyal wife and true Christian woman did what she could to sustain, encourage and honor her husband in his delicate and responsible position. They were women with whom their husbands could consult and to whom they could safely confide the secrets of the church. The burden of the church rested on those six parties and they led in the labors to be performed and the sacrifices to be made. Being human they were not always at harmony among themselves, but agreed as well as indpendent and free thinking men will agree on the numerous question arising in church affairs. The care and anxiety for the weak, passionate, untrained, willful, the bickerings, jealousies and troubles of the little band made many a long and weary night for those officials and their wives. It required great wisdom and skill to guide the the little ship by all the rocks of politics, finance, music, organs and amusements which lined its course. Pastors came and went, but those six, firmly trusting in God, moved on the unbroken front of the work; they all lived to see the church well established in the village, under the pastorate of Allenson Wilcox. All of them except Mrs. Abbott have gone to their final reward. They have been mentioned, not for themselves alone, but because they are representatives of thousands of heroic pioneer men and women who, having faithfully served their church, their country and their God, have fallen one by one to rest in the cemeteries of the great Mississippi Valley. Intimate friends will cherish their memories, but to the historian they are only a multitude. The multitude will be mentioned on Forefathers' Day, but their names will not be read. Commanders live, but the rank and file as individuals fade away; no glowing pen nor granite shaft preserves their names or histories. When our leaders shall be honored, let this multitude of our heroic dead receive their meed of praise. Let us stand with uncovered heads in their majestic presence, and while immortelles are being laid upon their graves, let these divine words be read:

"These are they which came up out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of water; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

He Has the Best Wishes of Many Friends.

A doctor, after studying many years and devoting his entire time and attention to the cure of cancer and similar diseases, has at last perfected a cure, whereby he has effected many miraculous recoveries and has won the praises of many a poor sufferer for having saved him from a horrible death. He has written a book that will be sent entirely FREE to any one addressing DR. E. RINEHART, Lock Box 221, Indianapolis, Ind.

The Death of C. E. Garst.

I am so grieved to have to send you very sad news. There seems no way to break such news easily. As I am desolate to-day, so will you be in a measure when you hear that Charles is forever with the Lord. The day after the pus was taken (the 25th), his symptoms were all better. Doctor was very much encouraged. But during the night he was not so well, and Tuesday morning was distinctly sinking. The consulting physician came, with the attending physician, about 11 A. M. The consulting physician is a German of great reputation. He said there was one recourse: to take out a piece of the rib, and remove all the pus; so he ordered his instruments and said he would be back at three o'clock.

We turned everything out of the two rooms we had been using for the sick one and nurses, and wiped the walls and floors with antiseptic and got all ready, but I said I was quite confident he was dying and did not believe the doctors would operate when they came. They looked at him and found his pulse very bad and concluded to give it up. From that until 2:25 A. M. he gradually grew weaker.

I was with him, right by him on the bed all night. A number of friends held prayer-meeting about three, thinking the operation was to take place. The strength I needed was given me to a marvelous degree. I felt distinctly upheld and supported.

Charles was conscious until about three-quarters of an hour before he died. Till 7 P. M. he rested easy. I sang to him, "Jesus, Savior, Pilot Me," and he asked me to sing "Faith is the Victory." He murmured, "Beautiful," as I finished. Later he said, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me shall never die." And he said, "Thank God." Christmas night the doctor told him he was very low, and asked him if he had any fear of death. He said, "No, I know whom I have believed." Then he told me about some final arrangements; that he wanted the funeral at the Y. M. C. A., in Japanese, and told me the names of the brethren he wished to lead it. A few days later there will be special English services in a chapel for the foreigners. He looks beautiful. His lovely hands are like pure alabaster. His face, always so pure and noble, is fair and peaceful. The lovely eyes are perfectly closed.

He will be surrounded by palms and flowers, and we will drape with flags. O, how the people love him! From the day-laboring carpenter to the M. P.'s and American Minister come messages of sympathy. Many letters I may be able to copy later. Doctor said yesterday the end was so near I had better ask if he had further messages. He answered, "My life is my message." Beautiful, kingly answer! I said, "Yes, darling, and a glorious message it has been. And your works will live after you." Once in the night he said so strong, "O my pets!" Again, "My dear little girl." Christmas night he said, "My love to all the relatives. Tell them I can only commend them to God who is able to raise them from the dead; that I have no confidence in any other."

Again, "Give my love especially to Loos, McLean and Rains, and all my fellowworkers. Tell the children I have loved them so and I am sorry I cannot perform a father's duty to them, but they must obey you, and do what is right before God; that they must trust in the Lord and do good." You know, dear ones, there is much else to write, but the mail goes to-morrow evening.

God is very good. Friends have gathered round us by the score. Nursing has not been wanting. My heart is so full of the things I long to write, but time fails me. I am marvelously sustained. I sat by him on the bed all the time. Part of the time his head was pillowed on my shoulder. I said, "Do you know I am here, sweetheart?" "Yes, darling," he would say, even when almost unconscious, to all appearances. He clasped my hand so warmly not more thsn three-quarters of an hour before he died. If I withdrew it, he would grope for it.

O, my precious darling! What a privilege to have been his seventeen sweet years. God bless and comfort you. Once while Charles was sick, before I came home, he was talking about his family to Miss Johnson, and after an interval he said, "She is a grand woman." 'Who, Bro. Garst?" asked Miss Johnson. He replied, "My sister Mary is a good woman." Good-bye, for this time, dear ones. The children are noble. Gretchen and Morrison are heart-broken. Precious Rachel says, "Papa le' me she so bad." She will miss the precious heritage her brother and sister have: the memory of a holy, devoted father.

LAURA DELANY GARST.

Chas. E. Garst.

(DIED DEC. 26, 1899, IN TOKIO, JAPAN.)

Death is the crown of life. To die well is a great achievement. Bro. Garst was bred a soldier. He was trained for the world's battles, but chose the nobler field of the soul. Its foes are the more subtle; its conflicts, mightier; its victories, worthier. Our Lord has said, "He that is great among you shall be servant of all," and servant is dia konos, i.e., through dust. Panting, dust-covered, the best runner touches the goal. The battle finished, the tired soldier loosens the cords of his helmet, puts off his armor and rests. The foreign field trics men and God thoroughly purifies and trains every soul that he counts worthy to labor in it. Bro. Garst grew to be thoroughly good. His was an unassertive, undemonstrative nature, with a golden thread of humor running through it. Many of his quaint sayings passed into aphorisms among us. There was no sting in his wit, and it had a beneficent quality—the power to turn tears into smiles. Under his quiet exterior there lay a mighty capacity for affection. It manifested itself in tender love for family; in quiet friendships; in yearning pity for lost souls; in zeal for his Captain's cause. He had intellectual power and has done more than any other man to shape the thought of New Japan along the lines of Christian economics. His was the genius of persistent, quiet effort. His great victory was won by a ceaseless putting down of self. He was like the tree planted by the rivers of water. If wounded, only kindly juices came from the hurt. The shade of his influence was a benediction, the fruit of his life a blessing. It was a pleasure to talk to him on a pleasant theme. Then the tall man with the homely face became inspired and beautiful. God trained him on the foreign field for fifteen years and then saw he was ready and called, "Come up higher." "My life is my message," he said to those who longed for some last word, and so perfected he entered that gate men call Death, and was lost to earthly sight forever. His fall has left a breach in our forces on the field, an ache in the hearts that knew and loved him. For him there was a sight of what eye hath not seen and the sound of the alleluias that sweep about the throne. There were some waiting for him, so not a stranger, but known and beloved, he entered his Father's house and rests from earth's toils forever.

"And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

Mr. Jackson's "Twenty Reasons."

Tenth—The baptism of the Ethiopian nobleman (Acts 8:26-40) was by effusion for four reasons: First, the correct rendering of the account would be, they went down to the water and came up from the water, the Greek preposition "eis" meaning "to," and not "into," and "ek" meaning "from," and not "out of." The word "down" is in antithesis with "up," and has reference to coming down out of the chariot. Second, the water supply, the water being only found in the wells. Third, the Scriptures he was reading and which were preached to him taught sprinkling. Fourth, "baptizo," in the New Testament Greek, means to sprinkle and pour.

Mr. Jackson is entitled to some credit for originality. Perhaps he is the first man who ever thought of coercing the baptism of the eunuch into the service of sprinkling. His reasons are truly remarkable. Assuming the functions of a translator he tells us that the "correct rendering of the account would be, they went down to the water and came up from the water." This would-be scholar does not deign to give any authority for his reckless assertion. It is not so rendered in any translation that has any standing among scholars. The Common Version, the Revised Version and Davidson's translation render it "into" and "out of." When Mr. Jackson says that eis does not mean "into" and ek does not mean "out of," he says what every tyro in scholarship knows not to be true; and if he does not know this he should not speak on this subject. The first meaning that both Buttman and Winer, in their Greek grammars, give to eis is "into;" and I do not suppose there is a Greek lexicon in existence that does not so define it. It is said of the swine that they rushed into (eis) the sea and perished in the waters. According to Mr. Jackson the swine merely rushed down to the sea and perished on the shore! It is said of an afflicted youth that an evil spirit often cast him both into the fire and into (eis) the waters to destroy him. Mr. Jackson's view of the matter is that the boy simply fell down near the water. It is difficult to deal with such childishness with any degree of patience. There is not a case in the New Testament in which eis is used to show the connection between an active verb and water, where the sense does not require the idea of into. All that has been said of eis may be also said of ek. The former means into and the latter means out of.

Every traveler knows that there is an abundant supply of water between Jerusalem and Gaza for immersion. And when Mr. Jackson says that the only water was in wells, he says what he does not know to be true, and what every intelligent person knows not to be true. Dr. Robinson says: "When we were at Tellel Hasy and saw the water standing along the bottom of the adjacent wady (Wadyel Hasy), we could not but remark the coincidence of several circumstances with the eunuch's baptism." The Scripture that the eunuch was reading says not one word about sprinkling. The quotation is given in full and there is no allusion to any use of water. The eunuch was reading the Septuagint translation, and in the chapter preceding the one he was reading that translation says, "He shall astonish (thaumazo) many nations." There is no sprinkle in it from first to last. Baptizo in the New Testament Greek does not mean to "sprinkle and pour," and no scholar ever so translated it. Such eminent scholars as Meyer and Harnack, who have a world wide reputation, say that it means to immerse in the New Testament, and nothing else. When such charlatans as Mr. Jackson gets the ears of the people as their teacher it is no wonder they are misled.

Eleventh—The baptism of Saul (Acts 9:18) means literally "standing, was baptized;" to make a case of immersion here you must suppose a tank, bath or pool.

It would be interesting to know by what right Mr. Jackson undertakes to revise all translations of the Scriptures. That he does not understand what he undertakes to do is made manifest by the fact that he translates a perfect participle as if it were a present: "standing, was baptized." For this translation there is no authority. The Revised Version has it, "He arose and was baptized." A literal translation would be, "Having arisen, he was baptized." It was necessary for him to arise to be baptized, which shows that it was not effusion; for that might have been done just as well while he was lying or sitting down.

Twelfth—The baptism of the "jailer and all his" (Acts 16:33) was by effusion for four reasons: First, Roman prison discipline would have forbidden their wandering off in seach of a pond; second, the proverbial hardships of Roman prisons preclude the possibility of the presence of a bath; third, Paul created the impression next morning that they had not been out; fourth, this being a household baptism in the prison and in the night strongly suggests effusion as the mode.

Does Mr. Jackson suppose that Paul would have allowed prison discipline to stand in the way of the performance of his religious duty? It was just as much against prison discipline to bring the prisoners out of the prison and feed them in the jailer's house as to go in search of water. Besides, they need not have left the prison for immersion. Paul neither said nor did anything the next morning to make the impression that he had not been out of prison. We know that he had been out of prison and had eaten a meal in the jailer's house. There is nothing to support Mr. Jackson's assertion that the baptism took place in the prison, and that circumstances show that it did not. The jailer brought the prisoners out of the prison, and afterward the preaching was done in the jailer's house. Then the jailer "took them." This shows that he took them to another place where he and his family were baptized. After this "he brought them up into his house." This shows that he had taken them down our of his house. All these facts clearly point to immersion and exclude effusion.

Thirteenth—The fact that St. Peter was reminded of John's baptism when he saw the Holy Ghost fall on the household of Cornelius, and called it baptism, is additional proof that John's baptism was by effusion (Acts 11:15, 16).

From what source did Mr. Jackson learn that Peter was reminded of John's baptism? The text says that he "remembered the Word of the Lord, how hat he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost." It was Christ's saying concerning being baptized with the Holy Spirit that came to his mind. The marginal rendering of the Revised Version is "in" instead of "with" the Spirit.

Fourteenth—In 1 John 5:7, 8 it is stated that the three in heaven that are one are the Father, Word and Holy Ghost. The three on earth that agree in one are the water, spirit and blood, and are always applied by effusion.

Mr. Jackson seems to feel under no obligation to show by any analysis or exegesis of a passage that it supports his contention. In this case he seems to think that the three witnesses here spoken of agree in their method of application. This is supremely absurd. It is perfectly obvious that they agree in their testimony. The proposition to be proved is that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. The Spirit bears testimony to this proposition through the Word. The crowning proof of the proposition is the resurrection of Christ from dead. The water bears monumental testimony to this fact in baptism. Every time a believer is buried and raised with Christ in baptism, the water says that he rose from the dead. The blood testifies to the death of Christ. Thus these three witnesses agree in their testimony to the divinity of Christ.

Fifteenth—To me another evidence in favor of baptism by effusion is to see Romans 6:4 mustered in to do service for immersion. "Burial with him by baptism unto death" has no reference to water baptism whatever, but is purely spiritual. The proof-text is, 1 Cor. 12:13, "For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body." The wresting of such Scripture to prove immersion and furnish sentiment for a "liquid grave" is an admission of weakness.

Here is another cluster of Mr. Jackson's bold, bald, baseless assertions. He seems to be especially fond of ganging to himself and opposing the learning of the world. Who are the people that wrest the passages referred to above into the support of immersion? Nearly everybody whose opinion is worth a blackeyed pea in such matters. Dr. Barnes, Dr. Myer, Dr. Lange, Dr. Bloomfield, Dr Chalmers, Dr. Macknight, Bishop Colenso, Bishop Wordsworth, Bishop Ellicott, Bishop Lightfoot, Charles Wesley, Adam Clarke and others too numerous to mention, all Pædobaptists, say that the passage to which Mr. Jackson alludes refers to immersion. Conybeare and Howson testify as follows: "This passage cannot be understood unless it be borne in mind that the primitive baptism was by immersion." Mr. Jackson vaults into the ring and knocks all of these great scholars and critics out after the following sweeping fashion: The passage "has no reference to water baptism whatever." "Would some power the gift to give us," etc.

"John Wesley and Adam Clarke . . . are sometimes quoted in favor of immersion. Some of Samuel Wesley's writings have been credited to John Wesley, hence John has been credited with immersion and baptismal regeneration views, but they are spurious." One scarcely knows how to treat this discreditable performance It is well known that John Wesley and Adam Clarke, in their acknowledged writings—Clarke's Commentary and Wesley's Notes—understand "buried with him in baptism" as clearly alluding to immersion. And yet Mr. Jackson has the hardihood to assert that these views are spurious and were never uttered by those men. It is too bad!

Cuba—An Inside View.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: — With the disposition and inclination to make a careful, discriminating and unprejudiced study of the status of this island, half a year in the very midst of these human problems; the Cuban's and their country; two months in and about Santiago; three months at Songo; high in the mountains, eighteen miles north of the sea, where Schley performed that great feat of naval surgery, and now at Holguin, over on the north side of the islands, has given me the opportunity—a rare one.

It will go without saying, that I no longer look at these human problems through the sentiment that, with the issuance of President McKinley's declaration, thrilled and electrified the American people, crystallizing them into, one compact, war-shaped personality. Nor do I see them through the ordinary newspaper reports. I have studied the Cuban in his thatch-roofed and clay-floored cabin, in the homes of the middle class and in the so-called palaces of the rich; studied the native-born Spaniard, the genuine Cuban and the native whose make-up is a tincture of this, that and the other. I have seen this problem, with all of his vices and immoralities, all his faults and frailties; seen whatever of virtue he possesses. I have looked at him from the standpoint of an American citizen; a lover of law and order, method and decency. As a Christian I have stood in the shadow of the cross of Christ and there looked at this problem. You ask me, What do you think of the Cuban? Turning upon him the eyes and thought of an American citizen, the average and unaveraged Cuban is a personified violation of every sense of decency, method, habit of industry, frugality, honesty and manliness. His vices and immoralities are shocking—obtrusively shocking. In the physical sense he is unclean; positively filthy. In that which pertains to his cabin life, he is not a degree above animalism. Not much beyond that in the moral belongings. He is the most ungrateful and unthankful creature imaginable. Even the more intelligent and better class manifest no spirit of gratitude toward America or Americans for all this vast outlay in human life and treasure. On the contrary, they make common prey of the army men, discriminating against them in the petty things of trade and dealing treacherously with them in the more important matters. I know what the newspapers say as coming from the Cuban leaders; all this talk about gratitude and friendliness. We who are in daily contact with these Cubans know better. These Cubans are vindictive, malicious, jealous, and to-day, now that we have driven out an enemy, they could not look upon us as interlopers. Their newspapers and public speeches are venomous and vituperative toward America and Americans. That is the spirit of the Cuban. The thrusting out of the military power of Spain was a mere bagatelle for men, impulsed and motiveized as were our soldiers, but the pacification of the spirit of the Cuban is another and far more difficult problem. The presence of the military power compels an acquiscence to the otward form of law and order, enforces certain sanitary features, but nothing of this touches or tempers the spirit of the native. There is no Spanish nor any other enemy on this island, yet the able-bodied Cuban remains in his camp out in the hills, armed and equipped for a fight; his women and children huddle in the towns, drawing rations from Uncle Sam, and the finest soil that God ever laid upon the hardpan of earth lies in waste. These Cubans will remain beneficiaries and will not return to the ways of peace and industry just as long as Uncle Sam will feed him or pay him. In the meantime the war-tax which was said to be a temporary thing goes on and will go on indefinitely. Very true, we are under a moral obligations to hold military sway on the island until a Cuban Government is put on its feet. If I judge fairly, and I think I do, there is neither ability nor disposition for self-government among these Cubans. Judging from the history of the Latin race wherever this race has attempted self-government it has not proved, so far, successful as to warrant us in intrusting them with their own government for many years to come. I believe our occupation here should be merely tentative, yet I see but little hope for the Cuban only in a permanent occupation by America. Certainly these Cubans have not yet reached that stage of development where they can successfully govern themselves.

France is to day more republican in form than in fact, and it would occasion no surprise to waken some morning and find that country in the hands of a dictator, emperor or king. Only the force of the character of her President prevents a revolution in Mexico. Cuba is far behind France or Mexico in common intelligence and ability. Among the native whites, as they are called here, less than 40 out of every 100 can either read or write. Among the lower class less than 15 out of every 100. My duties as chaplain and as the supervisor of the distribution of food to the poor takes me into these homes—rather living-places—and I have yet to find a Bible, a book or paper of any sort. Ignorance and illiteracy everywhere.

Then, as a Christian, with the love of Christ in my own heart, I look at these human problems and I ask, Does the solution lie in the application of the gospel principles? Does it lie in Christian education? Has God opened up this field for the service of Christian people of America? Will the application of the gospel of Christ make of this Cuban a self-respecting, self-reliant, upright, law-abiding, industrious man? Will it take out of him this spirit of maliciousness and revenge and vindictiveness? We preachers stand in our American pulpits and claim it for the avenue man and the slum man in God's country. Shall we deny it for this Cuban—this ignorant, illiterate, this mas of solid bestiality, this mere chunk of fleshed iniquity?

I confer to little hope for the man over twenty-five It will take a mighty power to wrench him out of his present status, but certainly among the children the tactful, self-sacrificing Christian teacher can sow the seed fr m which in the future a mighty harvest for Christ will be reaped.

God has opened the way; God has been conspicuously confederate with our work here. There is no longer any union of church and state and the Catholic Church has lost its hold upon the Cuban people The highest church prelate at Santiago told me this, and I have proof of it. These people are ready for the gospel. Since I came to the island I have baptized scores of children, married many Cubans, been called to the bedside of the dying. Many of these people have asked me, "When will the American teacher come to train our children?"

Whatever we attempt in the way of religion will have to be plain and clear and simple—like the method of the Christian Chuich. They want Christ as the way, the truth and the life. Now is the time. Here is the field.

New York Letter.

Dr. A. C. Dixon, the noted Baptist evangelist of Brooklyn, in speaking at his church a few nights ago on "Current Events Under Christian Searchlight," severely arraigned the Greco-Roman festival in progress at one of the Brooklyn armories to raise money for certain physicians. He endorsed the purpose, but attacked some of the methods being used. In the name of all honest physicians and Christian men he strongly protested against the gambling and tricks of chance. In the name of pulblic morality he also protested against the ball with which the festival is to close, sa ing physicians know better than others that such balls are against good morals. Dr. Dixon is to be honored for his vigorous protest. All ministers of the gospel should not cease to attack many methods in vogue for "sweet charity's sake." For instance, the annual "Charity Ball" of New York is a burlesque on the spirit of human sympathy and religion. Dancing for charity, eating ice cream for the church, throwing dice or taking 10 cents chances for a 10 dollar quilt for the Lord is disgraceful to say the least of it.

The press and pulpit have been scoring Bishop Potter for condemning the saloon as the poor man's club. Now, his ecclesiastical highness is compelled to come out in the public prints with a word of explanation. He says, "I have never expressed any opinion as to the dramshop; but in a recent address in behalf of coffee-houses, coffee wagons, coffee-carts and the like, I stated that something answering to the saloon, i. e., a place of inexpensive recreation and refreshment, would always be a necessity. I may add that until it is provided the mischiefs of the saloon, which no one recognizes more clearly than I, will continue. The saloon may be driven to cover, but it cannot be abolished. Something better, something wholesome, harmless, undefiled and undefiling must take its place and so expel it by substitution. Legislation has failed to do this and prohibition has failed. Denunciation has failed. It is simply a case for Christian capital, wisely employed, as the history of the Liverpool coffee houses has shown" That is all well and good, dear Bishop, but why not endeavor to lead poor men to see that the best club in which to spend their evenings is the home, surrounded by their families. It is the most inexpensive, the most wholesome, the most undefiled and undefiling club in the world. Why should not the pulpit begin a stronger advocacy of the home club than ever. The coffee-house for business hours and the home-house for the evening hours is a good motto.

Johns Hopkins University is making a decided effort to secure the Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, of this city, as assistant professor of English Literature. Perhaps no one would fill this position with more ability than Dr. Van Dyke, but at the same time, we recognize the need of the pulpit as well as the school. This man has done a great work at the Brick Presbyterian Church, as was shown in a recent New York Letter, and his people will do everything in their power to hold their pastor. For while Dr. Van Dyke has acknowledged literary ability he also has distinguished merit as a preacher of the gospel. And in his opinion the minister must first be a herald of God's message to men and make the literary finish of his pulpit work a secondary matter altogether. This view of the minister and his duty will have a strong tendency to keep him in New York, no doubt.

"I won't swear anybody on the Bible or tell him to kiss it. There is no law to compel any one to do so. All manner and classes of persons kiss the Bible in court and in a police court especially. The Bible is nothing more than a breeder of diseases. I have decided to discontinue its use and swear persons by having them hold up their hands." These are the words of Magistrate Pool, recently uttered in the Police Court of the 33rd precinct, near us here in New York. The italicized sentence above is very misleading and in reality false. Perhaps the presence of this great heavenly message in the police court disturbed the criminal justice's peace of mind more than anxiety for the health of the people

J. H. Bauserman.

James Henry Bauserman died Jan. 19th, at the home of his sister, Mrs. J. C. Evans, Valley Falls, Kansas, and was buried Jan. 20th, in Mt. Muncie cemetery, Leavenworth, Kan. The day of his burial was the sixty-third anniversary of his birth. He was born in Woodstock, Va., Jan. 20th, 1836. His parents moved to Ohio in 1839; here he was educated. After having taken the course of study in the public schools he graduated from Dennison College. Later he took a course in the North Western Christian University, in Indianapolis, Ind. He entered the ministry of the Christian Church in Emporia, Kan., in 1862. In 1865 he visited his old home in Ohio, held successful meetings and was located for a time as pastor of the church in Wooster. From there he went to Indiana, where in the autumn of 1867 he was married to Miss Cassie Lane, of Bainbridge. He and his young wife returned to Ohio, where he worked as an evangelist for two years. They then went to Kansas and remained two years, but returned to Indiana on account of the death of his wife's sister. Her own failing health caused him to remain in Indiana, except for a trip to Georgia, undertaken with the hope of ben fit to her. No permanent help was received, and in 1877 she passed to the country where none ever say, "I am sick." He returned to Kansas the same year and gave himself without reserve to the ministry. The wife of his heart was gone, no children had been given to call him "father," so he gave himself with a completeness such as is rarely seen to the preaching of the gospel. He never questioned the Word of God; what it said he accepted. He realized the value of time and the mmense power it possesses, when rightly used, as few men do. He knew no weariness in service; truly his meat was to do the will of his heavenly Father. Possessing unusual business qulifications he gathered means, yet money to him had but one use—that of extending the Master's kingdom. Few men search for preachers as did he. Among the very forefront of the ranks of our evagelists are men he discovered, to whom he gave encouragement and substantial help. This he delighted to do. No man could have been more unselfish in appreciation and praise. He was quick to recognize merit, quick to help where help was needed; nor did he ever claim praise or honor for himself.

The Kansas work occupied the place of wife, children and home in his large and kindly heart. The wife of his early manhood was never forgotten; to those who were closest to him he would speak of her witb pathetic tenderness, then acknowledging the goodness of God in giving to his children eternal hope and life, he would turn to the work with unfailing energy and and industry. It was his deep desire to have the gospel preached in every part of Kansas; he felt if Christ were received into the hearts of men all lesser matters would adjust themselves. Had the church at large the simplicity and directness of obedience possessed by this friend who has gone from us, the last command of our Savior would soon be obeyed. Every missionary enterprise had in him a warm friend, a loyal supporter. It was his desire to train even the children of the church in his beloved state to give to and pray for missions.

Two years before his death he left the Kansas work and visited California. He greatly enjoyed his stay there. Returning he stopped in Utah that he might learn the conditions and needs of that field. Reaching Ogden he found the mission of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions without a pastor and greatly needing help. Being urged by the National Board to remain, he consented and worked earnestly to rally the forces. He only remained about three months, for rapidly failing health warned him to seek the home of his sister. The physicians pronounced his trouble to be a malignant tumor. While his friends felt there could be but one result, they hoped he might remain with them for awhile. The last examination was made Dec. 14th. On the 15th he wrote, "There is no hope; I am to die, but this does not move me; I can say, 'Not my will but thine be done.' They tell me I am very patient; if so I thank the Lord for it. He is my only trust, my only hope." He was indeed the supreme trust and hope of this strong, true life.

We were chosen to serve the Kansas work the same year—1889; from that time forward until his death we were closely associated in work for Christ. No truer servant of our Master have I ever met—tireless faithful, loyal, strong and true—so far as any man could, he has richly earned the rest that is his, yet no one knew more truly than he that it is the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that bringeth salvation.

There are many to miss him, many to feel keenely that words of appreciation which should have been spoken were left too long unsald, but I think those who knew him best will miss him most deeply, and to them the memory of his unselfishness and Christly life will be an inspiration to better service.

HELEN E. MOSES.

Texas Letter.

J. B. Boen returns to Texas from Guthrie, Oklahoma, March 1, and resumes work under the auspices of the state board. His work there is pleasant and prosperous, but his heart yearns for the evangelistic field, where he has had a brilliant record. We welcome the prodigal back and hope he will not leave us any more.

Prof. J. B. Sweeney leaves Add-Ran University, where he has been a vital factor for three and a half years, and returns to his first love, the pastorate. With Feb. 1 he becomes pastor of the Gainesville Church, one of the best in the state. A church never made a better choice than this and a great work will be done.

J. S. Sherrill, one of our elders at Greenville, has been elected speaker of the Texas House of Representatives. The Courier, commenting on the fact, says: "If the legislature shall act as wisely in all other matters as it has in the election of a speaker, the people will have reason to rejoice."

V. R. Stapp leaves Mellissa for Allen and will preach for the churches at Allen and Ladonia. Any church is blessed in the pastoral care of a man like Stapp.

L. B. Grogan goes from Bowie to Rockwall. A personal knowledge of the opportunities in this good town makes me feel a peculiar interest in his success there.

Blooming Grove employs Arthur W. Jones as pastor, but proposes to use him half the time as a missionary. Thus will they sound out the truth in the regions round about.

G. S. Kimberly removes from Tuling to Seguin and will try to build up the mission church at that point.

The Courier, like most young church papers, has had a struggle. Debt like a millstone has hung about its neck so that at times we almost despaired of its life. But the future is brighter now, and there is almost positive assurance that in a short time it will be freed from debt entirely. The church has no power for good in the state greater than the Courier, hence our joy at this pleasing prospect.

The Third Church at Ft. Worth, Homer T. Wilson, pastor, has laid the corner stone of the new tabernacle, which is to cost $20,000. The drummers, of whom Wilson is both national and state chaplain, will put in a handsome window at a cost of $750.

S. K. Hallam goes to Rosswell, New Mexico. As we have to give him up, we are glad he goes there; for we need in all new territory our wisest men. Besides, he is not far from us, and we hope to see him often.

J. A. Challener, on account of poor health, resigns his work at San Marcos and goes on a ranch. It is sad to have one of our useful men leave his work. But we hope he will soon recover and return to it with new vigor and power.

Granville Jones, the gifted pastor at Midland, is writing a religious novel and I know no man in our ranks better qualified for the task. There is a dearth of high-grade literature of this kind. Let us have more of it.

Senator Charles A. Culberson is his title now. A few years since he was a young lawyer. Then he was attorney-general. Next he was governor. During his administration the state came near being disgraced as a prize fight arena The great amphitheatre for the fight was almost completed here in Dallas. He said it should not be. The legislature was convened in extra session and a law was enacted that saved us from disgrace. The "lewd fellows of the baser sort" said they would remember him, and so they did, but others did the same, and he was elected governor a second term. And now, at the end of the second term, by an almost unanimous vote of the legislature, he becomes the successor of Roger Q. Mills in the United States Senate. So Texas is not ruled, as some seem to think, by roughs and toughs. Come down and live with us. Don't be afraid. Your life and property will be as secure here as in New England.

Notes and News.

The new church building of the Bethany Christian Church, Ohio, was dedicated on last Sunday by Chas. R. Scoville, of Hiram College, Ohio.

The annual meeting of the Christian Orphans' Home Board will be held on Thursday, Feb. 9th at 8 P. M., at the Home, 915 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Mrs. R. M. Kilgore, of Louisville, Ky., says that the church there is making arrangements now for an excursion to the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati, next fall, by the river route. Details will be given later on.

Any church having a few copies of hymn and tune books which it is not using and will be willing to donate where they will do good, please send to or correspond with F. D. Pettit, Alcott, Col., who will place them where needed.

Concerning the new house recently dedicated at Boston, W. A. Belding, acting pastor, says: "They have a beautiful little house built of stone, and as complete in all its departments as you often see." The house is 32 Regent St., Roxbury, Mass.

The annual state meeting of the Church of Christ of Florida will be held in Bartow, Feb. 28, March 1-2, 1899. Those attending send word to Sister Benella Davenport, Bartow, Fla. Dr. Gordon, of India, will represent the F. C. M. S. F. J. LANGDON, JR.

DeLand, Fla., Jan. 21, 1899.

A. J. Busch, Abilene, Texas, writes favorably of things in that region. The church at Abilene met all obligations, paid all apportionments, had 60 additions, all in 1898, and is now planning for a new house of worship. Abilene is the centre of a large commercial center and a strategic point, and we are glad to hear of the success of the church at that point.

From the printed copy of the proceedings of the 54th annual session of the North Carolina Christian Missionary Convention held at Salem, Pitt County, Oct. 25 28, 1898, we obtained the following figures: Church members, 11,252; value of church property, $65,850; paid for preaching, $7,295 71; for State Missions, $817.62; for Home Missions, $122.72; for Foreign Missions, $401.33.

G. A. Reiul, Brockton, Mass., writes encouragingly of the work in the East. A new house of worship was dedicated at Brockton last October and another at Roxbury last month. The church at Worcester, R. A. Nichols pastor, is prospering finely. They are enlarging their house and planning for greater things. Work on the foundation for a new house at Everett has already begun. R. H. Bolton is the pastor.

G. F. Gald, St, Paul, Cor. Sec. for Minnesota, says: Austin has called J. S. Miller to its pastorate. Bro. Johnson has been supplying the pulpit. Their Y. P. S. C. E. numbers 60; their B.-S. 75. Shellenberger, of Madelia, will hold a meeeting at Garden City after he closes at Madelia. The calls for help are urgent. Some churches have not paid their pledges for the state work. Bro. McCurdy has been recalled until more money is supplied. Bro. Goodman is in a good meeting at Redwood.

The National Congress of Mothers will hold its third annual meeting in Washington, this month, from the 14th to the 17th inclusive, and will include on its program speakers who are authorities of wide reputation on the subjects which they will present. The meetings of the Congress will be held in the First Baptist Church, Sixteenth and O Sts. (where the first Congress was held), and the headquarters for delegates and visitors will be "The Cairo," which is within two blocks of the church. Reduced rates will be given on all railroads and also at the hotel.

H. A. Denton, of Centralia, Mo., superintendent Sunday-school department of the Missouri Endeavor Union, makes the following requests:

(1) The appointment of a Sunday-school committee in every Endeavor not having one, for we must work through these committees to accomplish our ends.

(2) A Bible class of Endeavorers meeting weekly for the close study of the lesson for the following Sunday. Probably your pastor will act as instructor for you. Ask him.

(3) A class of volunteer teachers who will give their names to the Sunday school superintendent, and attend every Sunday ready to teach if called upon. You will get your preparation at the Bible class above mentioned.

(4) To get some of the volunteer teachers to read and explain the Sunday-school lesson to the shut-ins during the Sunday-school hour, or at some time during the day.

(5) To make an effort to get all Endeavorers to attend the Sunday-school.

(6) To get members of Sunday-school committees to take some time each week to canvass for new pupils and visit sick and indifferent members of the Sunday-school.

If you cannot take up all of these features, take what you can and begin work at once. For furth r information and report of work done address the superintendent at Centralia.

State Mission Notes.

Item in daily newspaper from Mexico, Mo.: "The Baptist State Missionary Society held its regular monthly meeting here to-day, and three thousand dollars was appropriated for work in the state: they have now about fifty missionaries in the field, and reports from them indicate great enthusiasm and success."

The italics in the above sentences are mine, and "thereby hangs a tale." Several years ago our Baptist brethren let go of their special state work, combining it with the General Home Mission work. The result was so disastrous that they have now returned to their former plan and are pushing their state missions with more zeal, enthusiasm and consecration than ever before, and the results are so manifest that it is increasing their determination to make no more such disastrous experiments. They had men among them who imagined and openly declared that the time had come for the abandonment of any special state mission work. The advice of these men was heeded, and the result was so very disastrous to them. They have been wise enough to quickly see their mistake and as quickly apply the remedy.

Is there no lesson in this for us? When they abandoned their state work they numbered more than any other Protestant body in the state. We pushed our state work, and they lost their leadership in this regard. They are aroused now; three thousand dollars per month and fifty men in the field means a wonderful increase for them.

I find some of our people, who if not by word of mouth, yet by indifference and neglect, are saying that the mission of our state mission forces has been accomplished, that no longer do we need to push with the zeal and enthusiasm of the past. To them the experience of our Baptist brethren should come with "convincing and converting power." I know whereof I affirm when I say that there is just as great need, that the calls are just as urgent and as worthy, that the opportunities are just as great as ever in the history of our work. We ought to have a good strong evangelist in each of the districts, and there are many counties in which we ought to place a man for all his time. Who will help us in this work? Has your church observed Missiouri Day? Why not? Let the cry go forth as never before, "Missouri for Christ and a united church." T. A. ABBOTT.

What We Have Heard.

That the wanderer will return very shortly and that when he does, S. D. Dutcher intends to remain, so that all his friends will be glad to know that he is to locate with the Mexico people. Welcome home, say all.

That E. J. Wright has taken the work at Missouri Valley, Ia., a suburb of Des Moines, and that he has begun his work very auspiciously. Bro. Wright will do the Iowans good and faithful work, and with their prayerful cooperation will be successful in his effort.

That Harold E. Monser, Palestine, will divide his time for 1899 among the Pilot Grove, Tipton, Walnut Grove and Clarksburg brethren, and in the mean time will put out a fruit orchard, hoping hereby to prepare for a rainy day, which we hope will not come soon to Harold.

That Geo. W. Terrell has rented a farm near Lees Summit and will move on the same shortly, thus being much nearer his congregations, giving his time this year to Lees Summit, Hickman and possibly Greenwood.

That F. O. Fannon has begun a meeting at Hannibal with Levi Marshall under very favorable auspices, and that he will continue three weeks, hoping to take the city for Christ and peace among men.

That N. J. Nicoson has been granted a two months' vacation on account of his throat trouble, and that he will likely spend the time at Manatee, Florida, with his wife and children. His father-in-law and family are also there. The workers at Monroe City will see to matters while their pastor is away.

That Jno. P. Jesse will continue at Gower, also preaching at Faucett, Wallace and Dekalb, one-fourth time at each place. The way some men wear seems to indicate their work.

Eugene McFarland is glad to be among the Missourians again and that he will preach half time at Bolckow, also at Salem, living in Bolckow. Eugene is one of the Missourians that we are glad to see return, and his work is always acceptable and successful.

That J. M. Boothe will make his home at Blythedale and preach one Sunday for Cline, Hatfield and Mt. Olive, No. 2.

That F. V. Loos, Liberty, will divide his time between Smithville, Olivet and Gilcad, preaching half time for the first.

That A. O. Riall, Camden Point, will add to his school by preaching one-half time for Salem, Platte and one Sunday for Dearborn, agreeing to preach for them until they get some one more satisfactory. See?

That W. G. Surber, Moberly, will preach half time again this year for Middle Grove, and the other Sundays for Salem, Saline and Pleasant Grove.

That W. D. McCully, Frankford, will give them half time, preaching the other Sundays at Liberty and Salt River.

That Jno. B. Corwine, New London, will give half time to Perry, where he served four years, and he will also preach for Bethel, and has one spare Sunday. H. F. DAVIS.

Missouri C. W. B. M.

It is hoped that the few auxiliaries that have not sent in their reports for the first quarter of the missionary year will do so at once.

A great many auxiliaries have observed C. W. B. M. Day and a few will yet observe it.

My correspondence reveals the fact that great preparation will be made for the "silver celebration" in April. Some auxiliaries will give receptions and others will hold public services. The mite boxes should be given to all members and friends at once and these should be handed in at these April meetings. They should contain liberal offerings. Many a sister can, by a little sacrifice, make this year memorable by giving a life membership—celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary by giving twenty-five silver dollars. Is it too much to give to one we love? What we give is saved for eternity. Christ may even now "sit over against the treasury and behold how the people cast money into the treasury." Would we be ashamed for him to see? No, if we cultivate his spirit and test our gifts by that searching question, "What would Jesus do?"

Sister Helen Moses has been ill, but we hope that she will soon recover and can visit some of the Missouri auxiliaries in the spring. If your auxiliary can arrange for her please inform me.

Some of our managers will go out and organize their own districts. Mrs. Hull and Miss Turpin will start very soon. If any pastor or friend of the cause desires a visit from the state organizer, with the hope of starting an auxiliary, I would be glad to hear. I desire to gather these facts and then arrange a tour for her.

Our president, Sister Alice Williams, will go to any who desire organization now. She will also attend the district conventions and speak in the interest of the C. W. B. M. An evening address from Sister Williams will help any program.

I pray that we may all do our best for Christ and his cause this year.

VIRGINIA HEDGES.

Christian College Jubilee Fund.

It is well known that Christian College, located at Columbia, Mo., is one of the oldest and most influencial institutions of its kind in the state. It has had a most remarkable history. Its graduates are found in nearly every community of Missouri as well as in many other states, and these, wherever found, are among the most cultured and influential women of their neighborhoods.

The influence of this college upon the Christian Church of the state cannot easily be overestimated. It is believed by some competent judges to have been a more potent factor than any other in giving the Christian Church of Missouri its present high and permanent standing. Indeed, there are not a few who think its influence in this respect has been greater than all our other educational institutions of the state combined. Whether this latter claim can be sustained or not, no one will deny that the college has done much for the cause which the Disciples plead, as its graduates and students have usually been most active members of the Christian Church.

The time has come when the friends of the Christian Church and of education ought to show their appreciation of the work Christian College has done by heartily responding to its present cry for help. The college was never in a more prosperous condition than it is at present. "Why, then, does it need help?" some one may ask. The answer is, "It needs more room and better room." The boarding department is now literally overcrowded. There is no room for another boarder. Besides, the great improvements which have been introduced in the whole teaching department require additional and suitable buildings.

The trustees have under consideration plans which, if they are carried out, will give the college entirely new buildings; and should these buildings be erected the management will be enabled to make Christian College, for the Southwest, a second Wellesley, where our young women can be educated in a manner commensurate with the highest development of female character.

It is proposed to have these new buildings completed by the fifteenth anniversary of the founding of the college, which will be the first year of the new century. Surely, this will make a conjunction of events strikingly appropriate for a jubilee celebration; and it is hoped, therefore, that everything will be ready by that time, so that all who contribute to the enterprise may unite in a great demonstration suitable to such an occasion. In any case additional dormitory buildings for fifty young ladies will be ready next fall.

Mrs. Luella Wilcox St. Clair, who preceded Mrs. W. T. Moore as president of the college, has been invited by the trustees to raise money for this magnificent enterprise. She has unselfishly agreed to enter the field as solicitor and will begin her work at once. She and Mrs. Moore are in hearty sympathy as regards the present needs of female education in the Southwest, and consequently the college will be conducted according to well defined and well-understood principles. These principles will be explained by Mrs. St. Clair in a comprehensive and fascinating lecture on "The Twentieth Century Woman." The lecture will be delivered free, wherever it may be desired, as it is the object of Mrs. St. Clair to explain fully the high ideal which Christian College has set before it, before she asks a penny from any one.

I take great pleasure in commending Mrs. St. Clair to all the friends of education wherever she may go, and to assure those who will provide for her lecture that they will hear one of the most remarkable addresses of its kind ever delivered from any platform.

Endowment by the People.

HIRAM COLLEGE JUBILEE MOVEMENT.

The great movement for the endowment of Hiram College by the people is making commendable progress. Names are coming in and this effort is attracting the attention of people everywhere. Now let us move together and see what can be done by a great united effort! It has been charged against us as a people that we lack the power of co-operative effort. Is this true? It would be a great pity if this were so. Let us demonstrate, once for all, that in a great emergency we can move unitedly for the accomplishment of a great work.

We ought to have the co-operation of at least four thousand churches in our great brotherhood. This can be done if four thousand preachers will lend their support. Brethren in the ministry, will you not do this?

In the meantime, let every one hasten to send in his name. There is great inspiration in names. Address, E. V. ZOLLARS.

Hiram, Ohio.

"Can I Love my Enemies?"

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—John Ruskin says: "Every duty we omit obscures some truth we should have known" Whether a duty or not I have been impressed for a time to ask you of the advisability of having the articles, "Can I Love my Enemies?" by N. J. Aylsworth, republished.

It seems from my standpoint, "almost a shut-in," that it would be a living benediction to any one once interested enough to read it. Would it be presuming too much on wiser, more experienced heads for me to ask that it be published in book form, some to be bound in dainty, attractive covers for holiday presents, others in cheaper bindings? It is too true, too precious, too wisely written to be passed only through a weekly.

Where one is so secluded from public worship, from mingling with church and people, it is good to think that one's little acts and thoughts might be a seed-thought in some sad heart to turn it heavenward.

In this case I would turn it for reflection on this little booklet. It is so much easier to push the wheels of progress than to "stand and wait." When I read in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of the great strides that have been made since we took our stand among the Disciples, and the class of reading matter being now what my heart called for years ago, I am rejoiced to see the day of such progress in teachings and the demand for a more Christ-like living. To you, my dear brother, we owe much of this instruction. May you never grow too weak or fail to do your work on the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST until you are passing "through the valley and shadow," is the prayer of yours sincerely,

MRS. D. E. COOK.

5739 Clemence Ave., St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 23, 1899.

[We entirely agree with Sister C.'s judgment, that the articles on "Can I Love my Enemies?" should be put in permanent form, and shall so recommend.—EDITOR.]

Notes From the Foreign Society.

JANUARY, 1899.

The receipts for the last month amounted to $4,372.39.

John Johnson, of Smyrna, writes that the Lord is giving him some encouragement. It is easy in a place like Smyrna to build "wood, hay and stubble." It is not so easy to build "gold, silver and precious stones." This requires wisdom, patience and persistence. If he does not succeed he says it will not be from want of desire, prayer or effort.

The chapel in Constantinople is frequently crowded Mr. Chapman preaches part of the time through an interpreter. He also preaches in English to such English-speaking people as wish to attend. Twice a week he has Bible study.

Dr. Kevorkian has recently baptized two men and two women in Tocat. He hopes that one of these will be very useful in the church.

Miss Mildred Franklin reached Damoh, India, on the 5th of November. She began at once the study of the language. Miss Franklin will take up the work at Hurda, which Miss Judson laid down in death.

Mr. and Mrs. Rioch arrived in Bombay on the 11th of December. They had a very stormy passage. The weather was good only four days out of 31. They will spend the winter at Hurda. They began at once the study of the language.

M. D. Adams reports four baptisms.

Dr. Drummond is very busy with the patients in the hospital and dispensary. Recently he has performed a number of surgical operations.

C E Garst and H. H. Guy have been making a two weeks' trip into the country. Over 2,000 people heard the gospel. On this tour they sold fifty copies of the Acts.

M. B. Madden writes that the work in Sendai is starting off well. The audiences range from 50 to 200. He reports seven baptisms at Akozu. He writes that a number of young men in Fukushima are earnestly studying the Scriptures and have almost decided to become Christians.

F. H. Marshall writes that the work this year is fully up to last year's standard in respect to baptisms.

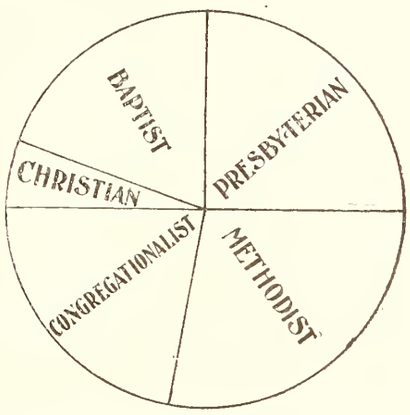
R. L. Pruett writes that now is the time to strike in Japan. Next year the country will be thrown open to foreigners. He writes that one of the first lessons to be learned in Japan is patience. Love, labor and patience are the three attributes of a successful missionary.

The workers in Japan are greatly distressed over the death of C. E. Garst. Few men had such a thorough mastery of the language as he. He delighted in evangelistic work. Because of his patience and gentleness he got along well with the Japanese. He gave his life for that land and that people. Mrs. Garst and her children will likely come home.

Dr. and Mrs. Dye sailed from New York for Africa on the 21st of January. They will spend a few days in England learning about the work and obtaining some supplies. The society has taken over Bolengi from the Baptists. The station has several buildings. It cost about four times as much as the society has paid for it. It will be of the greatest advantage to the missionaries in the field. The Baptists have dealt most generously with us in this matter.

E. E. Faris, writing on the 7th of December, states that he is in good health.

Dr. H. G. Welpton is spending the winter in Lu Cheo fu with Mr. and Mrs. Titus. He is giving his whole time to the study of the language.



Dr. and Mrs. E. I. Osgood will go to Lu Cheo fu as soon as Mr. Arnold has the place in readiness for them.

James Ware reports large attendance at the mission in Yangtzepoo Road, Shanghai. The day-school there is second to none in the city. Day by day the teachers make it their special business to instruct the pupils in the gospel.

F. E. Meigs wants very much a good-sized paper cutting machine for the mission printing office. Perhaps some good brother will furnish the machine or the money with which to buy it. He needs also a small dynamo for illustrative purposes. Moreover, he needs some small sets of physical apparatus. These can be had for from fifty to seventy-five dollars gold, and would be of the greatest advantage to him in the work. A small treadle job press would also help. It is greatly needed. The printing office is full of business, but he has not the machinery he needs and has no money with which to buy it. A. McLEAN.

What They Gave For Foreign Missions.

Last year the Baptist, Methodist, Congregational, Presbyterian and the Christian Church gave $3,380,000 Foreign Missions. The following diagram illustrates the amount given by each:

These churches gave as follows, in round numbers:

Methodists (North)	$946,400
Presbyterians	835,500
Baptists	782,400
Congregationalists	687,200
Christian Church	130,900

Why should we stand at the bottom when we are stronger numerically than the Congregationalists? Why should we give only about ten cents per member when we have an abundance of wealth? Why should less than three thousand churches give when we have more than seven thousand? And why is it that the churches whi h do give average only about $15 each? Why is it that many of the strong churches give absolutely nothing to evangelize the nations of the earth? Do we believe the commission? Do we believe what our Lord taught on the subject of missions?

The time has come for better things. All the signs of the times, all the lessons of the past, every prophecy of the future, all providential openings of the past year, and voices which come borne to us by every breeze and from every nation under heaven, all alike bid us lay our plans upon a scale worthy of men who expected to conquer the world.

If you have not ordered Missionary Voice, March Offering Envelopes, do so at once.

The time for the offering is the first Sunday in March. The time is at hand.

A. McLEAN,
F. M. RAINS.

A Lesser and a Greater Blessing.

The Savior says it is more blessed to give than to receive.

On the glad New Year's, 1899, there came to me from our National C. W. B. M. headquarters a little gift. I received it gladly and was blessed in the receiving. It was "only a white box," but it made me a happier, better woman.

It came from our wise, faithful leaders, calling on and up to a higher plane of Christian living, working, giving. It bore inspiring, uplifting messages from their devoted hearts. On its face our seal—the words, "The Christian Woman's Board of Missions," encircling the Bible, wide open. What a study for us! On the right side was "Count your Blessings." I tried, but failed. They were too many. On the left side was "Gifts for the Silver Year." It was not only the first day of the year, but the first of the week as well, the day to "lay by in store." I dropped in a coin.

On the back was our rally cry for this year—"$90,000 in '99." Just below this "And when thy herds and thy flocks multiply and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied and all that thou hast is multiplied . . . thou shalt remember the Lord thy God; for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth." Aye, "he giveth thee power to get wealth," but the wealth is his. Every beast of the forest and the cattle upon a thousand hills, the silver and the gold, all are "mine," saith the Lord of hosts. Thou shalt remember him and give back to him of his own in service and in gifts as he has prospered thee is his Word.

On the top, as a crown of glory over all, was our motto—"The Love of Christ Constraineth Us." What an impelling power! What ought we not to accomplish by it?

Sisters of the C. W. B. M., each one in Illinois—aye, everywhere—did you receive such a gift? But of course you did. Are you using it? Are you week by week, month by month, dropping into it silver gifts that shall be the means of eternal life to many a now godless, Christless soul, thereby making your own heart happier, your own life richer, your own future brighter and the world better? And did you read that fervent appeal enclosed within the box? And along with it did you study that eighth chapter of Deuteronomy? If perchance your box failed to reach you, please send at once and get one and prove its blessedness by its use in this our silver anniversary year. The receiving is the lesser, the using the greater blessing. ELMIRA J. DICKINSON.

Palouse, Jan. 23.—Three added by letter and one by primary obedience.—E. C. WIGMORE.

Centralia, Jan. 28.—Our meeting continues with unabated interest; 22 additions to date. Will continue two weeks longer; go from here to Roseburg, Ore., for our next meeting. This is a splendid missionary field. The brethren at Castle Rock and Dayton, Wash., want us to hold meetings for them. We closed our work at The Dalles, Ore., the beginning of the year, with 89 additions during the year—W. V. BOLTZ.

Oakesdale, Jan. 23—I have just returned from Dixie, Wash. Held a union meeting there, assisted by the Baptists and Methodists; had 16 additions to the church and one of the very best meetings I ever had the privilege of conducting.—W. B. ROSE.

KANSAS.

Topeka, Jan. 28.—Am in a meeting at Rossville; began the 13th. Seven added to date. The "grip" interferes, but we continue.—I. T. LE BARON.

Peabody, Jan. 31.—Two added to this congregation last Sunday, one confession. We hope to see good results from the work done here in the near future. To-day we bury our good Bro. Wm. Hulett who for many years has been one of the faithful followers of Christ. He leaves a feeble and aged widow who will soon follow him to the life beyond. This is three aged men for whom I have been called to preach their funeral in three weeks.—L. W. KLINKER.

The Plainville Christian Church just closed a meeting held by the pastor, Mrs. Clara H. Hazelrigg, assisted by Miss Clara Jordan, of Topeka, as singer; 19 were added to the church. Since the pastorate of Mrs. Hazelrigg began with this church 85 persons have accepted Christ. Bro. Vallette, of Stockton, did the baptizing during the meeting.

OHIO.

Portsmouth, Jan. 31.—S. H. Bartlett, of Painesville, Ohio, has just closed our fifth annual meeting with 96 additions.—J. F. DAVIS.

Cincinnati, Jan. 30.—The Walnut Hills Church is in a good meeting. J. M. Kersey, of Washington, Pa., is doing the preaching, and he is doing it well. Seven confessions last night. Our recent annual report showed a net gain of 30 for the year and a larger per cent. of the membership contributing to the current expense than at any time in the history of the congregation.—S. D. DUTCHER.

Youngstown, Jan. 30.—Our meeting at the Central Christian Church, this city, closed with 17 added the last day and 13 the last invitation; total of 165. The church gave the new members a grand reception to-night. Bro. Lincoln Davis, pastor, with well-chosen words presented each convert a copy of the New Testament Scriptures. I go to Evansville, Ind., to dedicate Bethany Church in that city and hold a meeting following. Then go to Springfield, Ill, where Jay E. Lynd is pastor. Frank C. Huston, soloist and cornetist, will be my musical director from this date.—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE.

UTAH.

Salt Lake City, Jan. 30.—Our meeting, which was begun on the first day of January, closed last night with a crowded house and a deep interest. Indeed, it seemed that we were just in the midst of the interest when we had to close. With the exception of one sermon the preaching was all done by the pastor of the church. With but few exceptions the sermons were upon "first principles." To this fact I attribute the interest and success. "What must I do to be saved?" is still a most interesting question to the masses of the people. There were 24 additions to the congregation, 15 being by baptism, three came from other religious bodies, all being heads of families. Among those baptized was Bro. D. R. Francis, a Congregational minister of experience and ability. On Tuesday night after his baptism on Monday night, he preached an able sermon, with which the people were much pleased. Bro. C. E. Millard as singer rendered invaluable help in drawing audiences and preparing the hearts of the people for the reception of the truth. To pastors desiring to hold their own meeting I would recommend him most heartily. Our first year with the Salt Lake church will close on Feb. 12. There have been 58 additions during the year, and but few subtractions, giving us a net gain of about 50. The church is united and harmonious, and starts out upon the new year full of zeal and hope.—W. H. BAGBY.

MISSOURI.

McFall.—T. W. Cottingham's meeting here is five days old; crowded house and growing interest. Bro. C. is presenting things both old and new with telling effect.—F. W. K.

Laddonia, Jan. 30.—We have been here one week with two added. Our work starts off very nicely. I have been called to the work here for '99, but will continue to live at Mexico. I have also had my fifth consecutive call for labor at New Bloomfield, Mo. The church has more than doubled since I began here. I also had one confession at a recent visit to Shiloh in Manitau county.—J. D. GREER.

B. F. Hill, California, reports 11 accessions to date; meting two weeks old.

Kahoka, Jan. 31.—One addition at Kahoka, by obedience.—A. J. CARRICK.

Kansas City, Jan. 30.—Carey E. Morgan has just closed a three weeks' meeting with the First Church here, with 24 additions, and a spiritual benediction upon the membership. We shall reap much fruit during the year before us from his faithful and inspiring sermons, and his Christlike personality and behavior. Such ministers of Christ are the world's greatest boon.—W. F. RICHARDSON.

Quitman, Jan. 30.—Nineteen additions to this church; 13 confesions and baptisms. Two Methodists, one Presbyterian, three reclaimed.—S. R. REYNOLDS.

Farmington, Jan. 31.—Two additions yesterday. Have made a very pleasant beginning with the work here, preaching two Sundays each month. I also continue the work at Piedmont for half time. Hopeful outlook at both places.—A. M. HARROLD.

IOWA.

Griswold, Jan. 27.—E. W. Brickert, of Red Oak, doing the preaching, and Sister Zadee Shipley soloist and chorus leader. Fine audiences from the first; 24 accessions up to Thursday evening.—E. E. KNEEDY, pastor.

Newton, Jan. 30.—Closed a short meeting here by the pastor. On account of La Grippe and measles were only able to continue eight days; result, 14 additions; 10 by baptism; one a man 72 years old.—J. C. HANNAH.

Brighton.—In a meeting at Hillsboro with eight additions to date.—C. L. WALKER.

Mason City, Jan. 31.—W. E. Harlow commenced a meeting at Charles City, last Lord's day. The church there owns a building, but needs reviving.—H. I. PRUSIA.

Ames, Feb. 1.—For January one addition. The Sunday-school has increased in attendance until we now have the largest school in the city.—JAS. R. MCINTIRE.

Mason City, Jan. 30.—Our meeting, with S. M. Martin as evangelist, has just entered the fourth week; 39 have come forward, 27 confessions. There were 17 yesterday, mostly adults. At the men's meeting at three o'clock 300 men took the pledge of the "White Cross."—SUMNER T. MARTIN.

Red Oak, Jan. 3.—Wife and I have just closed a fine meeting with E. E. Kneedy at Griswold. The church was encouraged and 24 added. Bro. K. is one of our strongest young men. Ten accessions here since last report.—E. W. BRICKERT.

Des Moines, Jan. 28.—The University Church's meeting is three weeks old lacking a day, with 104 accessions. About one half of these are by confession and from other religious bodies. Expect to close next week. La grippe is in almost every family. Attendance large.—I. N. MCCASH.

ILLINIOS.

Rock Island, Feb. 3.—We have just completed a four weeks' meeting with home forces, resulting in 39 accessions to the church; 31 by baptism.—T. W. GRAFTON.

Newton, Jan. 29.—We closed at West Salem, 26th. Began at Newton, Feb. 1st. This is the home of Hale Johnson, prohibition ex-candidate for Vice-President and at present his home is my home.—C. M. HUGHES, singer.

Victor Dorris, of Georgetown, Ky., and H. A. Easton, singer, of Danville, Ill., are in a meeting with the church at Paris, Ill., J. E. Davis, pastor, with 25 additions at close of the second week.—MRS. H. A. EASTON

Paris.—Had a good meeting at Clayton. It was hard to get an interest owing to bad weather, bad roads and some local conditions. Had 16 additions by confession and a few by letter. Bro. H. C. Vandervoort is the pastor, and I found him to be a good preacher and a true yokefellow.—H. M. BROOKS.

Williamsville, Feb. 2.—Meeting closed; 16 additions.—W. W. WEEDON.

West Salem, Jan. 27.—Closed here last night with 24 added. Begin at Newton, Feb. 1st.—ANTHONY AND HUGHES.

Watseka, Jan. 30.—Another added by baptism Sunday evening. I am now in my third year of service here, with 68 additions here; six elsewhere. Total amount given for all missionary purpose, $421.80; Junior and Intermediate C. E.'s supporting an orphan in India; Senior C. E.'s running a missionary S. S. in West Watseka; church refinished on interior. Work promising.—B. S. FERRALL, pastor.

Charleston, Feb. 2.—Meeting here with J. T. Alsup, of Washington, assisting, closed last night; 31 added.—F. W. BURNHAM.

Arcola, Feb. 3.—Our meeting of a little more than three weeks resulted in 11 baptisms and two from the Baptists. Bro. Le Grand Pace, of Tuscola, did the preaching.—J. A. CLEMENS.

Harristown, Feb. 2.—K. C. Ventress, La Harpe, Ill., closed a 25 days" meeting with us last night. Eight baptisms and two reclaimed.—L. T. FAULDERS, pastor.

Chicago, Feb. 2.—We are having a fine meeting with the Westside Church in this city.—H. A. NORTHCUTT, evangelist; BRUCE BROWN, pastor.

Astoria, Feb. 2 —Meeting here resulted in five baptisms. D. E. Hughes, of Rushville, was with us part of the time.—H. C. LITTLETON.

Milford, Feb. 1.—Seven confessions here last Sunday; three men, heads of families, and four women. The church is making substantial progress.—J. B. WRIGHT.

Abraham Lincoln's Birthday.

(Feb. 12, 1809.)

Chosen for large designs, he had the art
  Of winning with his humor, and he went
Straight to his mark, which was the human heart;
  Wise, too, for what he could not break he bent.
Upon his back a more than Atlas load—
  The burden of the Commonwealth—was laid;
He stooped, and rose up to it, though the road
  Shot suddenly downwards, not a whit dismayed.
Hold, warriors, counselors, kings! All now give place
To this dear benefactor of the Race.

MR. ALLEN PAYNE: THE SPASMODIC ONE.

We have all heard about the boy who, upon being asked if his father was a Christian, replied that he worked at it part of the time. Some may laugh at this, but to others it is too serious to be taken as a joke. For sad to say, this applies to a great many church members. We have them in Glendale as well as elsewhere. The most noticeable case is that of Allen Payne. He came among us a stranger a few months ago. He was not a professing Christian, but he soon became a regular attendant at our services. He sang in the choir and found a place in the Sunday-school. When a little later he made the good confession we all shook hands with each other and felt like singing the doxology. We would have considered the meeting then in progress a great success if there had not been another convert. The minister gave the converts, these babes in Christ as he called them, some very good advice. And he gave us good advice too, telling us we should deal kindly with them and not expect too much of them at first. They had but just begun the Christian life and must "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." But this don't apply to Mr. Payne, for he became a full-fledged Christian all at once. He was always in his place at the Sunday and midweek services. He was the life of the Endeavor Society and the Sunday-school. His talks were enough to kindle the fires of enthusiasm in our young people's meetings. He made us all feel very much ashamed of ourselves. We were going at a snail's pace and scarcely dared hope to keep in sight of him. He fitted into so many niches that it was a mystery to us how we ever managed to worry along without him. It did seem a little out of the usual order of things for one just beginning to manifest so much zeal in the work, but then you know Mr. Payne was an exceptional character. It was very provoking for some of the good old deacons who are always expecting something dreadful to happen to shake their heads and predict that it wouldn't last long. Indeed, one went so far as to say that "he'd allers noticed that when an engine used up so much steam when it first started it wasn't long till it had to stop and rest awhile."

We all laughed at this homely illustration, but it was not long until we discovered there were a few grains of truth in it. One Sunday morning when we went to the church, somehow we felt the moment we got inside the door that something was wrong. We looked around and discovered the secret of the whole matter. Mr. Payne was not there! What could it mean? was the question passed from lip to lip. We all agreed it was no trifling matter that was keeping him away from the Lord's house. Some one had seen the village doctor going down the street that morning, and they were very, very sure he stopped at Payne's. Little Johnnie Brown, one of his Sunday-school boys, was sent post haste to see if he were sick unto death. Well, he wasn't; oh, no! He was toasting himself before the fire, reading his Sunday newspaper, apparently not at all concerned about how things were going at the little church around the corner. He hadn't supposed for a moment that he would be needed that morning. It was so stormy he hardly thought any of his boys would be there, and Sunday-school would be a failure any way. Would he be at church and help with the music? No, he guessed not. He and his wife had been out to a party the night before, and as they didn't get home until very late, they felt that they must stay at home and rest. Well, when Johnnie came back to the church with this report I can tell you some of us were righteously indignant. We said a great many things about Mr. Payne that were not very complimentary. Of course, those who had their suspicions about his sincerity chuckled to themselves and said, "Didn't I tell you so?" It required somewhat of an effort on our part to treat Mr. Payne decently when we met him that week. But the next Sunday he was back at his post of duty, all smiles and sunshine, and we were ready to forgive and forget. This lasted for five or six weeks, and then he had another attack of indifference. He came to church, and we were thankful for that, but he didn't sing in the choir. It finally leaked out that Mr. So-and-so had been invited to sing in the choir, and Mr. Payne would not under any circumstances sing if he did. But with a good deal of coaxing and petting on the part of the pastor and choir leader, they got him straightened out. But he didn't stay straight very long. The next thing we knew something else had turned up to disgruntle him. He had discovered all at once that there were some dreadfully wicked members in our church, and he was too holy to sit down and worship and commune with them. So he had to stay home a Sunday or two to show his contempt for all this. It may have been fate—I don't known—but the first Sunday

The Lord's Prayer.

[The following beautiful composition was captured during the Civil War in Charleston, S. C., by a brother of Mrs. S. B. Helmer, of Kendalville, Ind. It was printed on very heavy satin and is quite a literary curiosity:]

THOU, to the Mercy-Seat our souls doth gather,
To do our duty unto Thee, - - - - - OUR FATHER,
To whom all praise, all honor should be given,
For Thou art the Great God - - - - Who art in Heaven,
Thou, by Thy Wisdom, rul'st the world's whole frame,
Forever, therefore, - - - - - - - hallowed, be Thy name;
Let never more delays divide us from
Thy glorious grace, but let - - - - Thy kingdom come;
Let Thy commands opposed be by none,
But Thy good pleasure and - - - - - Thy will be done
And let our promptness to obey, be even
The very same, - - - - - - - on earth as 'tis in Heaven;
Then for our souls, O Lord, we also pray,
Thou wouldst be pleased to - - - - - give us this day
The food of life, wherewith our souls are fed,
Sufficient raiment, and - - - - - our daily bread;
With every needful thing, do Thou relieve us,
And of Thy mercy, pity - - - - - and forgive us
All our misdeeds, for Him, Whom Thou didst please
To make an offering for - - - - - our trespasses,
And for as much, O Lord, as we believe
That Thou wilt pardon us - - - - - as we forgive
Let that Love teach, wherewith Thou dost acquaint us,
To pardon all - - - - - - - those who trespass against us:
And though, sometimes, Thou finds't we have forgot,
This love to Thee, yet help - - - - - and lead us not
Through soul or body's want to desperation,
Nor let earth's gain drive us - - - - into temptation,
Let not the soul of any true believer
Fall in the time of trial - - - - - but deliver,
Yea, save them from the malice of the devil,
And both in life and death, keep - - - - us from evil;
Thus pray we, Lord, for that of Thee, from whom
This may be had, - - - - - - - For Thine is the kingdom,
This world is of Thy work its wondrous story.
To Thee belongs, - - - - - - - the power and the glory,
And all Thy wondrous works have ended never,
But will remain forever and - - - - - forever,
Thus, we poor creatures, would confess again,
And thus would say, eternally - - - - AMEN.

—[Charleston, (S. C.) July 4th, 1823.

Mr. Payne came back, Bro. Brown preached a sermon along that line. If he didn't mean him, I guess he felt guilty anyway. His face turned red, then white, then red again. But it did him some good to be told of his manners, for he's been very meek and mild ever since. He isn't much of a fault-finder now, but we can't depend on him for anything. He's like the old Scotchman—"Af an' an." Sometimes he is with us to lift us to the mount of transfiguration with his wonderful talks and fervent prayers. For the time being we wish that we were more like him. But when the next Sunday comes, and his place is vacant, we come to the conclusion that after all it is better to go a little slow and keep at it all the time. He has excuses, plenty of them, as many as the men invited to the great supper. As he is a business man, he thinks it his duty to go to other churches occasionally to court their favor. He must go to all the conventions within reach, and by the time he gets back the enthusiasm is gone and he doesn't feel like attending just plain, ordinary church services. He takes quite an interest in politics, and when campaign time comes his religion is sacrificed until the election's over. After working hard through the week he has "that tired feeling" on Sunday; and so it goes. There are other things, like the auctioneer's bill of goods, too numerous to mention. But we're thankful it's no worse than it is. Probably it's better to work at it part of the time than not at all.

"The Sleeper."

Robt. J. Burdette has one of his characteristic letters in the Preacher's Helper for December 1898. His theme in this letter is "The Pew as Seen from the Pulpit." The opening paragraph and description of his first character, "The Sleeper," is given below. We republish it for its humorous and practical qualities:

"And when you have made saint and sinner as comfortable as ever they were made in any opera house, then, as you preach the Word, cast your eyes round about upon the congregation, and you will observe there, sitting under your able ministry, these sundry and divers regular attendants upon stated worship:

"1. The Sleeper. It may be that he resteth his chin upon the head of his cane, and when the moment of deep sleep cometh upon him, his chin slippeth and the bang of his head against the back of the other pew awaketh him and startleth the congregation. Howbeit, the bang upon his wife's head no man can hear, yet all the same it is there.

"Or, peradventure he sleepeth with his head bolt upright, and noddeth the same in time with his deep breathing, each nod more violent and far-reaching than the one that went before it, and at last as he smiteth his breast with his chin he awaketh right suddenly and fixes a reproachful gaze upon you from half-open eyes, as though he should say, 'Don't you push me that way again.'

"Or, if it be so that he letteth his head decline backwards twenty-five degrees, seeking rest that is not there, until the lid of his head seemeth about to fall off, and his mouth is open like unto the bill of a young robin when it crieth for food, and he playeth fantastic tunes with his nose, whereat the boys in the gallery make merry and the congregation is much scandalized. And when it shall be that the wife of his bosom shall smite him under the fifth rib wtth her two-edged elbow that he lifteth up his head and openeth his eyes wide and glareth around upon the congregation as one who shall say, 'He that sayeth I was asleep the same is a weather prophet and the truth dwelleth not in him.' But if he foldeth his handkerchief upon the back of his brother's pew, and devoutly boweth his head upon the same as you pronounce the words of the text, then will that sleeper disturb no one, but will slumber calmly on until the time of the benediction is come, and he will awaken refreshed and smiling, and he will clasp hands with the brethren and greatly extol the preacher and with a loud voice magnify the sermon."

The Perfect Work.

Quaerens me sedisti lassus.

Penitence is the door wide swung before the knocking Guest;
Love, the firelight; and the feast is Joy of sins confessed;
But patience is the couch whereon the welcomed Christ may rest.

Sorrow for our Dead.

BY T. H. BLENUS.

I have but little sympathy with that sentiment that would teach us that under our afflictions we should manifest an utter insensibility or a stupid unconcern. The Savior himself who was the "Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief," and "who has been touched with the feeling of our infirmities," is certainly not offended because we shed tears over departed friends, if those tears are not those of despair and complaint. Religion does not destroy our nature, it regulates it. God has implanted in the human heart emotions; and sensibility, instead of being a weakness is a noble attribute, being one of the great sources of all virtue. From this source springs the sorrow caused by the death of the dear ones we love. It is the natural effect of the love we had for them, and of the endearing and intimate relations they bore to us. The tribute of our grief we pay to their memory honors us as well as it respects them. Our most holy faith in Christ does not incline us to be stoical and insensible as we stand by the forms of our dear ones clad in the habiliment of the grave. Faithful memory recalls every incident of the past in those days of peace and happiness which we spent in their society. We think of their tender affections which so often mitigated our sorrows. We recall that tenderness and sympathy which comforted us in moments of distress. that soothing kindness with which, in hours of trial and perhaps hours of sickness, they administered to our wants and watched beside our couch of pain, those smiles which so often compensated for the frowns of the world, and that unwavering attachment which so often supported us when all around seemed unkind and ungrateful. The Christian heart cannot be callous and insensible when, after the dissolution of our beloved ones, we behold countless memorials of them, but yet hear no longer the voice which cheered us when we look forward to the future and see all our plans broken and ourselves compelled to pursue the journey through life solitary and alone. Our Heavenly Father does not chide the tears that flow from a wounded heart. Abraham did not violate any duty to God, nor do despite to his faith in Jehovah, when he went to Kayath-arba "to mourn for Sarah and to weep there." The brightness of the illustrious character of Joseph was not dimmed when he grieved for his father at the threshing-floor "with sore and great lamentations." The pious widows did not lay aside their piety when they stood by the body of Dorcas weeping, and "showing the coats and garments which she made for the poor while she was yet with them." They were devout men who carried Stephen to his burial and made great lamentation. Our Savior, our model, was in deep emotion at the grave of Lazarus. The sorrow of the faithful makes the goodness, the mercy and the sympathy of God more lovely. The mourning believer bends with humility to the chastening rod without murmuring or repining, and instead of being overwhelmed in sorrow studies by the calamity to feel more deeply the vanity of earth, the importance of eternity and the preciousness of Christ.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Don't Know it.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney poison in the blood is liable to attack the vital organs, or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away, cell by cell. Then the richness of the blood—the albumen—leaks out and the sufferer has Bright's Disease, the worst form of kidney trouble. Kidney trouble can be detected, although it be slow and deceptive. First, by analysis of the urine; second, by the simple test of setting the urine aside in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, when a cloudy or brick-dust settling indicates it.

It was for just such troubles that in His infinite power and goodness the Great Physician caused Swamp-Root to grow for the benefit of suffering mankind, leaving it for Dr. Kilmer, the great kidney and bladder specialist, to discover it and make it known to the world. Its wonderful efficacy in promptly curing the most distressing cases is truly marvelous.

By sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail.

When writing be sure and mention reading this liberal offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The regular fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes are sold by most druggists. Make a note of the name, SWAMP-ROOT, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Peace.

Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals or forts.

The warrior's name would be a name abhorred,
And every nation that should lift again
Its hand against a brother, on its forehead
Would wear forevermore the curse of Cain!

Down the dark future, through long generations,
The echoing sounds grow fainter and then cease;
And like a bell, with solemn, sweet vibrations,
I hear once more the voice of Christ say, "Peace!"

Peace! and no longer from its brazen portals
The blast of war's great organ shakes the skies!
But beautiful as songs of the immortals,
The holy melodies of love arise.

Young Men.

In an interesting article on James Wilson and his times, by D. O. Kellogg, in Lippincott's magazine for February, reference is made to the youth of the men who led America from subordination to freedom, which we think worthy of the attention of the young men of this generation. John says, "I write unto you young men because you are strong." The truth of this apostolic statement is seen in the following paragraph from Mr. Kellogg's article:

"Washington was but forty-three when he was commissioned commander-in-chief of the Continental armies, and but four months older than Grant when he received the surrender of Lee at Appomattox Court House. Greene was but thirty-nine when, at Guliford Court House he turned Cornwallis out of the Carolinas. Lincoln was forty-eight when he received the sword of Cornwallis at Yorktown. But that young men should be high in rank in the army is not so surprising as that they should preponderate in council. Of the immortal Congress of 1776 one-fifth had not passed thirty-five years; thirty-five out of fifty-seven were forty-five years old or less, and forty-six were within the limit of fifty years when the Declaration of Independence was past. The first Cabinet under the Constitution was remarkable, not only for its youthfulness, but for the marked ability with which it confronted problems absolutely new in government. Jefferson at forty-six was the oldest member, and Hamilton at thirty-two the youngest. Edmund Randolph entered the administration at thirty-six and Knox at thirty nine, the average being thirty-eight years. In the first Supreme Court, at its orgaization in 1790, John Jay, the chief justice, was but forty-four; Harrison, of Maryland, resigned after a few months' service and was succeeded by James Iredell, of North Carolina, the youngest of them all, at thirty-nine. Their average was a little less than forty-nine years. Three of the six had been members of the convention which framed the Federal Constitution; James Wilson alone had been both a conventionist and a signer of the Declaration. All of them had previously become distinguished as legislators and jurists in their respective states. Wilson was forty-six when he was appointed an associate justice, and thirteen years before he had engrossed his name on the famous Declaration, having been one of the most conspicuous debaters in the Congress which adopted it. At about twenty-six years of age, when he was fresh from the tuition of John Dickinson, of the "Farmer's Letters," and during the second year of his admission to the Pennsylvania bar, he had written a pamphlet denying with calm and lofty reasoning the right of the British Parliament to legislate for America. This brochure was not pubished until 1774, but it marked its author out as a fitting counselor for the nascent nation, and probably began his political career."

The Heir of Joy.

Dream not of bliss with no alloy,
Friend of the starlike eyes;
Still unborn, in the womb of Joy,
The infant Sorrow lies.

Sorrow thou must by strength embrace,
Claim him thy kinsman, yield him place;
His mother's soul read in his face,
And he shall make thee wise.

Three Fools.

You have heard of the three wise men, so I will tell you about three fools that I have met in my life. Their folly was so coarse and repulsive that they remain painfully conspicuous in my memory. The first was an atheist. In answer to the question, "What man in this community would you set before the world as a model? he replied, seriously, "MYSELF." The second was a theosophist. In answer to the question, "How could Jesus know the unexpressed thoughts of a man's heart?" he replied, seriously, "JUST AS I DO; I CAN SEE AND KNOW ALL THE THOUGHTS OF ANY MAN'S MIND AT ANY TIME." The third was a pessimist. In answer to the question upon what he based his affiirmation that "all men are guilty until proven innocent," he replied, seriously, "UPON MY OBSERVATION; I consider myself the best living authority upon human nature." Of course, it is useless for a rational man to try to converse with such bigots. X.

The most magnificent tomb in the world is deemed to be the palace temple of Karnak, occupying an area of nine acres or twice that of St. Peter's at Rome. The temple's space is a poet's dream of gigantic columns, beautiful courts and wondrous avenues of sphinxes.

Purpose.

I marked with calculating eye
The distance to Desire,
And noted, too, the furious Fates:
Fierce Wind and Flood and Fire.

I bade adieu to Doubt and Dread,
And armed me for the fray,
Then slept, and, waking at the dawn,
Desire beside me lay!

Men of Weight.

"There were giants in those days." A much-worn document dated West Point, August 19, 1783, giving the weight of some of the officers in the Revolutionary War as follows:

General Washington,	209 lbs.
General Lincoln,	224 lbs.
General Knox,	280 lbs.
Colonel Henry Jackson,	238 lbs.
Lieut.-Col. Huntington,	232 lbs.
Lieut.-Col. Humphrys,	221 lbs.
Lieut.-Col. Creaton,	166 lbs.
Colonel Swift,	219 lbs.
Colonel Michael Jackson,	252 lbs.
Lieut.-Col. Cobb,	182 lbs.
Average weight,	222 lbs.

It will be seen by this list that these old patriots "held their own," notwithstanding the hard times they were seven years in getting through.—The Christian Endeavor World.

Appropriate to the Occasion.

A teacher in one of the Cleveland public schools said the other day to her class in English composition:

"Now, I wish every member of the class would write out a conversation between a a grocer and one of his customers, introducing some pathetic incident or reference."

Among the compositions handed in was the following by a sweet little girl, who may some day grow up to be a second Octave Thanet or Mary E. Wilkins:

"What do you want?" asked the merchant.

The lady replied: "A pound of tea."

"Green or black?" asked the merchant.

"I think I'll take black," she said; "it's for a funeral."—Catholic News.

A young woman who is very popular in social life was asked why she did not marry. Her answer will furnish young fellows who are forming habits something to think about. Here it is:

"I have considerable money of my own; I have a parrot that swears, a monkey that chews, and a stove that smokes; so you see I am not yet very badly in need of a husband."

Stranger. There isn't a chap known as Rustler Rube hanging around here, is there? Native. No. He was cut down this morning.

Mr. Slimpurse (after a decided refusal). I know what the matter is. It's because I am poor. You would marry me if I were rich. Miss Gallie (thoughtfully). Perhaps so, but you would have to be very, very rich.

"I am afraid," said the dejected swain to the beautiful editress, "I am very much afraid that you do not return my love." "I —ah—I am not aware myself," she replied, absent-mindedly, "Did you inclose stamps?"

Jack. How did you know I was going to call, my dear? Her Little Sister. I saw Bessie taking all the pins out of her waist-band.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

Just Among Ourselves.

Here I come again, young people, with a big batch of letters. Helen Ross (8), Independence, Mo., writes: Santa Claus brought me a one-syllable history of the United States, and Longfellow's poems. Now I am ready to begin the Ney Year in earnest. In our town, a little boy once swallowed a button. He went crying to his mamma, very scared, and said, "Oh, mother, will I have to swallow a buttonhole, to get it out?" I lived in Independence, when I was a little boy—a few years ago; but I am not the boy Helen tells about. It is not a celebrated city, but three authors have been there—Washington Irving, Mark Twain, and myself—I mean no harm to the other two, in this connection. By the way, while there, I heard a young Mr. Gray read aloud, "Jane Eyre." I was only nine, and I was very much frightened when "Jane" heard her lover's voice calling her, while he was hundreds of miles away. The heroine ran to the door and called her lover's name in the dark night, and I was so thrilled, I could have crawled under the bed. Now, what do you think. This very Mr. Gray has gone and got married, and here are two letters from as many of his daughters, wanting to join our Advance Society! The older is nine, Catherine Gray, of Kansas City. Here is what the other says, and I wish you could see how handsomely it is written: "I read about your Advance Society, and want to join. I am only six years old and of all the books I have read, I think Grimm's Fairy Tales is the best. Sincerely your friend, Rebecca Gray." Children, do you think you will write that well, and read so much, when you are six?

More Plattsburg members: Henry Perkins, Luther Burton, Bessie Biggerstaff Calvin Moreland, Mary DeBerry, Leighton and Bernard Snook, Ethel and Ira Troutman, Fay Funkhouser, Wyatt Hill, Gordon Barrett, Amelia and Perry Jones. Others from a distance: Cora Steinkang (13), Bedison, Mo.; Ella Harness (12), Exlane, Ia.; Edgar (13) and Lillian Wait (11), Pittsburg, Kan.; E. H. Dexter, Robertson, Miss.; Glenn Garfield Searritt (7) and his two sisters, Olive (8) and Florence (10), Frankfort, S. D.; Albert Davis (11) Jacksonville, Mo.; Ulie H. Stewart (12), Santa Paula, Cal., who says: "I am in the sixth grade. My mamma died a month ago." this was written last Nov. "My father is a preacher, and I expect to become one, too." Isn't that a splendid resolution, children? What could better please that dear one, who is unseen, but not, I think, unwatching. For does God not send angels to attend us? And I believe every angel in heaven would yield his place to a mother's love. Egbert Taylor (10), La Monte, Mo.; Gower Scott (14), Galena, Mo.; Geo. S. Page (24), Munsonville, N. H.; Vetura Blanche Collins, Raytown, Mo., who is 12, and belongs to the church and the C. E.

We are two little girls that live in the country (Ashland, Ill.) with Mr. and Mrs. Hewell (we call them Grandpa and Aunt Mary). We have no home, so we came to live with them—we have been here a long time. Lily Gooch is nine, and I (Clara Moses) am 11. Our names are on Bro. McLean's Children's Day Roll of Honor. We had more than a dollar a piece, and we gave some to a little girl who had only 82 cents; then we had $1.06 for all of us. We studied up a Yell for the Advance Society. Here it is with the interpretation:

"Bro El, bro el, bro el; we re, we re, we re;
We ri, we ri, we ri: we quo, we quo, we quo.
And so we Advance, Advance,
If 'tis but slow, but slow."

Interpretation: Bro. Eillis, we read, we write, we quote, etc. How do you like it? —(Lily and Clara). Why, it is fine! I wish all the children would learn it, then go out doors and shout it at the top of their voices. The people will say, "What does that mean?" Then you can tell about your society; how we are trying to improve our minds, yes, and have fun, too, as we go along; how we are not going to grow up and shrivel into consumptive novel-readers, like bean-pods that were not pulled in time; how we are going to enjoy good stories, and pure fiction, but at the same time brace upon history, and bloom with poetry, and bristle with choice quotations, and become cultivated and developed all around. That is what this yell means, you will say; and then begin to shout it again till the hills echo. We must have 300 members in this society. There are already 284. Everybody must help; five pages of history a week, who can't read that? But it is the habit of reading that we are striving for. Perhaps you are afraid you will miss a week, or forget some day to read the verse of Scripture. What then? Are you too old to begin over? Listen:

"The first thing I saw in the last Louisville Courier-Journal was a note about the Advance Society. I had joined soon after the organization and for a time kept the resolutions. But one by one, I dropped them. But I will begin anew to-morrow, and in twelve weeks, if I have not failed, send my name for the Honor List. I want the companionship of all the bright members. It will be a comfort to me; I am now from home, teaching a small country school —(Della McKennon, Oakland, Tex.) Nora Cunningham, Cloverdale, Ky., says, "I am very fond of long continued stories, and would be glad, if you publish that kind." On the contrary, Rowena Elston, Berkeley, Cal., says, "I think continued stories very enjoyable, but I should like short stories, written by the members, still better. I am glad we have a chance to begin our club work over again, for Christmas has interfered greatly with my reading." Now, what am I to do? The large majority have written advocating the continued story. So I shall compromise, as hitherto, by giving letters, anecdotes, etc., from time to time. If we had more room, we could spread ourselves, of course, and do all sorts of things. Margaret Harrison, St. Louis, is twelve. She belongs to the Mt. Cabanne Church, and the Bible Club. She is the only member we have in St. Louis, except a number of the C. W. B. M., who have become silent partners in our club.

Says Vivien Aten, Hutchinson, Kas., "I am very much interested in George and Jennie Weston and the good they are doing; and Jennie's room is something like my own. I am thirteen and in the eighth grade. Papa is the minister here. Grandma, mamma and I are also members, and this constitutes our family. It is too late to send my list of books, but my favorites are Little Women, Uncle Tom's Cabin, Little Lord Fauntleroy, Wide, Wide World. How old are Jennie and George Weston? I would like to know if they are not about my age. I will try to keep the rules, and be a good member." (I would like for each member to feel that George or Jennie is about his or her own age; I think that the very best way to enjoy a story.) By the way, I know of some young people who no sooner read about Jennie Weston's room than they fell to work on their own; made window-seats, bookshelves and the rest. Here is enterprise! It is said Shakespeare borrowed all his best plots. I am going to wait and see whether Don or Fannie Hockaday, or Millie Imbler will turn out a Shakespeare. But when it comes to talking to children about Shakespeare, I think it time to ring the bell for recess—dont you?

But before this meeting breaks up, let me give you your next subject to write on: My Dog. But perhaps you have no dog. Then tell about one you used to have, or your neighbor's dog, or about some pet, whether cat, bird or other animal. Most all of you like dogs, and I would like to get a page full of them, black, yellow, curly and straight-haired. Tell of some peculiarity, some trick, or sign of wisdom that makes your dog different from any other dog. I suppose this subject would not suit grown people. Grown people have a way of looking at dogs suspiciously, and thinking of little things, such as fleas, If any of you are of the same way of thinking, write about another pet. I was eleven before I knew the privilege of a dog's friendship. I was a little past twenty when I got my second canine. I could show you today where the first—a big, black shepherd —was buried. Speaking of dogs reminds me that I am taking up a good deal of room talking about myself. Here is a family who have joined: Mr. and Mrs. Robert Chambers, and their daughters, Jean (19) and Nannie (12), Woodside, Ky. I met this family when I was in Kentucky. I visited them on their farm. It was the first time I had seen Kentucky, but I found that the bluegrass is green. What a time I had down on that farm—frozen custard, also! I believe this is all, this time. The society is adjourned. Next week, the continued story.

SHED SKIN 20 TIMES

My little boy broke out with an itching rash. I tried three doctors and medical college but he kept getting worse. There was not one square inch of skin on his whole body unaffected. He was one mass of sores, and the stench was frightful. In removing the bandages they would take the skin with them, and the poor child's screams were heart-breaking. After the second application of CUTICURA (ointment) I saw signs of improvement, and the sores to dry up. His skin peeled off twenty times, but now he is entirely cured.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

THE BREAD OF LIFE.*

Twice during the ministry of Jesus was his work interrupted by news received concerning John the Baptist. The first time, the information that the prophet of the desert had been imprisoned caused him to retire into Galilee to avoid a possible similar fate. Again, after an interval of more than a year came the sad news of John's death. This time Jesus was moved to depart still further from the scene of his present activity in Galilee to the remoter regions beyond the lake. The retirement fitted appropriately into the moment at which the twelve returned from the missionary journey upon which Jesus had sent them. Both motives, therefore, impelled him to seek the quiet of this secluded spot near the further Bethsaida—the desire to avoid possible danger from Herod and the wish to be alone for the season with the disciples, the story of whose journey he woutd gladly hear and the lessons of which he would impress upon their hearts. But seclusion was impossible to one so widely known and eagerly sought as Jesus. The people saw the departure and followed along the shore, keeping in view the little boat which carried the Master and his disciples. These features are added by Mark and Luke. It was a time of unusual interest. The Passover season was at hand and many had already came into the populous region of Galilee on their way to the feast. This explains why the crowd which followed the company into the deserted regions was so great. Up to the very height which Jesus and the disciples occupied, the people pressed.

The Master was touched with sympathy and compassion because he saw that they were leaderless and knew how sad was their religious condition. The teachers of the time were not shepherds, and the people eagerly recognized in Jesus those qualities of leadership which humanity ever seeks, and the failure to find which not infrequently permits the elevation of unworthy men to positions of authority. The day was spent in teaching and healing, and when the evening drew on the disciples reminded Jesus of the solitary character of the region and the wisdom of sending the people to their homes, or at least into the nearest villages, to find food. John's narrative even hints that Jesus first suggested the necessity of finding provisions for the crowd. He was ever mindful of men in all their needs. He understood what many of his followers have failed to appreciate, that it is useless to preach the gospel to starving men. The body is as sacred to him as the soul, because it is its instrument and habitation. No religion or philanthropy that neglects the welfare of the physical life and fails to insist upon proper food, clothing, sanitation and recreation can accomplish the purposes of the Master. Herein the church has not infrequently failed, by devoting itself exclusively to the spiritual side of humanity, leaving to other organizations and philanthropies those ministries of sustenance and healing which were ever linked with the redemptive purposes of Jesus.

The disciples were astonished at this suggestion that they should make provision for the people. Philip asserted that the earnings of a man for two hundred days would be insufficient to provide for such a multitude, and Andrew added, rather to emphasize the impossibility of the project, that a lad there present had five barley loaves and two fishes, which were hardly worth considering in the present emergency. Jesus, confident, quiet and resourceful, bade the disciples arrange the people in groups of fifty, and thus seated in companies looking like beds of flowers, with the variegated colors of their raiment, they waited wondering.

AUTOMATIC CHAIN-STITCH.

The general advantages of this type of machine for family sewing comprise greatest ease and quietness of operation, simplicity of construction and the elasticity of the single thread seam. When needle is threaded the machine is ready, the stitch requiring neither bobbin nor shuttle. The thread is taken from one spool and is so interwoven and twisted that seam cannot rip unless its finished end be unlocked. When this is done, the entire length of thread can be quickly withdrawn without injury to the fabric.

Every genuine machine carries the trade-mark.

Jesus took the little supply of food and according to his invariable custom gave thanks for it, and then with his own hands distributed it to the disciples, who in turn carried it to the people. Thus by the touch of sympathy and power, and the personal contact of the messengers with the people, the work of love was wrought. And these qualities are essential to the work of the church to-day. The power is applied by the Spirit of grace, but sympathy and contact are necessary if the church is to help the suffering world.

But the miracle of provision was followed at once by the economy of resources which is requisite in all undertakings. Even though the provision had been limited only by the needs of the people, and could have been indefinitely increased, Jesus was unwilling that ought of the supply should be wasted, and the disciples gathered into their scrips the fragments of the feast, which would suffice them for food for days to come. Thus Jesus had taught a great lesson of his care for men and his power to bless them. But to him the miracle had value only as a sign, and this John calls it. Jesus never performed miracles without desiring them to be more than passing blessings to those he healed or fed. Appropriately, therefore, in the fourth Gospel every miracle is directly connected with a discourse or utterance of Jesus which impresses the lesson of the miracle itself. The careful reader must have observed this invariable connection of miracle and message. The feeding of the multitude was the sign that in their midst stood one who could feed men's souls, who was indeed the Bread of Life. There were some even on that day who perceived this fact and went away confessing that this was indeed the prophet which the world expected. They saw the significance of the miracle as a proof of deeper and more spiritual resources. Most, however, took only the utilitarian view of the occurrence, and appreciating the desirability of having continually a leader who would provide for their needs without exertion on their part, would have unhesitatingly made Jesus king. From this admiration, in which he recognized a menace rather than a compliment, he escaped by sending the disciples out of the dangerous atmosphere on a return voyage to Capernaum, while he, abiding some hours in the mountain for prayer, overtook them in the early morning and calmed their frightened souls by assuring them he was no spirit, though walking on the sea, but their friend and protector. The following day he uttered, near Capernaum, to the crowd who had followed him back from the desert, that memorable discourse on the Bread of Life which mystified and shocked so many that he found himself presently with only the faithful remnant beside him, who in the words of Peter declared it impossible to go elsewhere since he had the words of eternal life.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

Moments of retirement and meditation are necessary to the Christian who would be prepared for the active struggle of life. Men who display the true qualities of leadership will always find followers; the responsibility of leading in the right direction is the greater for them. The sympathy which Jesus had for the poor and needy, for the body and soul, are qualities of his true followers. Beyond every seeming difficulty are the infinite resources of our Savior. "What are these among so many," is always the feeling which rises from our inadequate resources for every great work; but one greater than we will provide. Jesus' arrangement of the people into groups is a hint of the wisdom of careful methods in all gospel work, where much depends on organization and instruments. Jesus never failed to express his thanks for blessings received; shall we be less mindful of our obligations? Economy is a quality of the divine life, and should be of ours; nothing is ever wasted in nature. If the miracle convinced the people of Jesus' power and prophethood, shall not the greater works of redemption we have witnessed still more convincingly prove to us his divine character and Lordship?

"DO UNTO OTHERS."

Every one respects and admires the man or woman who devotes a lifetime doing good to others. Even a medicine that has healed and cured many thousand people deserves the respect and praise of mankind.

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is an honest Swiss-German remedy, composed entirely of roots and herbs. It has been doing good for others for many years. What it has done unto others it will do unto you. It supplies a rich, pure, nourishing, vital stream—the blood—strengthens the entire system by driving out the ills that follow in the wake of debility. It is not on the same plan as ordinary drug store medicine. It is not to be obtained of druggists, but of regular Vitalizer agents. TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 19.

A MISSIONARY CHURCH.

Acts 8:1-12.

"So many worlds. So much to do.
So little done. Such things to be."
—Tennyson.

Many interests there are in every church. So many that some people think something must give place. When they begin to cut, it is generally the missionary interests that suffer. Such short-sighted policy this is! It is as if a wholesale house should cut off its traveling salesmen, thinking it was exercising wise economy.

The only way to live is to grow. No life stands still. No business enterprise succeeds that does not reach out. No church lives as fully as it ought without reaching to the ends of the earth in its endeavors.

The last place to economize is in missions. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth. There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

"Retrench!" is the cry so often in church affairs. Retrench, then, in private luxuries, and enlarge in missionary necessities.

Said Dr. Gordon, "The church that is not a missionary church, will be a missing church."

The church at Antioch was a missionary church. It sent its strongest men forth. The church might have argued, "Here is a great field in this great wealthy city. We have plenty of heathen at home. We ought to keep our stongest preachers for this great home city church." But they did not argue so. They sent forth their best. And they never were so blessed before that time, as they became afterward, parting with their best.

Paul himself might have argued, "Surely, this is the place for me to stay and work all my days. Here is one of the greatest cities in the empire; here is the important field; here is the strategic point; here will I find my life work." But he did not so reason. He went forth to new fields. And in the going was he blest.

At Antioch the name Christian was first given to the Lord's disciples. And to every Antioch that separates its best workers and sends them forth, that pours out its treasure without stint for the cause of Christ, shall the name Christian to-day be given. And only that Antioch can be a power in the world which does embody the Spirit of Christ and is worthy of bearing his name.

We try to teach our little children at home and in the school that it is best to divide, to share. A true principle is here, and the child should early learn generosity. Is it not inconsistent, then, in us, to refuse to divide our own possessions with other nations?

A girl in Indianapolis who toils for her living, working in the homes of others, recently came into an inheritance of a few hundred dollars. One hundred of it at once went to the missionary committee of her church to be applied as they thought best in the foreign field. Such deeds are eloquent, and such persons are blessings to their churches.

A little boy, member of the mission band, wearing shirt waists, saw his papa's nicely laundried shirts. "Mamma," said he, "it would be very nice to have my shirt waists laundried. What would it cost?" "Ten cents, each time," was the reply. The little fellow counted over his pennies that had been saved for pocket money and missions, and he found one dollar and three cents. He calculated, "There's enough for ten laundries, and three cents for the mission band." Then a happy thought struck him. "Mamma, if I only had seven cents more there'd be enough for eleven laundries and the mission band wouldn't get any!" Such is the frequent calculations among mortals!

BETHANY C. E. READING COURSES.

The Cross in the Land of the Crescent.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

A missionary tells us that many Mohammedans are asking, "Who is this Jesus that makes the Mohammedans so brave?" It is the old, old question asked by every pagan, persecuting people, when confronted with believing martyrs. God overrules the rage of man for the furtherance of his kingdom, and in Armenia to-day as in ancient Rome the ashes of the martyrs are made the seed of the saints. It is not our intention to dwell on the Turkish persecutions against the Armenian Christians here, though the brutality of them and the sanction of them by the Sultan and the Koran should not soon pass out of mind. It is estimated that at least 110,000 people were murdered, as many as fell on the Union side in our Civil War. A student of God's dealings with men cannot escape the conviction that such atrocities must, within a generation, have a fearful day of reckoning.

We wish the Bethany readers to know how the cause of Christ stands in Mohammedan countries and what are its prospects. It is estimated that there are above 200,000,000 Mohammedans in the world, only 18,000,000 of whom are under the government of the Sultan of Turkey. 102,000,000 are under Christian governments. This fact is very significant and may mean more in the future than it has in the past. Fifty years ago there was only one church with eight members in Central Turkey. There are now 32 churches with 5,178 members. There are 176 native helpers and 5,287 pupils in mission schools. There were neither schools or native helpers fifty years ago.

A writer in the Missionary Review of the World, in statements published in September, 1897, said the very animus of the massacre was to be found in the success of the missionaries. He declares that the "civilization of Asia Minor is American. The missionaries have spread over the whole country a network of religious and philantropic institutions and influences. The Americans have been getting wealty, thrifty, skilful, intelligent and influential, and this has provoked the hostility of the Turks. There was a secret plan prompted by the Sultan for the extermination of the whole Armenian people." The same writer says, "For every missionary who fell in China in 1895 God has already given at least a thousand converts, and there are many more inquirers. So in Armenia. Already the divine harvest of the seed sown in this bloody soil begins to appear."

Wm. M. Ramsey is a noted student of and writer upon Asia Minor. He has lived five years in that land. In a recent book entitled, "Impressions of Turkey," he says, "Beginning with the prejudice against their (the American missionaries') work, I was driven by force of facts and experience to the opinion that the mission has been the strongest as well as the most beneficent influence in causing the movement toward civilization, which has been perceptible in varying degrees among all the people of Turkey, but which has been zealously opposed and almost arrested by the present Sultan with the support of the six European powers."

Bro. A. L. Chapman, who is named in the handbook as under appointment, is now located in Constantinople and will have a great field in the ministry of the Word and in his general oversight of our mission, Turkey. There are promises of a bright future and a growing work in that land and the presence of an American will be a benediction in more ways than one. The Sultan has a wholesome respect for America, and we should not cease to pray that Bro. Chapman may be abundantly blessed.

We most earnestly ask our readers to remember that the March offering for our Foreign Missionary Society is not far away, and who should give so liberally and cheerfully as those who are students of he work and who know so much of its magnitude and its needs?

Danger In Soda.

Serious Results Sometimes Follow Its Excessive Use.

Common soda is all right in its place and indispensable in the kitchen and for cooking and washing purposes, but it was never intended for a medicine, and people who use it as such will some day regret it.

We refer to the common use of soda to relieve heartburn or sour stomach, a habit which thousands of people practice almost daily, and one which is fraught with danger; moreover the soda only gives temporary relief and in the end the stomach trouble gets worse and worse.

The soda acts as a mechanical irritant to the walls of the stomach and bowels and cases are on record where it accumulated in the intestines, causing death by inflammation or peritonitis.

Dr. Harlandson recommends as the safest and surest cure for sour stomach (acid dyspepsia) an excellent preparation sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These tablets are large 20 grain lozenges, very pleasant to taste and contain the natural acids, peptones and digestive elements essential to good digestion, and when taken after meals they digest the food perfectly and promptly before it has time to ferment, sour and poison the blood and nervous system.

Dr. Wuerth states that he invariably uses Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in all cases of stomach derangements, and finds them a certain cure, not only for sour stomach, but by promptly digesting the food, they create a healthy appetite, increase flesh and strengthen the action of the heart and liver. They are not a cathartic, but intended only for stomach diseases and weakness and will be found reliable in any stomach trouble, except cancer of the stomach. All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents per package.

BRITTIN.

Mrs. Elizabeth Stockdale Brittin was born in Washington Co., Pa., August 12, 1832. Died at Springfield, Illinois, January 17, 1899. In 1852 Elizabeth Stockdale married Mr. James M. Brittin, whose faithful companion she has been these 47 years. They both joined the Christian Church shortly after their marriage and have been zealous and faithful, both in living the daily life of Christ and in the discharge of their duty toward the church and the community where they have lived. She was a most helpful wife and to her economy, good judgement and ready sympathy in all his plans does her husband attribute a full share of the prosperity that has attended their mutual efforts in life. The Springfield church will greatly miss Sister Brittin.

Springfield, Ill. J. E. LYNN.

CROSE.

Died at the home of son, J. D. Crose, at Mesa City, Ariz., Jan. 3rd 1899, Sister Elizabeth E. Crose, aged 76 years, Sister Crose was born and reared in the South. She was of a bright and cheerful disposition. Some 10 years ago she came with her husband to Tempe to rear a family of grandchildren, made motherless by the death of their daughter. Bro. Crose preceded her to the better land. Six years ago while in Tempe Sister Crose was an active and highly esteemed member of the church there. ANNIE E. CARATHIES.

Phœnix, Ariz.

DOBBS.

Died near Tempe, Arizona, Dec. 13th, 1898, Peter R. Dobbs. Bro. Dobbs was born in Virginia, Dec. 3rd, 1844, was baptized into Christ, in Pulaski County, Ky., in the summer of 1867, by Henry Dutcher. He came to Arizona from Roseberg, Ore., about six years ago in search of health, which he partially regained. But for four years he was confined to his bed in great suffering, until death came to him as a happy release. He leaves a wife, who is a devoted Christian, to mourn his loss.

JORDAN.

John D. Jordan passed quietly away Dec. 24, 1898. He was born in Adams Co., Ill., June 19, 1832 and came to Pleasantville, Iowa, in 1847. United with the Church of Christ in 1869 and was faithful to the end, having been for many years one of the pillars in the church and one of its deacons. He leaves a wife, three sons and one daughter, all members of the Church of Christ. He has fought the good fight and has gone to his reward. During his entire Christian life Bro. Jordan has been a subscriber to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

J. M. WATKINS.

LACKEY.

Mrs. G. A. Lackey, Stanford, Ky. (nee Mary Elizabeth Welch), was born at Crab Orchard, Feb. 15, 1844, and died Jan. 22, 1899. She was married Sept. 17, 1867, to Hon. G. A. Lackey, who, with his nine children and a host of relatives and friends mourn her loss. It was of such as she that Solomon said, "Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her." Our grief is assuaged by the thought that she was well prepared to die. She united with the Christian Church when 13 years of age, and was one of the most devoted and consecrated members of the Stanford congregation.

FRANK W. ALLEN.

LANGSTON.

Harriette Loyd Langston was born Dec. 22, 1811 and died Jan. 22, 1899. For 65 years she lived the Christian life. She was a member of the Christian Church in Buffalo, Ill., at the time of her death. She was twice married. Her second husband died in 1855. She was unselfishly devoted to her children and others, too, found a home under her hospitable roof. The proof of her devotion to Christ was in deeds rather than in words. The funeral services at her late residence, in Mechanicsburg, were conducted by the writer, assisted by R. B. Havener. Interment in Mechanicsburg cemetery. H. H. JENNER.

LONGFELLOW.

Joseph O. Longfellow was born in Peoria County, Ill., May 26th, 1871 and died at the home of his parents, Dec. 23, 1898, of gastric fever near Longmont, Col. He was an earnest Christian, was president of the Endeavor Society and clerk of the Christian Church in Longmont at the time of his death. His life was above reproach. He was buried Christmas day and the Christmas tree was used to line his grave. J. M. WHEATLEY.

Longmont, Col.

RICE.

Died at Phœnix, Ariz., Jan. 18, 1899, Sister J. A. Rice, aged 70 years. Sister Rice was a daughter of Myron Emmons, a preacher of the Reformation, prominent in the work in Illinois for more than 50 years. Sister Rice united with the church at the age of 14, and was a faithful Christian. She was an invalid for a number of years and was devotedly cared for by her daughter, Sister Cora R. French, a promioent member of the church here. Her body was taken to Antioch, Ill., for burial.

ANNIE E. CARATHIES.

Phœnix, Ariz., Jan. 23, 1899.

SHORT.

Geo. W. Short was born Jan. 31, 1835 in Montgomery Co., O., and died Jan. 11, 1899. He united with the Church of Christ in 1855 and lived and died in faith. His last words were words of faith and praise. The funeral was conducted by the writer. He was highly esteemed in the community. He leaves three children who were at his bedside in the last hour. E. A. HASTINGS.

IMMORTAL SONGS OF CAMP AND FIELD. By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D. D. With portraits and illustrations. Cleveland: The Burrows Brothers Company, Publishers, 1899.

Picking up this volume one evening at home, and beginning to read the old patriotic songs, with sketches of their authors, the circumstances under which they were written, the story of their inspiration, and anecdotes connected with their history, we read on and on until late into the night, unmindful of the passing hours, so enthralled were we held by these thrilling sketches. Every true American will be interested in the story of these "Immortal Songs of Camp and Field." The anecdotes and incidents are of deep and perennial interest. It is remarkable how deeply these songs have entered into our national life, and it cannot fail to deepen and even purify our patriotism to read the history of their inspiration and the incidents which have been connected with them. We have learned many things new concerning these old songs from this volume which give them added interest. We predict for this volume great popularity among the American people, and among those who love our land of liberty and our institutions. The history includes sketches of such songs as "The American Flag," "Yankee Doodle," "Star-Spangled Banner," "Hail Columbia," "Columbia the Gem of the Ocean," "The Flag of Our Union," "John Brown's Body," "Dixie," "Battle Cry of Freedom," "Song of a Thousand Years," "Tenting on the Old Camp Ground," "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Just Before the Battle, Mother," "When this Cruel War is Over," "Marching through Georgia," "My Maryland," "The Old Folks at Home" or "Suwanee River," and several others, concluding with "The Recessional," by Rudyard Kipling. It is a great tonic to American patriotism.

THE WONDERS OF THE SKY: or God's Glory Exhibited in the Heavens. By W. J. Russell, St. Louis. Christian Publishing Company, 1898.

This beautiful little volume, with an introduction by the editor of this paper, has been out several months, but we have not had an opportunity of testing its contents in print until recently, and we find such a stimulus in perusing the beautiful little volume, with its sublime facts stated in beautiful diction, that we feel like especially commending it to our readers. Not all persons can be astronomers, but all intelligent people should have a knowledge of the most important facts connected with the heavenly bodies, and these are stated in a winning and attractive manner in this small volume by W. J. Russell. After reading it, every one will have a higher appreciation of the statement of the psalmist:

"The heavens declare the glory of God,
And the firmament showeth his handiwork."

MAGAZINES.

Lippincott's February number will delight the magazine reader. "For the French Lilies," by Isabel Nixon Whitney, is a strongly written story, complete in this number. The rest of the magazine is filled with short but inviting articles and poems, sufficiently different in purpose to stimulate the reader's appetite from beginning to end. "Recollections of Lincoln," by James M. Scovel, is an especially readable and profitable article—a valuable contribution to the literature which has his name for its life.

The Preacher's Magazine for February maintains its merited reputation as a magazine eminently suited to preachers, teachers and Bible students. The contents show valuable contributions by famous and learned men.

Among the short articles in the February North American Review are "The Existing Court-Martial System," by Earl M. Cranston; "How Holland Helps the Helpless," by Bessie B. Croffut, and "Our Fish Supply and its Deficiencies," by A. H. Gouraud.

The frontispiece of St. Nicholas for February shows Washington firing his first gun at Yorktown. This number of St. Nicholas is especially rich in poems and pictures.

While military subjects continue to occupy prominent space in the Century for February, there remains a fine selection of articles on other topics. In this number of the Century the public will have an account of the part played by the army in the capture of Santiago by the commander, Major-General William R. Shafter, himself.

Prof. Henry C. Adams, statistician of the Interstate Commerce Commission, contributes to the American Monthly Review of Reviews for February an important paper advocating the federal taxation of interstate commerce.

The leading feature in the Living Age for Feb. 11 is a striking paper on State Socialism, by F. Nobili-Vitelleschi, translated from the leading Italian review, Nuova Antologia.

Houghton, Mifflin & Company, of Boston, Mass., the publishers of the Atlantic Monthly, announce a special rate to new subscribers of fifty cents for a trial subscription to the Atlantic Monthly for three issues.

The Treasury of Religious Thought in its February number begins a series of six articles on sociological subjects by C. A. Eaton, of Toronto, Can. These articles will add new interest and value to this magazine.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for February is to some extent a Spanish-American number. Of the articles devoted to Spanish themes that of "To Make a Spanish Holiday," by Mrs. Frank Leslie, is especially interesting. Her description of a bullfight is one of the most vivid we have yet read.

There is a very valuable and unique feature in the Missionary Review for February in the form of an excellent up-to-date map of China, together with an index showing in what cities each of the various Missionary Societies are laboring. This is invaluable in the study of missionaries in China.

The North American Review for February presents a number of themes in its table of contents that will at once challenge the attention of the thoughtful reader. Among these we mention "Imperial Responsibilities a National Gain," "Russia as a World-Power," "Tuberculosis in the United States" and "The Awakening in China," all by able writers.

The Chautauquan for February appears in as neat a cover as we have yet seen for a midwinter magazine. This first favorable opinion, however, is greatly increased on a glance at its table of contents. The themes announced promise the reader many hours of delightful and profitable reading. The scope of themes treated will give the reader a wider knowledge of the things transpiring and moving the world.

Record of Christian Work for February is up to its usual standard in the spirit and energy of its articles. Record of Christian Work not only keeps one in touch with the great spiritual nerve-center at East Northfield, Mass., but with the best thought of the day on spiritual themes.

Among the leading publications of the day in the interest of Kindergarten work, news, literature and education is the Kindergarten Review, published by Milton Bradley Co., Springfield, Mass. In literature it is a magazine of the first rank.

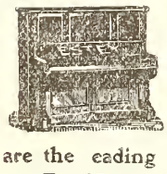
Photographic reproductions of a score of flower gardens are a novel and interesting feature of the February Ladies' Home Journal. The pictures are of the finest and most ornate gardens, and show the striking effects to be obtained by grouping and massing plants and flowers. Such a collection of pictures will be of service to those who aspire to have gardens of their own, for the suggestions they contain will be a valuable guide for novices in growing plants.

The Anthem of the Free is the name of new national song published by Lyon & Healy, Chicago, Ill.

Anglo-American Alliance is the title of a new tract, envelop size, by M. L. Streator, M. A., and published by the Anglo-Saxon Publishing Co , Chicago.

SEED ANNUALS.

D. M. Ferry & Co.'s seed annual for 1899 is out and filled with information on every variety of seed for field and garden. The cover and inside colored plates are in the finest art and make the magazine an ornament to the table as well as a guide to the planter. Address, Detroit, Mich.



The Storrs & Harrison Co.'s Seed Annual for 1899 will tell you of all the standard varieties of flowers, fruits and vegetables down to the latest products. The record of this seed firm for reliability is second to none in that line. Their seed catalogue for 1899 is a beauty.

One of the old and reliable seed houses of the United States is the Plant Seed Co., of this city. Their annual catalogue is out and contains the necessary information about seeds of all kinds, and how and when to plant them. Their catalogue is handsomely printed and will be mailed free upon application.

Expansion.

W. D. CREE,

Supt. of Subscription Department.

We are greatly strengthened by the material assistance rendered this department during the month of January.

We are growing rapidly, but also solidly. We are, we think, furnishing a solid foundation in the character of our paper, and the subscription list built thereon will endure. We are not using methods that are startling or new, but are depending upon the intelligent discernment of our brethren to heartily encourage us in furnishing a journal unequaled in the religious world at anything like its price. And they are doing it.

The Mt. Zion Church, near Eureka, Ill., determined that a religious paper should be found, if possible, in every home in its membership. As a result we are sending twenty-four copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST every week into that congregation. The effect is bound to be in the direction of greater knowledge, broader views, more sincere love for humanity and an increased zeal in its redemption from sin. If many of our stronger (numerically) churches should read a proportionate amount of Christian literature there would be hundreds of copies of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST going where there are now twenty-five or thirty.

The series of historical articles now appearing in the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are exciting widespread interest because of their recognized educational value. It is the concensus of opinion that the great majority of our church membership would be greatly benented by reading them. It is suggested that reading circles be formed where there are none at present, and make these articles the chief item of study. The Christian Endeavor Societies and the Sunday school workers should also see that this opportunity of adding so largely to the stock of knowledge in the church of to-day be improved to the utmost.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versu petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

A Complete Commentary

FOR

EVERY TEACHER AND BIBLE STUDENT

This should be the watchword of every Sunday-school in the land. Thorough, systematic work cannot otherwise be expected. In selecting these books it is always wisest to secure the Best.

I. The Christian Lesson Commentary,

for 1899, prepared by W. W. Dowling, is the most systematic, thorough and helpful published in all this broad land. Scores of the most competent critics, reviewers and practical teachers of various religious denominations have so testified. It contains 416 large pages, with many illustrations, maps, charts and helpful tables—64 pages more than PELOUBET's, and 24 pages more than HURLBUT's, the only other Lesson Annuals that belong to its class.

Style and Price.—Neatly printed on calendered paper and substantially bound in cloth, $1.00 per copy; $9.00 per dozen—25 per cent. cheaper than the much smaller books noted above.

II. The Lesson Helper

by the same author, is considerably smaller in size than The Lesson Commentary, but contains much of the same material in a more condensed form, designed especially for Senior Classes and their teachers. Schools and Teachers that feel that they must have a lower priced book than the one first noted above, will find The Lesson Helper very satisfactory; and they may order it with the full assurance that it is more complete every way than any lesson annual or quarterly published by the Christian Church, with the single exception of The Lesson Commentary.

Style and Price.—Printed on fine calendered paper, and substantially bound in heavy boards, only 35 cents per copy; $3.60 per dozen.

REFORMATION OF THE 19th CENTURY

OR NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

A Series of Historical Articles to Run Through the Christian-Evangelist During the Year 1899

I. Introductory Period—1809 to 1819.

BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

This will include those stirring events which occurred in the formative period of our reformatory movement with which the present generation should be thoroughly familiar.

II. From the Organization of the Christian Missionary Society to the Outbreak of the Civil War—1849 to 1861.

BY DR. B. B. TYLER,
Contributing Editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

This period of our history, embracing the first decade of operations under the American Christian Missionary Society, with Jerusalem and Jamacia missions, will be full of interest to readers of to-day.

III. The War Period, rom the Firing on Sumpter up to the Death of Mr. Campbell—1861 to 1866.

BY DR. W. T. MOORE,
Dean of the Missouri Bible College, Columbia.

This is a turbulent period in our country's history, and one that tried most severely the principle we had adopted, of unity in Christ, in spite of differences of opinion. It ends with the death of Mr. Campbell, an event which opponents of the Reformation thought would practically end the movement.

IV. The Period Between the Death of Mr. Campbell and the Organization of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society—1866 to 1875.

BY T. W. GRAFTON,
Pastor Christian Church, Rock Island, Ill.

This period covers one of those turning-points in our history in which our whole future was involved. The conflict between Christian liberty and strict constructionism, and the conception and trial of the "Louisville Plan" of mission work, enter into this part of our history.

V. The Period from 1875 to the Close of 1899.

1. AMERICAN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
B. L. SMITH, Cor. Sec. A. C. M. S.

2. FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.
A. MCLEAN, Cor. Sec. F. C. M. S.

3. CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.
Miss Lois White, Cor Sec. C. W. B. M.

The closing period in our analysis is the period of expansion. Liberty has triumphed in its contest with legalism, and it manifests its power in the formation of new organizations through which to carry on a more aggressive work. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society came to birth, and the old Mother Society through their aid, soon comes to the consciousness of its own mission. The history of these societies will be given by their respective corresponding secretaries.

The whole series will be under the editorial supervision of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Series begins in the issue of Jan. 12th. Subscribe at once and secure the entire series.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Since ratifying the treaty of peace the Senate has suffered a relapse in its enthusiasm for the immediate settlement of the Philippine problem. It may be said plausibly, and indeed truly, that the beginning of active hostilities by the Filipinos has taken the problem temporarily out of the control of the Senate, and placed it in the hands of Gen. Otis and Admiral Dewey. Since the natives insist upon fighting, there is nothing to do but whip them or be whipped by them. It is a misfortune that they should be led to look upon the Americans as their enemies, but perhaps ample compensation for this may be found in their increased respect for our power. However, this does not relieve the Senate of all responsibility, but makes it the more necessary that there should be given some definite assurance of our good will. Such a resolution as that of Senator McEnery, of Louisiana, would meet the requirements, and would not, as it seems to us, be open to the criticism of committing the administration too rigidly to any specific policy. It provides "that by the ratification of the treaty of peace it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the islands into citizenship of the United States, ... but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants, to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of the said islands." This might mean ultimate independence, statehood, or territorial or colonial government. Surely, that is not too narrow a limit. It does not prevent control and the development of the people in the direction of free government, and there ought to be no great hesitancy about committing the administration so far, since the ratification of the treaty has settled the matter of control. If such a resolution would promote the restoration of friendly relations with the Filipinos, as it seems fitted to do, it would be well worth while for the Senate to pass it. There is, however, little probability that it will do so.

The House of Representatives is busy with appropriation bills. The sundry civil bill, the naval appropriation bill and the Nicaragua canal bill are all before the House. The millions which they call for, not to mention the increased appropriation for the army which will be necessary if the Army Bill recently passed by the House becomes law, make it evident that being a world-power is an expensive luxury. Mr. Cannon, chairman of the appropriation committee, especially urges the necessity of economy and estimates plausibly that the deficiency for the year ending July 1, 1899, will be $159,000,000, making no allowance for expenditure on the construction of the Nicaragua canal. An attempt was made to attach the Nicaragua canal bill as a rider to the rivers and harbors bills, but this has been abandoned in favor of the plan of making it an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill. There is doubt as to the legality of this procedure, but Mr. Hepburn, who fathers the scheme, declares it to be legitimate. There is some likelihood that the economical spirit of Mr. Cannon and some other friends of the canal bill may result in leaving it over until the next session.

General Eagan's sentence was dismissal from the service for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. It was a severe sentence for an officer of his age and rank, but the rules left the court no alternative. The sentence was, however, accompanied by a recommendation for executive clemency, and on the basis of this and in recognition of Gen. Eagan's distinguished service in the past and of the provocation to the offense, the President has commuted the sentence to suspension for six years. Under this arrangement the punishment is reduced to merely the disgrace involved. Aside from this, the suspension means simply a six years' vacation with salary continued without reduction at the rate of $5,500 a year—a prospect which, in itself, is not calculated to serve as a horrible warning to other officers who may be tempted to call the commanding general a liar. This six years' suspension would bring General Eagan to within a few days of the date of his retirement from the service at the age limit, so that he would be restored just in time to be honorably retired. At his own request, however, the sentence has been again changed from suspension to immediate retirement, whereby he forfeits one-fifth of his salary and, in compensation, is partially relieved of the disgrace.

The report of the War Investigation Commission has been completed and presented to the President. It is based upon the sworn testimony of about five hundred witnesses, most of whom were chosen because they had some criticism to offer upon the conduct of the War Department. It is, therefore, an investigation of complaints rather than a collection of testimony of those who are satisfied. The subject of army rations has been gone over more or less thoroughly. Reports have been received from the commander of every army post and of every regiment in the regular army in regard to the beef, both fresh and canned, which has been issued to the troops. Many samples have been analyzed at the Department of Agriculture and the whole subject of the method of packing beef has been investigated under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. The report has not yet been published, but the general tenor of it may be surmised from the following statement by a member of the commission, who may be considered as speaking for them all, since the report was adopted unanimously: "Of course, there were some evils, but they were to be expected. The soldiers in the Civil War never had hospital or medical attendance as good as was given those in the war with Spain, and their army rations was not as eatable as it is now. The men who complained most of the food we found were very generally the militiamen from the interiors of states, who had been allowed $2 per head for subsistence stores while they were in state camps. When they went into active fighting they expected the same sort of thing."

With every week the Dreyfus case becomes more complicated and seems farther from a final settlement. A few weeks ago it seemed that an immediate solution was in sight and that it would be a verdict in favor of the prisoner of Devil's Island. At that junction, it will be remembered, the president of the civil section of the Court of Cassation, a notoriously corrupt judge made charges against the criminal section which has jurisdiction over the Dreyfus case. The Cabinet refused to listen to the charges and won a fight in the chamber on that issue. But for some unknown reason the Cabinet has reversed its position. An investigation has been made into the conduct of the criminal section, but the report has not been published, although there is a great demand for it by the Chamber of Deputies and the public. A bill introduced by the Cabinet has now, after a great fight, been passed through the chamber, the effect of which will be to take the Dreyfus case out of the exclusive jurisdiction of the criminal section, where it naturally belongs, and commit it to the entire court, including the civil section. This will involve another retrial of the case from the beginning, and nobody knows how much additional delay. It will not be possible much longer to believe that anybody in France is making a serious effort to bring this tedious matter to a conclusion. Perhaps it is believed to be simpler and safer to delay on more or less plausible pretexts until the prisoner dies.

The international anti-anarchist conference lately held at Rome attracted more attention by the original announcement of it than by its results. This cannot fairly be taken as an evidence that the conference was a complete failure, for its meetings were secret and no official report of the proceedings has been published. But unofficial statements have been made which, if trustworthy, indicate that the conference did not produce such important results as were expected. It was decided to form an international bureau at Berlin for the supervision of anarchism, and the police of the various countries are to keep constantly in touch with this bureau. It was decided that all who openly proclaim themselves anarchists, publish or edit anarchist papers, possess anarchist literature or belong to anarchist clubs, shall be considered and treated as anarchists. This is good, of course, as far as it goes, but there is a circle in the definition and it leaves untouched the questions as to what an anarchist really is and whether the mere profession of anarchy, without evidence of overt, unlawful acts, is a crime. It was decided that the trial of anarchists should be conducted behind closed doors, to rob them of the notoriety which they crave. This will be well enough if the practice of secret trial does not give color to a charge of injustice and persecution. Censorship is to be exercised over anarchist periodicals by the various governments, and extradition treaties are to be arranged later between individual countries. Even these comparatively unimportant resolutions were agreed upon by a vote which was far from unanimous.

The senatorial fights continue with no visible change in Pennsylvania, Nebraska, Utah and California. The date for the trial of Quay and his son for the misuse of public money has been postponed again from February 20 to February 27. There does not now appear to be any likelihood that the deadlock in that state can be broken until the trial shall have established Mr. Quay's guilt or innocence of this particular charge. At present he is too weak to win and too strong to be defeated. Meanwhile, a new anti-Quay candidate for the senatorship has entered the field in the person of Mr. Eastburn.

But the army beef question is not yet settled. An order has been issued for a court of inquiry to investigate the charges made by Gen. Miles in regard to the unfitness of certain supplies provided to the troops. This will mean a complete reinvestigation of the work of the commissary, department and may lead to trouble for the commanding general if his charges are not substantiated. The issue of the order immediately after the presentation of the report of the former commission appears to indicate, as does also the above-quoted statement by one of its members, that the charges made by Gen. Miles have not yet been proven true. Consequently this inquiry will be fully as much a trial of Gen. Miles as a trial of the commissary department. The court of inquiry is instituted, in addition to its findings of fact, to "submit an opinion upon the merits of the case, together with such recommendations of further proceedings as may be warranted by the facts developed in the course of the inquiry." The members of the court are Maj.-Gen. James F. Wade, Brig.-Gen. G. W. Davis, Col. G. L. Gillespie and Lieut.-Col. George B. Davis.

The death of Mr. Young, Librarian of Congress, a few weeks ago, leaves vacant an important position. As was to be expected, all the dispensers of patronage who think that the administration is still in debt to them, have been busy presenting their candidates. There seems to be a very general failure to realize that the position of librarian in a great library is one which demands other qualifications than an effective political pull. The management of such a library as the congressional demands as thorough and technical a training as the building of a suspension bridge. The Congressional Library should be the "British Museum" of America. It has the most magnificent library building in the world and its greatest need now is for a competent administrator, a thorough master of scientific library economy. The names so far suggested are those of men known rather among politicians than among librarians.

The Queen's speech at the opening of the British Parliament, last week, presented a review of the situation in the Sudan, the conditions of Crete and the Czar's invitation to a conference for disarmament. It cannot be considered as a document highly significant for the future policy of the administration. The beginning of the new session finds Lord Salisbury's Cabinet in a stronger position than it was at the close of the preceding. His foreign policy in connection with the Fashoda and Obdurman episodes, and the Anglo-French coolness, has commanded general respect and strengthened his position. The center of interest for the present session is in the development of the foreign policy, especially with reference to relations with France in Central Africa, Newfoundland and the Far East. Of domestic issues, the one which seems most likely to come into prominence is the church question. The ritualistic tendency of the established church, especially as exhibited in the growing use of auricular confession, has aroused a strong sentiment in favor of limiting by law this Romeward movement in the Anglican Church. The bishops have embodied their ideas in a bill proposing to turn the whole matter over to themselves assembled in convocation. The debate on the subject is now being carried on in the House of Commons and in the Convocations of Canterbury and York. The Liberal party, of which Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman has been chosen leader in place of Sir Vernon Harcourt, is in general opposed to this unconditional surrender of the church into the hands of the bishops, and in this it is said to be supported by the sentiment of a majority of the people.

A dispatch from Manila, dated Feb. 14th, announces that the United States forces under Brigadier General Miller, which have for some time been anchored near the city of Iloilo, captured that city on Saturday last after a brief bombardment. Gen. Miller, on receipt of his instructions from Manila, sent native commissioners ashore from the U. S. transport, St. Paul, with a communication for the governor of Iloilo, asking him to surrender within a stated time, and warning him not to make any demonstration in the interval. The insurgents immediateiy moved their guns and prepared to defend their position. The Petrel then fired two warning guns, and the insurgent forces immediately opened fire upon them. The Petrel and the Baltimore then bombarded the town which the natives, having set on fire, immediately evacuated. The American troops were promptly landed and extinguished the fires in all cases of foreign property, but not before considerable damage had been done. No American casualties are reported, but the enemy's loss is believed to have been heavy.

HUMAN BROTHERHOOD AND MISSIONS.

During his visit to the city last week, Bishop Potter made an address in which he related the incident of a little girl in a tenement district of the city who was carrying a child much too large for her age upon her shoulders. When she was approached by a lady who asked, "Is not that boy too heavy for you to carry?" she turned and exclaimed quickly, "Why, he is my brother!" What a world of pathos in this little incident! What other reason did she need to give why she should stagger along under so heavy a burden? It was her brother and, therefore, the proper thing for her to do. She felt that she owed it to him because of this kinship, and besides that, it was a pleasure for her to do it because it was her brother.

Have we not here the secret of all altruistic and missionary effort? Why should we care to give our money and our time, and send our sons and our daughters to India, China, Japan, Africa and the islands of the sea to preach to them the gospel of Christ and teach them the way of salvation? Is it not that they are our brothers and sisters? Is it not that God is the Father of us all, and that they as well as we are made in His image?

It may be said that Christ's command to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature" is sufficient ground for missionary effort; but back of this great commission, as its inspiring cause, lay the fact that these creatures of every nation were His brothers and our brothers by reason of a common nature, common wants and common desires. It is much harder to realize this fact than it is for us to recognize our kinship with those who are near to us, and who have attained to something of the same moral and intellectual ideals which we possess. It is very hard to realize that the "submerged tenth," the inhabitants of the slums, the poor, the wretched outcasts of society, are our brothers and sisters, only lower down, it may be, in the scale of progress than we. But this is the true basis of all unselfish labor for our fellowmen. It was this feeling in the heart of Christ that made Him willing to lay aside His glory, which He had with the Father before the world was, and come down to the earth to seek and to save the lost. He saw in every sinner a possible saint, and in every soul polluted and dwarfed by sin, capabilities of indefinite improvement. He loved men because they were his brothers.

The day is rapidly approaching when the churches are called upon for their annual offering for Foreign Missions. The question will suggest itself to many a church member who has not been accustomed, perhaps, to joining in these offerings, "Why should I give my means to have the gospel preached to these far-off peoples who worship idols and grovel in darkness and superstition?" The answer is, "They are our brothers." Their lot has not been as favored as ours; they have not lived in a land which for centuries has been blest with Christian civilization; they are groping in darkness; they worship idols because they know no better; they have souls that hunger after truth and righteousness just as we have; but they need some one to tell them what is truth and how they may obtain righteousness. Have we no heart to pity these millions of our brothers and sisters who bury their dead with no hope of seeing them again—who lie down in death with no hope of the life beyond? If we have not, then are we not like Christ, who "tasted death for every man," and who commanded his disciples to carry the good news of salvation to every creature in all the world. If we could accustom ourselves to think of the servant girl in our homes, of the employees in our shops and factories, of the men and women who do the rough, hard work of life, as our brothers and our sisters, we would treat them differently. We should have a kindlier feeling toward them. We should not wrong them. On the contrary, we should seek to enlighten, elevate and save them.

Christ is not ashamed to call the humblest of us His brethren. He wants us to feel the spirit of kinship toward all the lowly ones of earth. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." In every neglected child, in every sinning outcast, in every aching, unsatisfied human heart in pagan lands, hungering for the bread of life, do we not see Christ pleading with us for help? Blessed are we if we are able to recognize the Christ in all these humble brethren who need our help and minister to them as we would minister to Him were He present with us.

A CHARACTERISTIC BLAST.

The last number of the Christian Standard contains a nearly five-column editorial entitled, "The Alleged Crisis in Christian Endeavor." The article is thoroughly characteristic of the paper in its posing as the champion of the Board and of the Convention. The bulk of the article is taken up with defending the action of the Board in its refusal to assume the responsibility of employing Bro. Tyler for his whole time. But no attack has been made upon this action of the Board. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has uttered no word of censure in relation to this action of the Acting Board. The large number of the brethren who have written for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST concerning the importance of a forward movement in Christian Endeavor, have made no attack on this action of the Board. Indeed, many of them have distinctly approved of its action. Why, then, should the Christian Standard feel called upon to enter into a lengthy editorial defense of this action? This question will bear studying about a little.

The article in question evidently regards the series of articles in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, by a number of prominent brethren throughout the brotherhood, as a sort of conspiracy against the Board and its policy. We see no ground for this belief except the fact that these good brethren, who are referred to by the Standard as "brethren who seem determined to take the matter in their own hands," did not send their communications by way of Cincinnati to be endorsed before their publication. It is probable that the brethren, in the simplicity of their souls, did omit this formality, supposing they had the right as Christian freemen to express themselves frankly as to the proper course that should be pursued in the interest of Christian Endeavor without being charged with "not keeping faith with the Convention." This is a very serious charge to make against forty or fifty of our prominent pastors and Christian Endeavor workers. What ground is there for it?

The Chattanooga Convention adopted the report of the committee on Christian Endeavor, recommending that the present National Superintendent be retained, and his whole time secured for the work, "provided the Board of Managers can see its way clear to secure his time for the work, and can arrange for his support, either from its treasury or through the Endeavor Societies." The Board has decided that it does not see its way clear to arrange for his support in either of the ways mentioned. The question then arose: "Must the matter of necessity end here, and must the Christian Endeavor Societies be deprived of a supervision which the National Convention believed to be most desirable?" This question was submitted through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to the brotherhood for its answer. The answers have come with a unanimity and a liberality that have been most surprising and gratifying. It is the responses to this inquiry that the Christian Standard regards as "not keeping faith with the Convention."

This is a strange sort of interpretation to put upon the action of the Convention and upon these recent expressions of judgment on the part of the friends of Christian Endeavor. It is strict constructionism and legalism gone to seed. The Chattanooga Convention said it wanted Brother Tyler retained as National Superintendent Hundreds, not to say thousands of generous hearts, speaking through those who wrote for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on the subject, said: "We will help support the National Superintendent for his whole time." Is this disloyalty to the Convention? Is there, then, really no room left for spontaneous, free, unofficial action on the part of the brotherhood in carrying out the desires of the Convention? Must they need limit their contributions to certain official channels or be accused of breaking faith with the Convention? Who is this that assumes the authority to rebuke the brethren for expressing their sentiments freely in the public prints on this question? Is this the Chairman of the Acting Board speaking ex cathedra, or is it simply the utterance of the editor of the Christian Standard?

Referring to the action of the editor of this paper in opening its columns to the brethren to express themselves on this question, and in giving his own free expression of sentiment on the subject, as he is in the habit of doing on every subject, the editor of the Christian Standard says: "He [Bro. Tyler] owes it to himself, to the Board and to the Convention to discourage this untempered advocacy of his too partial friend!" This is good. We feel ourselves officially spanked for our "untempered advocacy" of the course which we believe the interest of Christian Endeavor requires! The Standard sees in this effort of ours to help forward a great and important interest of the brotherhood nothing more than a matter of friendship on our part for Brother Tyler. No doubt the editor of the Christian Standard is also a friend of Brother Tyler, and yearns to have his services in the interest of Christian Endeavor as well as we, but he is happily able to restrain his friendship within moderate bounds so as not to sacrifice public interests on the altar of private friendship!

We have been anxious in this whole matter, not only to see the cause of Christian Endeavor advanced through the wise supervision which the National Superintendent would give it, but we have been equally solicitous that this might be accomplished without the least friction with the Home Board. We have been in frequent correspondence with the Secretaries of that Board, and have recently had a long conference with one of them with a view of carrying out this manifest desire of the brotherhood without any semblance of such friction. There is not the slightest reason for any. The idea that the raising of the necessary funds for the support of the National Superintendent would cause "the diversion of thought and energy from certain things which our missionary hosts had undertaken in this Jubilee Year" is not shared by the brotherhood at large, who have "certain things" in mind quite as necessary to be accomplished as some other things to which the Standard is giving great prominence. Nor do we doubt but that the sum total of money contributed for missionary purposes will be greater with than without the guidance and inspiration which the National Superintendent of Christian Endeavor would give to the work.

Among the reasons assigned by the Standard why the Board should not sustain Bro. Tyler is the fact that a part of his time would be given to the Bethany C. E. Reading Course which has "no organic connection with the American Christian Missionary Society." Thereby hangs a tale. The Natioual Convention at Springfield, Ill., endorsed the Reading Courses, and authorized the Acting Board to appoint the committee to carry out the plan. This Board, of which the editor of the Christian Standard is chairman, decided that this course was not wise and declined to appoint the committee. But the committee was appointed in another way and the work which the Convention approved has been carried on successfully, even if unofficially, but the editor of the Standard has always declined to recognize it, or to print its articles. Now, when the friends of Christian Endeavor propose to raise funds outside of the official channels to support this work, this same editor arraigns them for disorderly procedure!

The Standard assures us in the conclusion of its editorial that Christian Endeavor will likely exist and go forward independent of the decision of the Acting Board or of the "plea of the gifted Superintendent and his chief advocate." No doubt. The same is true of all our Secretaries, but we would regard that as a very poor argument for dismissing any one of them, even though they be "paid Superintendents," a phrase which the Standard reserves for Christian Endeavor.

We have only to say, in conclusion, that

Bro. Tyler and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST referred this matter to the brethren. It is in their hands. They know their liberty in Christ and are likely to exercise it, and that, too, without any thought of intrenching upon the prerogatives of the Board or the wishes of the National Convention. As to the "awkward position" in which Brother Tyler is placed by what the Standard calls "opposition to the decision of the Board," he is, no doubt, able to speak for himself. We will only say for him that he has the highest confidence of the brotherhood, who believe in his wisdom, in his purity of motive, and in his unselfish and whole-hearted consecration to the cause of Christ. His agreement to accept the work, as suggested by the Board, only "until some better arrangement can be made," relieves him from any charge of inconsistency or unfairness.

Speaking for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, it wears no collar, labeled with the initials of any official board. It is the servant of Jesus Christ and of his cause. It proposes, in the future as in the past, to work in harmony with all our missionary boards, but it owes its allegiance to a higher power. It will submit to no semi-official dictation through the columns of the Christian Standard or otherwise. Its readers, we are sure, have the same spirit. Our missionary interests have no more faithful and devoted servants than the men whom the Standard rebukes for "not keeping faith with the Convention." They, as we, will repudiate this bit of official impertinence, and go forward to do the work that God's providence may seem to lay upon us.

THE CONGRESS OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

The first Congress of the Disciples of Christ will meet in St. Louis in April.

This meeting has been called as a result of much correspondence and conference. The subject has in fact been under consideration in a somewhat informal and desultory manner for a number of years. Last summer a number of brethren who happened to be in one place considered the advisability of calling a meeting for the discussion of questions not deemed pertinent to the purposes of our national conventions. It was felt generally by those who composed this friendly group that such an assembly properly conducted would possess great value. It was clearly understood that no legislative authority would belong to the meeting. Such a meeting as was contemplated would furnish an opportunity for a free and frank expression of opinions regarding matters of vital importance. The subject was at length placed in the hands of five brethren, tried and true, whose names here follow: H. W. Everest, J. H. Garrison, W. F. Richardson, J. Z. Tyler and H. L. Willett. It was understood that these brethren would issue a call for a meeting of the character above indicated. They were also requested to prepare a program. This they have done. Topics to be discussed have been selected. Persons to lead in the discussions have been named. The place and time of the Congress have been indicated. St. Louis was selected as the place and April 25-27 as the time.

A deliberate approach has been made to this first Congress of Disciples of Christ. The method of proceeding has been similar to that of "the fathers" as they came to "our first convention" in Cincinnati in 1849. That convention came as a natural result of steps previously taken and enterprises previously inaugurated. This Congress comes as a logical result of our history. From the first we have stood for freedom of thought and speech. "The fathers" were men of large minds, trained to think. They were men of mental independence. They possessed intellectual courage. They believed, and therefore spoke. They were scholars and moral heroes. At an early period schools were founded by them. Their students were encouraged to think. They were trained to use their mental powers. Inquiry was encouraged. Every matter at all worthy of consideration that came before these men was carefully examined. There was the freest, frankest, fullest, boldest investigation and discussion. The thoughts fittest to survive passed the ordeal in safety. Recently there has been a revival, to a degree, of our early experience. There is an increasing demand for freedom of intellectual action and speech on matters not so much as thought of from thirty to fifty years ago. This Congress will be a place in which there can be such a candid consideration of vital topics as the present times demand. It is more profitable to meet face to face in dicussion than to carry on our investigations exclusively in print and remote from each other. This does not mean that our newspaper discussions will be discontinued. They will, without doubt, continue! But the hope is cherished that they will proceed upon a higher plane than in some instances heretofore, and in a more dignified and less personal style.

There are thoughts that are entertained tentatively. Those who entertain them are not certain that the thoughts are worthy. There may be a lack of foundation for them. Possibly they are unworthy. An oral expression of them in the presence of friends competent to examine them may result in their abandonment. Discussion may clear the atmosphere. Some things seen as through a smoked glass may be made to appear distinctly. All men who think entertain thoughts as here indicated. To such persons the Congress will possess inestimable value. If properly conducted this meeting means in a sense and to a degree the beginning of a new era and a better in our intellectual life. Nor is there reason to even suspect that the conduct of this assembly will be other than satisfactory.

Attendance upon the Congress and participation in its proceedings will be entirely voluntary. Those who desire to enjoy its proceedings and who can do so will attend. It will not be a delegate meeting. The churches as such will not be represented. As a result the Congress, of course, will possess no other authority than such as will belong necessarily to the wisdom of its utterances.

The topics to be formally considered seem to have been wisely selected. They are present-day subjects. They are also practical in character. Some of them are "The Value of a Theology," "College Endowment," "The Scope and Significance of the Cry, 'Back to Christ,' in Modern Religious Thought," "City Evangelization," "Modern Improvements in Literature and their Relation to Religious Thought," "Crucial Points Concerning the Holy Spirit," "The Adjustment of our Church Organization to Present Needs" and "The Enrichment of Public Worship among the Disciples." The names of the persons chosen to lead in the discussion of the foregoing subjects is a sufficient guarantee that there will be intellectual stimulus combined with a strong moral and spiritual uplift.

Some of the persons who are expected to take a leading part are E. V. Zollars, president of Hiram College; E. S. Ames, professor in Butler College; W. B. Craig, chancellor of Drake University; Clinton Lockhart, president of Christian University, Canton, Mo.; D. R. Dungan, pastor Mt. Cabanne Church, St. Louis; J. J. Haley, pastor Christian Church, Cynthiana, Ky.; J. B. Briney, pastor, Moberly, Mo.; W. J. Lhamon, pastor First Christian Church, Allegheny, Pa.; W. T. Moore, principal of the Bible Department, University of Missouri; W. D. McClintock, professor of English in the University of Chicago; B. O. Aylesworth, pastor Central Christian Church, Denver; F. D. Power, pastor Vermont Avenue Church, Washington; B. C. Deweese, professor in College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky.; J. A. Lord, editor of the Christian Standard, Cincinnati; J. H. Garrison, editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis; W. F. Richardson, pastor First Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo.; Geo. H. Combs, pastor Prospect Avenue Church, Kansas City; Jabez Hall, dean of the Bible Department of Butler College, and H. O. Breeden, pastor of the Central Christian Church, Des Moines.

These are the names of some who are expected to lead in the discussions in this Congress.

The City Evangelization Conference, which has usually been held in April, becomes a part of the Congress of Disciples of Christ. The interests of this important work, as can be seen, will be carefully considered. The annual conference of the Board of Education also becomes a part of this Congress.

Hour of Prayer.

THE TRIUMPHS OF THE CROSS.

(Acts 2-37-47; 5:12-16.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Feb. 22nd, 1899.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The gospel of Christ, preached fully and fearlessly with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven, accomplishes marvelous results both in the winning of converts and the moral renovation of their lives.

The picture presented by these passages from Acts is a living picture, full of life and movement. Peter had just preached a great discourse in which he had vindicated the claims of Jesus to be both Lord and Christ, proving it from the old Scriptures and pointing to the manifestation of the Spirit as the culminating argument. When he had made it clear that this Jesus whom they had crucified and slain was their promised Messiah and the Lord of life and glory, who had conquered death and had risen from the dead, they were "pricked in their hearts." They realized for the first time the awful nature of their sin in rejecting the world's Savior. This realization of their sinful course led them to exclaim, "Brethren, what shall we do?"

This is a great question and it takes a great sermon, measured by the divine standard, to draw it out. The preaching that does not prick men to the heart and make them feel the awful power and guilt of sin and their need of salvation is not gospel preaching. Herein we fear is the great lack in much of the modern preaching. It lacks convicting power. No matter how clearly a preacher may be able to explain the terms of salvation, if he has previously failed to convince men of sin, in vain may he expatiate on the terms of remission.

This is a good question for Christians as well as the unconverted to ask. There are many members in our churches whose lives are barren and unfruitful, and these ought to be so convicted by the power of the gospel as to ask, "What shall we do?" And the preacher should be able to answer their question as well as that of the sinner.

Note the straightforwardness and simplicity of Peter's answer to this great question and compare it with much of the abstruse and difficult philosophizing of our time: "Repent ye," said he, "and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Let the following questions be carefully answered:

1. The convicting message of Peter—What?
2. The question asked by his hearers and its import—What?
3. Peter's answer—(a) What commanded? (b) What promised?
4. What is it to repent?
5. What is it to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ?
6. What is remission of sins?
7. What are we to understand by the gift of the Holy Ghost?

Note the result: Who were baptized? "They that received his word were baptized: and there were added unto them in that day about three thousand souls." This was a great sermon, evoking a great question, which brought out a great answer, containing great promises, which were accepted by a great company of believers, producing great joy. It was, therefore, a great meeting.

The evidence that this was thorough work is contained in the statement (v. 42): "And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of bread and the prayers." Another evidence of the wonderful power of the new faith is brought out in the statement (vs. 44 and 45): "And all that believed were together and had all things common; and they sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all, according as any man had need."

The joyful nature of Christianity is indicated in the statement that (v. 46) "they did take their food with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God and having favor with all the people."

The second citation of Scripture brings out the miraculous power with which the apostles were clothed, by which "were many signs and wonders wrought among the people." These events filled the people with awe, "and believers were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women." Notice that we now speak generally of "joining the church," but in those days believers were "added to the Lord." If they are added to the Lord they will be added to the church, but they may be added to the church without being added to the Lord, using the church in the sense of a visible body. It is worthy of notice also that in those early days these messengers of Christ, like their Master, sought to relieve human need of every kind. "And there also came together a multitude from the cities round about Jerusalem, bringing sick folks, and them that were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed every one" (5:16).

These were, indeed, wonderful triumphs of the cross. Because these apostles stood very near to their Lord He filled them with His power for the working of these marvels. We may not need the miraculous element in our time, when there are remedial agencies, but we do need that same Spirit in abundance which enabled the apostles to preach the gospel with such mighty power.

PRAYER.

O Lord, our Savior and Redeemer, who didst strengthen and equip Thy disciples of old to preach Thy gospel with power, do Thou graciously endow all Thy servants to-day, in whatever sphere they may labor, to so live and so proclaim the story of Thy love that multitudes of men and women may be added unto Thee; until Thy church, putting away its impurities, its divisions, its party spirit, shall be animated by Thy Spirit and go forth to conquest and to victory. For Thy name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

A few days spent with one of our colleges, coming in contact with the teachers and students, noting the eager young lives gathered there for instruction, and feeling the inspiration that always comes from contact with such life, serves to remind one of the high function that is being filled by our institutions of learning. A college gathers within its walls, generally, a very superior class of young men and women. In every community there are a few youths who aspire to something higher in the way of education than the public schools afford. These go away to our colleges. Some of them aim to be ministers of the gospel; some, lawyers; some, physicians; some, missionaries; some, merchants; some, farmers; some, skilled workmen, etc., but all of them wish to be educated. They are there for that purpose. This fact makes them a very interesting group of young people.

The editor of this paper has just spent a few days at Butler College, at Irvington, which, as most of our readers know, is a beautiful suburb of Indianapolis. The 7th of February was Founder's Day for that institution, and the celebration this year was somewhat more formal and emphatic than it has been for a number of years. The affiliation of Butler with the University of Chicago made it altogether appropriate that President Harper should be present and participate in the exercises of the day. At ten o'clock on Tuesday morning, the 7th, the college chapel was well filled with students and citizens, and after devotional exercises, conducted by A. B. Philputt, pastor Central Christian Church, Indianapolis, short addresses were made by Prof. B. A. Jenkins on "The Significance of Founder's Day," by the editor of this paper on "Religion and Education," and by President Harper on "College Affiliation." The speeches were heartily received by the students and citizens, and all seemed to feel that the occasion had been very helpful.

In the afternoon the students of the college gave a free entertainment entitled, "Jason Down to Date; or Willie Lampkin in Quest of a Sheepskin." It was designed to represent a young man, taken in the rough, and passing through the four classes in college life. There were four acts prepared respectively by the Freshman, Sophomore, Junior and Senior Classes. It was a very clever and creditable performance. All the professors were "roasted" more or less, and quite a number of the students, but it was all done in good spirit and was received in the same way. It is no doubt wiser to allow youthful exuberance to work itself off in this harmless way, than to attempt to put too severe restriction upon it.

In the evening President Harper delivered an address on "The University and Democracy," in the city of Indianapolis, to a large and cultivated audience. It was a very able and thoughtful address, and was listened to with the greatest interest. Dr. Harper has a high ideal of what a university should be and of its place in the life of the people. The address derived additional importance from the fact that an effort is on foot to increase the efficiency of the University of Indianapolis, an institution which has been created by the consolidation of the various colleges in and about the city. This same project was the theme of an interesting after-dinner discussion, the afternoon of the same day in which Dr. Harper and others spoke. The ambition or desire to have a university there that will be a mighty factor in the life of the people is certainly a most laudable one, and one that should call out a great deal of interest on the part of the people of that enterprising city.

A Bible Institute, continuing through Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, was conducted by Prof. Morgan, of Drake University, and the editor of this paper. The extremely cold weather which prevailed during the time prevented as large attendance as was expected, but under the circumstances it was quite encouraging, and a considerable degree of interest was evinced in the subjects discussed. The spirit of free inquiry and honest investigation seems to prevail in Butler, and there is that blending of fidelity to fundamental truth with freedom to receive the new light, which alone creates a safe and inspiring atmosphere for students. The Bible College, under the presidency of Jabez Hall, is making a good record this year, while the Academic College is enjoying a prosperous session. President Scot Butler is in Honduras for the winter, and Prof. Brown is presiding in his absence. No institution among us has a brighter outlook than Butler, and we feel sure that its future is to be one of increasing power and usefulness.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

INTRODUCTORY PERIOD.

III. The Union Principle Applied—Union with the "Christian" Reformers.

BY PROF. CHARLES LOUIS LOOS.

The gradual development of the thought of our reformation in the minds of its originators is a historical fact of deepest interest and most instructive. The people who have accepted this religious regeneration should well understand this fact, and the lesson it bears should be taught with all diligence and clearness to the religious world here and elsewhere, especially to that part of it that has witnessed the rise and wonderful growth of this reform. Nothing is more common than that the intimate genetic history of the beginnings of great religious revolutions in time become misunderstood or is wholly forgotten, even by those most concerned to understand it.

It was the unhappy divisions in the Christian world that first arrested the attention of Thomas Campbell; it was not this or that particular error in doctrine or practice. Let this be well noted. He saw that this fearful Babel of discord in faith and life in Christendom was a vast apostasy from the original state of the church and wholly opposed to the doctrine and spirit of the New Testament, as well as most disastrous to all the purposes and interests of the cause of God on the earth. Herein lay the motive, the root and beginning of this reformation. The primary cause of it, therefore, was quite different from those that moved Luther, Calvin and Wesley in their efforts to regenerate the church.

Then, when Thomas Campbell and his son Alexander began to study thoughtfully the question, How can a union of God's people be brought about? there gradually came to them, one after the other, the great ideas that have become the cardinal principles of the plea that has become so potent in our land.

WHAT ARE THESE?

1. These wise men soon saw and said that the party creeds were the immediate product, and then also the perpetuating cause and condition of the disunion that disfigures, distracts and weakens the church. While these maintain their dominion, it was easy to see that union was impossible.

Creeds—so these men declared—express the faith of a people at the particular period of their formation; they do not represent this same people's belief one and two hundred years later. This is confessedly so, not only with Protestants, but even with Catholics.

They fix and perpetuate religious and theological ideas and institutions; they are, therefore, permanent barriers to union.

It is well known that the doctrines of creeds are very often not shared by many of those ostensibly acknowledging them, often of very large numbers; they are, therefore, false standards of the confessions of these religious bodies, and keep apart many who might without these separating barriers be "mingled into one."

Human creeds, these brave reformers therefore decided, must be removed out of the way that God's people may be united.

But certain other principles, following logically from this chief one just stated, were soon developed in the minds of these men, as they reasoned farther in the direction in which they were moving.

2. As men of God, wise in the experience of the church and in the knowledge of the Divine Word, they determined that a union of Christians, to be approved and blessed of God and enduring, must be based on the eternal rock of the fundamental truths of the divine teaching. It must not be a union devised by men and resting on a humanly ordained foundation.

3. Another important principle must be accepted as a corollary from the above. It is this: that conformity can be demanded only in matters of faith that are clearly and expressly taught as such in the New Testament; and that teaching and preaching in matters of doctrine and practice must be strictly confined to what is thus taught. Furthermore, that a clear distinction must be made between what is faith and what is opinion; liberty to be allowed in the domain of the latter; but opinions to be kept private and not taught nor insisted upon. Finally, that all untaught questions and doctrinal speculations must be avoided, as wholly unauthorized by the Word of God, and as leading to discord and strife.

This distinction between faith and opinion was one of the most important principles of judgment and action developed by this reformation, making the former imperative, the latter a matter of private liberty. How salutary this distinction has been in the progress of our plea, must be evident to every enlightened man who knows well its history.

There could be no difficulty in inducing men to accept the Bible as the basis of union; but what after that? To allow unlimited liberty of interpretation and preaching would be to introduce a universal dissolvent that would make unity impossible. These wise men whom God in his providence, as we cannot but believe, sent forth to lead this great effort to bring back the church to its original life of unity in faith and practice, steered their ship safe between the Scylla of latitudinarianism and the Charybdis of creed dominion.

It was assuredly a very bold venture, never before attempted by even the bravest reformers, to propose to bring back into permanent and prosperous unity great multitudes of Christians on evangelical, New Testament grounds, by the application of the principle of liberty in opinions and oneness only in the fundamental essentials offered to our belief and faith in the Word of God. The insistence on both sides of this law of union was an act of the wisest judgment and of the highest moment. And does it not reveal also a most extraordinary strength of faith in God's Word and providence in the hearts of the men who so confidently and hopefully offered this rule of action to the church?

There is something sublimely attractive in such heroic, intrepid confidence in a great principle of truth. These grand men seemed ever to say, It is right; it will triumph! and that, too, against the belief, the practice and traditions of ages, and of the whole Christian world.

When, near the beginning of this century they first proclaimed to the world the principles above stated, they would look into the unknown future only with the eyes of faith. These reformatory ideas had as yet no history; they had no past since the first age of the church. But now we can look back over more than fourscore years of actual experience on a larger scale; of a severe test in a field of life where perhaps, as nowhere else on earth, principles are subjected to the keenest scrutiny, pass through the severest trial at the hands of the freest and most active judgment of men—in our America! And these principles had no support but their own intrinsic strength.

What is the historic result of this trial of almost a century? Is not this a subject of inquiry of immense interest to us?

To-day almost a million of men and women within the limits of the most enlightened population of this continent, indeed of this earth—this million themselves fair representatives of this enlightenment—stand with victorious confidence, with power and prosperity, united on these principles.

Let us study a special page of our history, in illustration of the working of the laws of action laid down by our fathers.

The first period of favorable opportunity and expansion for this reformation was that of its history among the Baptists. This fact, I am strong and happy in believing, was itself a great providence for our cause; for this people were men of sound faith in the Bible itself, and the fundamental elements of its doctrine; in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, in his divinity, his deity. Note this well! O, reader! here among this people our movement received its first strong impulse of development for life and power.

The notable second occasion for the enlargement of our cause was when it met the "Bible Christian" reformatary movement. It is beyond all doubt that these two opportunities were the great "open doors" for the successful extension of our reformation.

The Campbells and their coadjutors, together with the Baptists who united with them, were what the Christian world would call Trinitarians, men who hold strictly to the doctrine of the divinity, i. e., the diety of Jesus Christ; of three persons in the Godhead, and regard this as a capital element of fundamental Christian truth.

Efforts to reform the church had been started in the South and East of this country early in this century, and in many respects, so far as causes and motives were concerned, much like that of the Campbells. The Southern movement was represented by B. W. Stone, those of the East originated with such men as Abner Jones and Elias Smith, who were Baptists. Strange enough, as a sort of reaction from the strict Calvinism and speculative Trinitarianism prevalent in that day, these two currents of religious reform were both marked by certain anti-Trinitarian tendencies, more or less pronounced. It is well known that the old ironclad Calvinism of the New England of former days, by a natural and inevitable rebound, produced the Unitarianism that has ravaged that land of bold, liberty-aspiring thought. One extreme begets another, and when, as Schiller sings, "the slave breaks his chain," he seldom stops at the limits of right; he becomes an iconoclast.

These reformatory efforts coincided with that of the Campbells in that they rejected creeds, took the Bible alone as their rule of faith and practice, and had also come to accept the immersion of penitent believers as the only New Testament baptism; certainly a remarkable concurrence in these three separate currents of reform—two of them starting out from the bosom of Presbyterianism. One other important characteristic strongly marked the men that led them—they were already unfettered by creeds to learn further; to give up what they might find to be wrong and accept any new light from the Word of God.

The Campbells and their colaborers met these other currents of reform, the one represented by Stone in Kentucky, the other from the East in Eastern Ohio and the adjacent regions. These two independent movements had already become strong forces, especially that led by Stone, which by 1830 was supposed to number about 10,000 adherents. It had extended by that time over Tennessee, Kentucky—where it had the largest following—to certain parts of Indiana, Illinois and Ohio.

The wave from the East had spread widely over New England and the Middle States. In Ohio it had gained many adherents in the eastern and central parts of the state. As a notable fact it may be stated that a number of "Christian" preachers had come from Kentucky into Southeastern Ohio, into Meigs, Guernsey, Belmont and even as far as Carroll, Stark and Columbiana counties, meeting there the Eastern "Christians" and the preachers and churches of the Stillwater and Mahoning Baptist Associations, now in the full tide of New Testament Reformation.

The beginning of my religious life among the Disciples was in this interesting region of Southeastern Ohio. The church at Minerva, where I was baptized, situated on the line of Stark and Carroll counties, was at that time a notable religious center where the three reformatory waves met, mingled and became one; the union was early and perfect. The "Christian" preachers, representing the Eastern reform and that in Kentucky, proclaimed the gospel in full harmony, and A. Campbell and the heroes of the "Reformed Baptist Associations" were constant visitors at Minerva. I heard all these advocates of primitive Christianity preach, and they were one in the closest fraternal fellowship.

(CONCLUSION OF THIS CHAPTER IN NEXT NUMBER.)

According to reports the persecution of Armenians has not ceased, neither have they escaped from the troubles of former massacres. They are still the prey of the "unspeakable Turk" and plundering Kurd, and still in need of the sympathy and assistance of the Christian world.

HALEY'S QUARTERLY ARTICLE.

H. A. DENTON.

J. J. Haley has a very interesting article on the "Status and Prospects of the Higher Criticism" in the current number of the Christian Quarterly. It contains a splendid summary of the main features of the subject under consideration; though his indirect style of quotation makes it difficult to tell when he is giving his own views and when the views of the critics. Yet he is, for all this, quite clear enough.

No doubt many will think he minimizes the bad results of destructive criticism. Such is my opinion. Then I do not think his assertion, that liberal criticism has been mostly constructive, rather than destructive, will stand the test.

As one follows the article, at the end of one paragraph he is ready to place him in the conservative column, but by the time the end of the next is reached, he is ready to write him in the liberal column; and, by the time the article is finished, he is ready to place him astride the fence.

His statement that the liberal and the conservative critics are not so far apart will probably surprise even the critics. That there has been a reaction from the extreme positions of the liberals will be admitted, but any such thing as such divergent lines approaching each other at this time is too optimistic to believe. Indeed, it will not be a meeting. One must give place to the other. The premises of the two views are logically irreconcilable. One must fall.

The assertion that the more Isaiahs the better, if inspired, is spoiled by the fallacy couching in that conditional clause, "if inspired." The inspiration of the many Isaiahs of liberal criticism, and the inspiration of the one Isaiah of conservative criticism, are two different things. The fallacy is in the special meaning given the word "inspiration." A like play is made upon the word "revelation" in such lines as follows: "The parable of the prodigal son is certainly not historical, and yet it contains more pure revelation than ten times the space in any other part of the Bible." And again: "There is as much revelation in a poem like Job as there is in history like Kings and Chronicles." Evidently the conception of revelation here must be as pale as moonshine and as rarefied as the atmosphere of the mountains of the moon.

We are assured the results will be good; we need not fear; the old Book will stand the ordeal; it will come from the fire a better book. It is all very well to be thus assured, but this is throwing dust into the air, and it will not blind those who have been watching this battle with keen eyes. There is no fear for the Book; they cannot hurt it; but we fear what they can do to the faith of its adherents. It is the effect of this theory of the Book upon spirituality that is to be feared. Evangelism languishes under its influence. Is there a preacher among us holding this theory who can hold a successful meeting without going back upon his theory for the time being?

He would not object to the late date view, nor does he see much loss in surrendering the view that Moses wrote the Pentateuch. One would infer that this is not considered vital by our learned writer. The whole tenor of the article seems to say, "What does it matter? Suppose the old view does fall? Let it be so. Nothing will be lost."

Now if the old view of the early dates of the books and the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch be correct, it does matter if it should be abandoned. It would be surrendering the truth. There are some reasons for holding to the old view that have never been satisfactorily set aside. 1. The antiquity of Egyptian civilization stands unshaken. Moses and his brethren went out from Egypt to Canaan. Previous to the exodus Moses had been educated in all the Egyptians knew. What presumption is there against his ability to write the law and early history of his people? 2. Archæological discoveries have brought to light evidence of a civilization both in Canaan and on the Euphrates as early as the migration of Abram. There are good reasons for believing there was a system of education that early in those countries, and also a respectable literature and many libraries. This, instead of making an early date improbable, sustains it. 3. The internal evidence of the books in favor of an early date and Mosaic authorship—the two stand or fall together—has not been answered by any arguments based upon facts. Where are the examples of the alleged plaigerism of the article? Where are the examples to prove it was not considered wrong to place names out of place in historical narrative? A scientific method should be based upon facts. We could not require it to begin with all the facts, but it must begin with at least one. And when it becomes dogmatic enough to affirm and deny, it should have all the facts its affirmations and denials require in order to credibility. Where are the facts that set aside the old view? 4. The statements of the books that the law was revealed at Sinai, written by Moses in a book, and taken into Canaan by the tribes will ever be as incompatible with the modern doctrine of "development" as oil is with water. It is not one statement, but many in both Old and New Testaments that must be removed before the development theory can have the right of way. Further, Jesus and the apostles become involved to the extent of ignorance or insincerity. If Jesus did not know, he is not divine; if he knew, but based all his teaching upon the traditional notions, leaving the people still in darkness, he is not—and philosophically cannot—be the ideal man.

CAN THE BARRIER WHICH INFANT BAPTISM PRESENTS TO CHRISTIAN UNION BE SURMOUNTED?—III.

BY REV. JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

(3) The introduction of a simple ceremony like infant consecration, adopted solely because it is found to be spiritually profitable, would tend to give emphasis to the spiritual side of religion. There is a tendency to rest in form, to substitute the sign for the reality, the symbol for the thing symbolized. This tendency is increased just in proportion to the importance that is placed upon the form itself. In the early church when the baptism of infants was felt to be all-important the rite itself became a very complex affair. It consisted of a threefold immersion; it was accompanied with the anointing with oil; the eating of milk and honey in token that the grace of God was received; the laying on of hands by the bishop; the renunciation of the world and its pomp;

the exorcism of evil spirits; the clothing of the neophyte in a white robe (hence the name Whitsunday or Whitesunday). This robe was an emblem of the innocency which by God's grace was supposed to be given in the sacrament of baptism. Much of this complex ritual was unquestionably borrowed from heathenism. In the Roman Church the baptismal service is scarcely less complex. Consecrated water is used; exorcism takes place; salt is put into the child's mouth to indicate that he shall be protected against the corruptions of sin; he is signed with the cross; his nose and ears are touched with spittle; the devil and his works are renounced by him through his sponsors; he is anointed with oil; he professes the Christian faith by his sponsors, and through them he is asked whether he wishes to be baptized. After his baptism he is anointed with chrism, he receive a white cloth, and a lighted candle is put into his hand to show that he is now a light in the world. (Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, Vol. I., p. 203.)

In contrast with such an elaborate ceremony, which marks a wide departure from the simplicity which is in Christ, place the beautiful and suggestive ceremony of the public blessing of children by the laying on of hands, which has the sanction of the Master's example.

(4) The adoption of this simple ceremony would be in harmony with the principle of progress wnich characterizes the New Testament in the matter of ceremonial observances. Read the Epistle to the Hebrews and see how ceremonies which for ages had been invested with divine sanction were set aside when they had served their day. The Passover was put aside to make place for the Lord's Supper, circumcision was displaced by baptism, the sacrifice of animals was superseded by the sacrifice of Christ. In every change there was gain and not loss. The keyword of the Epistle to the Hebrews is the word "better," "better promises," "a better covenant," "a better hope" and "a better country." Everything is on the ascending scale. Progress characterizes the unfolding of the divine plan. What will answer the purpose best seems to have been the determining question with regard to what was to be abolished, what was to be retained and what was to be adopted. Slavery to the letter of religion was the one thing to be avoided.

Reasoning upon this ground we claim for infant consecration that it is a convenient ceremony. Its right to exist is founded upon the possibilities of helpfulness which it possesses. If the prophecy of Arnaud should prove true, that "in an epoch of deeper faith and greater enthusiasm we will give up infant baptism," one thing is certain: it will never be given up unless something better be found to take its place.

(5) The adoption of infant consecration would help to clear away the confusion which exists regarding the relation of children to the church. Children are not related to the church, but to the kingdom. They are not by baptism or otherwise to be received into the church. They are rather to be recognized as belonging to the kingdom and are to be trained up for admission into the church upon open confession of their faith. They belong to the general community of Christ's people and form a large and interesting part of his spiritual empire. Their standing within the kingdom is not conditioned upon present knowledge or faith, but upon their connection with Christ, or if you will, upon Christ's connection with them, upon the hold Christ has on them and not upon the hold they have on him. Should they die in infancy they would not be put upon probation, but would enter at once into the presence of the King, among whose subjects they have been enrolled.

What is our duty towards those who are inside the kingdom, but outside the church? Plainly, it is our duty to try and bring them into the church. Gather the lambs into the shelter of Christ's fold; bring them into avowed discipleship; get them to assume Christian obligations. Where there is implicit faith, labor to develop it into explicit faith; where a secret hope is indulged, labor to have the good confession confessed before many witnesses. The kingdom is wider and more comprehensive than the church and embraces many whom the church excludes. Professed believers constitute the church; possessors of the divine life constitute the kingdom. The church is a body of believers, an outward communion founded upon open confession of Christ. Those who compose its membership are said to be "called," "sanctified," "holy." They have "repented," "received the Word," "believed in Christ;" they have "died to sin and have been raised to life with Christ." Infants, then, have no place within the membership of the church, but they ought to have a place under the watchcare of the church.

TOUCHING TO BLESS.

GEORGE DARSIE.

Nothing is more noteworthy in our Savior's personal ministry than the frequency with which he used his hands in order to convey his blessings. When a leper said, "If thou wilt thou canst make me clean," Jesus "put forth his hand and touched him." What a human thing to do! For years the poor, scaly wretch had been shunned and fled from. Everybody was afraid of him. And he did not ask or expect Jesus to touch him, but only to exert his power in his behalf. Nor was it at all necessary for the great Healer to touch men in order to cure them. He was miles away from the centurion's servant and the nobleman's son when he "said the word" which made them whole. And just now as easily as not could he have stood aloof from this leper and have cured him. But he chose rather to touch him, because the touch meant love and fellowship and brotherliness, and because Jesus wanted him and wants all to know that he delights in nothing so much as personal contact with humanity, and the closer the better.

He used his own hands to anoint the eyes of the blind man in Jerusalem before telling him to go and wash in the pool of Siloam. And it was only by repeated touches that he made the blind man of Bethsaida to see clearly. The deaf mute of Decapolis heard because Jesus put his fingers in his ears, and spoke because Jesus touched his tongue. Of Peter's wife's mother it is said, "He touched her hand and the fever left her." He came and touched the bier of the widow's son in order to stop and then to break up the funeral proceseion—the first and only instance on record. He touched the ear of Malchus, the high priest's servant, healing him that his foes as well as his friends might know that his blessings were impartially for all.

And the virtue of his touch soon came to be so well known that it was continually sought. Mothers brought their little children that he might "put his hands on them and pray." Jairus, the synagogue ruler, came and said, "My little daughter is even now dead, but come and lay thy hand upon her and she shall live." The woman behind him in the crowd pressed close but to touch the hem of his garment in full faith that she would be healed. The sick everywhere desired and asked his healing touch, and their friends were unceasing in their entreaties that he would lay his hand upon them.

And the touch of Christ has not lost its power. As it once healed the bodies of men, so does it now heal their souls. The leprosy of sin needs still the extended hand of Jesus, and his voice of sweet command, "I will, be thou clean." The spiritual paralytic needs still his uplifting hand and the accompanying words, "Rise, take up thy bed and walk." The dead even need still but the contact of him who is the resurrection and the life to come forth from the spiritual graves into new and vigorous activity. Lord Jesus, lay thy hand upon our souls to-day. that we may feel the life-giving power of thy divine touch!

Like Jesus we, too, must touch men if we would do them good. The essential conditions for the transfer of blessing to others is personal contact. How well Dr. Field puts it: "It is of no use to mount lofty pedestals and draw our skirts about us and then toss fine maxims to the weak and wayward. So long as there is any self-respect in men they will be repelled by assumptions and condescensions of superiority. We must be willing to touch men. It must be face to face, hand to hand, heart to heart, life to life in a real brotherliness." And the beauty of such action is that it annihilates artificial distinctions, eradicates the caste spirit, ignores the invidious social barriers which separate man from man, and puts all upon the level of a common humanity.

When the priest and the Levite passed by the wounded man and refused to touch him, they revealed a spirit the most abhorrent to the religion of Christ. But when the Good Samaritan forgot all else save how to get him out of his trouble, and laid instant hold of him in order to his rescue, he showed the true spirit of that religion. Arn't we too often lacking in this spirit? Don't we too often stand aloof from those who need us, refusing them the personal contact which would minister to their greatest good? And are there not all around us souls isolated, sinful and ready to perish, who require but the touch of Christian friendliness and sympathy to cast off the shackles of their enslavement and to rise into the glorious liberty of the children of God?

And there can be no fear of contamination from even the vilest if our motive is healing and help. Our Savior was never so sinless as when he touched sinful lives to save them. And our moral safety is never so secure as when we stretch out a friendly hand to those who perish. No one is so proof against contagion as the brave physician who meets it face to face and gives it battle. And they are enclosed in an impenetrable mail against all forms of sin and temptation who dare to invade their haunts in order to lay hands of rescue upon their helpless victims.

When religion thus comes to mean hand-helping, touching in order to bless, willingness like Christ to associate with any whom we can benefit, self-forgetfulness for others' good, then will it have become the one irresistible power of the world.

Lord, Save the World.

Lord, save the world! For this we pray.
Burden our hearts from day to day
With ardent zeal and sacred care,
Moving the church to world-wide prayer.

Lord, save the world! May thy strong hand
O'erthrow false gods in every land;
May idol festivals give place
To ministers of heavenly grace.

Lord, save the world! May truth prevail.
O, rend in twain dark error's veil!
May heathen lights full soon expire
Before the pentecostal fire.

Lord, save the world! Cast down the thrones
Of power abused. O, hear the groans
Of slaves and victims everywhere;
Regard their piteous plaints as prayer!

Lord, save the world! Come thou again;
Begin thy great millennial reign.
E'en as the waters fill the sea,
So may thy world-wide empire be.
—J. F. T. Hallowes.

Our Budget.

—A great day—March 5th.

—It is Foreign Mission Day, which comes but once a year in the churches.

—It is the day we hear the cry that comes to us from pagan lands, and register our response.

—It is the day that tests the churches and the individual members of the churches—whether they be in the faith.

—It is the day that furnishes the true index to our faith in the power of the gospel to save the whole world.

—It is, therefore, an exceedingly important day, to which not only we ourselves will look with interest, but all who are interested in the world's evangelization will look to the results of that day and measure us accordingly.

—Remember it is one thing to "take the collection" and quite another thing to have the church make its annual offering for Foreign Missions. The first can be done in a few minutes; the latter requires weeks of preparation in prayer, preaching and in thorough canvass.

—We have given considerable space to this subject this week and heretofore, because we believe that the spiritual life and growth of our churches at home, as well as the prosecution of the work abroad, are involved in their participation in this great enterprise. We cannot expect Christ's presence unless we are doing his work.

—We shall feel it to be a just cause of reproach to us if any of ths churches where the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST circulates fail to respond to the cry of the heathen and to join with sister churches in making this March offering the largest in our history. So far as we know, the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are, without exception, friends of mission work, both at home and abroad.

—The editor of this paper had a delighful visit last Lord's day with the church at Mexico, Mo., and had the pleasure of announcing that Bro. Dutcher will be with them next Lord's day to begin his pastorate. The church is awaiting his coming with hopeful expectation and is anxious to be led forward in all the lines of Christian work. The church gave us a fine hearing both morning and evening despite the bitter cold weather. We predict a bright future for the cause in that place.

—We regret the omission of Dr. Willett's Sunday-school notes this week again, but the severe storms on land and sea during the past week have no doubt delayed the mails containing his article for the week. We still have a large number of excellent articles awaiting time and space for their appearance in our columns.

—We desire to call special attention to the articles under the head of "The March Offering." They are short, but full to the true missionary or Christ-spirit. We have never printed more pointed, Christ-vitalized articles on missionary work than those that appear in this number. They are not only readable, but inspiring articles.

—Alexander Procter, of Independence, Mo., a likeness of whom graces our first page, like many others of our great Missourians, was born in Kentucky. He is a native of Fayette county in that state, where he opened his eyes on the light April 1, 1825. He attended the common schools in that county until he removed with his parents to Missouri in the twelfth year of his age. His youth was spent on a farm, or in assisting to open a farm. He entered Bethany College in 1845, and graduated from that institution July 4, 1848. On his return to Missouri he preached at Lexington and Glasgow, and in 1856 came to St. Louis as pastor of the First Christian Church. He left this city in 1860 in very poor health and located at Independence, where he has lived and preached ever since. During all these years he has held many protracted meetings in various parts of the state and has delivered many sermons and public addresses on important occasions. For the last few years he has been rather pastor emeritus, the chief responsibility being thrown upon the shoulders of younger men. While Bro. Procter has written some notable contributions to our literature, he has been a preacher rather than a writer. Possessed of a philosophic mind and with a poetic temperament, he sees truth intuitively rather than through logical processes, and has always been recognized as one of the ablest thinkers in the modern pulpit. His mind is still active, in spite of feeble health, and on occasion he yet preaches great sermons to the delight of his brethren, especially in their state and national conventions. Among the great men who have contributed their thought and their lives to the advancement of the cause of religious Reformation during the present century the name of Alexander Procter deserves to stand very high. May he linger with us yet many years to bless us by the strength of his thought and by the purity of his life!

—Better times are at hand. Every line of business is taking on new life. The dark clouds that filled the financial skies durin the past few years have passed away. This increases our obligation to raise larger offerings for world-wide missions.

—Make the whole church feel that if missions are not made of first importance, God's gracious design cannot be carried out. Use or lose. Use all your opportunities and powers, or lose every privilege and blessing, is the Lord's message to the church.

—No preacher can do his highest work at home until he is consecrated to the evangelization of the whole world. And no Christian can do his best until he has in spirit obeyed the commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

—Some Christians give to world-wide missions as if the divine enterprise were a tramp at the back door of our churches, and only needed a few nickels or some soup.

—A selfish motive always defeats itself and writes its own death-warrant. No church can grow and prosper which has no thought outside of its own doors.

—When the great philanthropist, George Mueller, of England, died, it was said that he left an estate of $800, but it was also stated that he had received and paid out for orphrnages and mission work, over $7,000,000.

—A striking presentation of what may be called "An Object-lesson in Practical Politics" may be found in the February Magazine Number of the Outlook. On one page are printed photographs of the beautiful old Pennsylvania Capitol, burned down about two years ago, and of the wretched new Capitol upon which half a million dollars or more has been expended. Of the new Capitol Governor Hastings says: "It is hardly fit for human habitation, much less for the human abode of the representatives of a great Commonwealth. There are scores of farmers' barns in Pennsylvania more attractive than this building."

—There are two articles in our Family Circle this week that will be read with particular interest. One is "The Honest Rumseller;" the other, "Fishing in Ingersoll Lake." The moral of each will need no comment from us.

—Hon. Samuel Dickie, of Michigan, and John G. Woolley, the noted temperance orator, of Chicago, have purchased the Lever, which they intend to make the leading temperance and prohibition journal in the world. The paper will be published at Chicago and will have unlimited capital at its command. Mr. Dickie will resign the chairmanship of the national prohibition committee, which he has held for twelve years. This move is precipitated by the action of the New York Voice, the national organ, which has recently been turned into a literary weekly. Rev. Oliver W. Stewart, of Chicago, is likely to succeed Mr. Dickie as leader of the prohibition forces.

—The receipts from all sources for the American Christian Missionary Society for the first eleven days in February were $427.36, being a gain of $97.67 over that of the same period of time last year.

—W. P. Bentley, our missionary at Shanghai, China, has added to his agencies in that city a paper called the Eastern Star. It is to be the organ of the Christian Institute of that city, and in itself is an evidence of the prosperity of the work entrusted to Bro. Bentley. We trust that this new star which has appeared in the East is a fixed star and that its brightness shall increase until it shall shine as the sun upon the great Empire of China. A cut of the Institute building, which was dedicated Nov. 6, 1898, appears upon the first page of this new paper.

—The Merchants' Association of New York endorses the President's recommendation pertaining to an international law for the protection of private property at sea in time of war and urges the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States to adopt the resolution authorizing the President and Secretary of State to carry out the said recommendation. This is another step away from barbarism and toward a higher civilization, and to be commended until wars shall be no more.

—According to a sworn statement the daily average sales of the Chicago Record for the year 1898 was 220,096 copies, an average daily gain of 23,190 over that of the year 1897. The Record is one of the stanchest independent journals of the day. It is pitched on a high moral plane and well deserves the success which is coming to it as the reward of righteousness and enterprise.

—It is announced that the American Steel and Wire Co. will increase the wages of its employees, the increase to be from five to ten per cent and to take effect March 1st. The $1.50 per day men are to get the ten per cent. increase. We are glad to hear this advance of wages, and not only commend the action of this company therefor, but hope that its example will be at once followed by all large companies throughout the land.

—We continue to receive reports to continue the Sunday-school and Endeavor departments in our columns, which we have not had the room to mention, but here is a reason submitted especially worthy of notice. A brother in Idaho writes: "It is fifty miles to Boise City, the nearest Christian Church, and fifty miles across a sagebrush desert is not an easy trip at any time of the year. So you see that we can easily appreciate these valuable lessons on the Holy Book."

—The two foreign letters in our correspondence department this week will be read with more than ordinary interest because of the things written about.

—As it is not deemed best by the Acting Board, that it appoint a committee to have charge of the raising of funds, for support of national superintendent we suggest that a committee be appointed at an informal meeting of Christian Endeavor during the Congress of Disciples, to beheld in this city Tuesday, April 18, 1899. This, perhaps, would be the very best way to meet the emergency until our "Rally" in Detroit next July at the International Christian Endeavor Convention. Has any one a better suggestion? Meantime, the work of informing the societies of the situation can be carried on.

—By special invitation from Thos. M. Finney, manager of the Provident Association restaurant, 11th and Locust Sts., this city, our preachers went thither from their meeting in this office at noon last Monday on a tour of inspection. The peculiar thing about this restaurant is the extremely low cost at which wholesome food is served to men and women. Good coffee is served at one cent per large cup, soup one cent per bowl, and savory combination dishes at two cents each. On this plan a hungry man can get a full meal at from three to five cents. The average cost, we were told, is about three and a half cents per meal. Last year 115,000 meals were thus served at this restaurant at a cost of only $150 to the Association. This is charity of course; but it is charity on a business basis. After partaking of a full dinner at this restaurant we were shown through the kitchen and storage rooms and found every evidence of cleanliness and strictly business methods, and on retiring could but wish that the good people of St. Louis would enable the St. Louis Provident Association to equip and run two or three other such restaurants in this city for the benefit of the almost dependent poor.

—We have just received from the publishers a copy of a religious reverie entitled "Holy Angels" and suitable for piano or organ, composed by George D. Wilson. The publishers of this music are the Union Mutual Music and Novelty Co., No. 20 E. 14th St., New York.

—Dr. B. B. Tyler, pastor of the church at Colorado Springs, Col, is delivering a series of half-hour lectures to his church on the fathers of the restoration movement. These talks are given at the midweek meeting and will evidently prove attractive and profitable. These lectures began with Barton W. Stone, and are to be continued for six weeks, taking a different "Father" for each week. The aim of these lectures is to better acquaint the church with the origin, aim and progress of the Disciples of Christ.

—The Christian Citizenship League of Illinois has succeeded in getting two important reform bills introduced in its legislature and is calling upon the good people of the state to rally to their support. One is an anti-cigarette bill, the other is to prohibit gambling and the exhibition of obscene pictures at state, county and street fairs. The first bill was introduced by Senator Hull and referred to the license and miscellaneous committee of which Senator May is chairman. This bill is known as Senate Bill, No. 59. The other was introduced by Representative Eignus, referred to the miscellaneous committee and is known as the House Bill, No. 84. The League requests each of our readers in Illinois to write a personal letter to each of these chairmen and also to petition them urging each committee to report favorably upon each of the bills named. These are important bills and we shall hope to hear of their enactment into law, and we hope that the day is not distant when these and other protective measures shall be adopted by every state in the union. The chairman of this League, Mr. James H. Shaw, says: "One of the state senators remarked in my hearing at a stats Endeavor convention that he was constantly importuned by a large number of liquor men for legislation in their interest while the Christian men to his surprise asked for nothing." Brethren, these things ought not to be so. Our Book says, "Ask and ye shall receive."

—The will of God can never be done on this earth as it is in heaven so long as idolatrous systems of religion control the larger continents and races of men. These systems must be removed and God expects those of his people who have the light to do the work, and hence the supreme importance of united effort in sending out and sustaining Christian missionaries in their lands. For this reason there ought to be an offering from every church and from every member of each church on the first Sunday in March.

—Preachers must be at work and not delay, and work with great energy and tact if they will make the most of the March offering for Foreign Missions. First, the number of contributors should be increased in each church; "a gift from every member" should be the motto. Second, those who give should give intelligently. Great facts, called "the fingers of God," should be given through the free circulation of the Missionary Voice and by the preacher from the pulpit. Every sermon should ring out the pleading peal for more prayer and sympathy for world-wide missions. Missionary incidents are very helpful and telling in sermons. Many of them sound like the recorded conversions in the Acts of the Apostles. Then, in the next place, every facility, in the way of contribution envelopes or blank slips for pledges, payable within two weeks or a month, and cheap, sharpened lead pencils should be provided for the offering. Plenty of time should be taken in gathering up the offerings. Finally, urge each to give liberally and largely.

—Our Church Extension Fund is now near the $100,000 mark. Another $100,000 ought to be added to it this year.

—A copy of the Brenham Evening Press, of Brenham, Texas, gives an account of the dedication of a new church at that place on Jan. 15th, by Evangelist R. B. Saunders and Elder George Van Pelt, who delivered the address on the occasion. The paper congratulates the people of Brenham, and the Christian Church in particular, on the edifice, giving special credit to A. D. Milroy and Thos. B. Botts. The whole service was an impressive one as reported in the paper, and the occasion one of general rejoicing in the community.

—A good deal of quiet interest is being manifested in different sections of the country concerning the Congress of the Disciples of Christ which is to convene in St. Louis in the latter part of April. The program is admitted to be a most enticing one and as it will be the initial meeting of the kind among us, great interest attaches to it. Preachers and others interested in the living questions of the time should make their arrangements to attend.

—Chaplain C. B. Carlisle, of Holguin, Cuba, whose communication we printed last week, writes that Dr. Hammond, whom we recently advertised as a fraud, is in jail in Holguin. The military authorities there have him in hand. Bro. Carlisle adds: "I have turned over your article about him to Col. D. Hood, our commander, who has cabled to Havana for instructions. His trunk shows a quantity of schemes to swindle people. He poses as a bishop of the Edenic Church." "Edenic" is good, but Satanic would no doubt be truer to the facts.

—The people at Yate Center, Kan., are declaring for a better government. They have had all slot machines eliminated and are now pushing the enforcement of their prohibitory laws. And of those foremost in this movement for a higher standard of citizenship and city government is C. W. Yard, pastor of the Church of Christ in that place. We are glad to hear of the Christian people turning their attention to the condition of their towns and cities. That iniquities have so abounded in our city governments is due to the indifference of citizens who believe in better things. Probably there is not a city, but few at least, in the United States that could not be cleaned up morally by the better element if they would only act. In this field one strong man can put a thousand corrupt, polluted boodlers and gamblers to flight. They are cowards, and when the people show moral courage enough to fight them they will see it.

A MISSIONARY'S WIFE

Interesting Letter from India—A Long Summer Season.

The following letter is from the wife of an American Baptist missionary at Nowgong, Assam, India: "After living here for several years I found the climate was weakening me. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla every summer. This I found so beneficial that I now take one dose every morning for nine months in the year, that is, through the hot weather. My general health is excellent and my blood is in good condition. My weight does not vary more than one pound throughout the year. I find Hood's Sarsaparilla indispensable in the summer and recommend it for use in a debilitating climate." MRS. P. H. MOORE.

The above letter is similar to thousands received and constantly coming in.

Hood's Pills cure nausea, indigestion, biliousness. Price 25c.

—We are informed that W. H. Bagby, of Salt Lake, City, Utah, used a dissolving view lantern in his recent meeting there with good results. Our own experience with a lantern is that they can be made valuable aids to the work of a minister.

—We report a number of fine meetings in our evangelistic column this week. We are glad to hear the expressed desire of all our evangelists and pastors to assist in securing at least 100,000 conversions to Christ this year. Also to participate in the offering for Foregn Missions on the first Sunday in March.

—The Bethany Banner is the name of a new monthly, four-page, that has appeared in the interest of Bethany College, Henry S. Green, editor. One of the purposes of this journal will be to assist in the organization of an "Endowment Army" to aid in the endowment of Bethany College. The Banner talks like one who means business and we trust that its most sanguine expectations may be realized.

—I. J. Spencer, pastor Central Christian Church, Lexington, Ky., is unrelenting in his warfare against the powers of evil. Recently he preached from his pulpit on "Jesus in Politics." It was a plea for righteousness in politics. His strictures on political tricksters were to the point. Let us have more such preaching. "Them that sin rebuke before all" should not be limited to a few giddy, dancing girls. It means any old sinner, no matter where you find him—even if in the front pew of the church. No man can preach righteousness and keep out of politics. Political tricksters rather than preachers are forcing politics into the church and into the pulpit.

—The account in a recent number of the Independent of the Ruskin Co-operative Colony, in Western Tennessee, by Mr. Casson, its founder, almost persuades one that some of the late Mr. Bellamy's dreams will yet become history. At present the Ruskin Colony is in a prosperous state and a veritable industrial wave. The men work eight hours per day and the women five. All dine at a common table. All the various industries, literary pursuits, moral and physical culture schools are being introduced save religion; churches are excluded. This is its weakness and ultimate failure unless remedied. Nothing that excludes God can prosper, but perhaps Ruskin will yet amend this feature of its constitution. Of this and other social reform movements the writer of the article referred to closes with these prophetic words:

Whether Ruskin is destined to live through the twentieth century or not, its short career of four years has been full of interest to the student of sociology and human nature. Its brave little band of pioneers is grappling with the new problem of industrial democracy which every civilized nation will have to face before many years. It is not wise to stand on the beaten road and sneer at the blunders of the world's pathfinders. Many a sea captain has had to run his vessel on the rocks before they could all be marked dow . on the charts. Many an early settler was drowned in our American rivers before the shallow fords were discovered; and when Ruskin becomes only the memory of a courageous endeavor its experience will be the heritage of the race.

—We spent an hour or two over a recently published novel entitled "Mary Ardmore," by J. H. Stark. The general plan of the story, outside of the straw men who are put up to be demolished is good, and its personnel may help one to spend a pleasant hour, barring the pity he is obliged to feel for the simpletons who suffer the edge of Mary's keen wit and logic.—Baptist News.

The undercurrent of prejudice in the above paragraph only renders the few commendatory words all the more valuable. Of course such an editor would not praise too highly a book emanating from any other than a Baptist source.

—A young man connected with the staff of a great metropolitan daily takes time to write:

I feel that I would be ungrateful not to tell you of the pleasure and uplift I received from reading your Easy Chair column of Feb. 9th. The last paragraph I have cut and pasted on my desk before me, where others may see it as well as myself. I know that all you say in the column is true and I hope that the realization may prove a permanent influence.

We hoped to say a word for the encouragement of those younger in the paragraphs referred to, and we are glad they have accomplished this purpose in at least one instance.

—Dr. Edward A. Kimball, chief of the Christian Science Bureau of Lectureship, Boston, in a recent lecture in this city in defending Christian Science against what he termed "misconceptions," said:

In view of the utter misconceptions which the public entertains concerning it, I would be glad if we had time to take up these baseless misconceptions and consider them categorically, but I will say in passing that we believe and worship God; that we study and believe in the Bible, which is accepted as guide to eternal life; that we believe in the divinity of Christ; that we believe in prayer without ceasing, and that we hold to all the fundamental essentials of true Christianity.

Again, at another point in his lecture, in speaking of Christian Science per se, he said:

The text-book of Christian Science, by Mrs. Eddy, "Science and Health, With Key to the Scriptures," is absolutely unique. No other writers ever give anything to the world upon which "Science and Health" could have been predicted. If there were no other evidence, the mere history of literature would establish the fact that Mrs. Eddy was the sole founder of Christian Science.

How can these things be? To an ordinary reader Christian Science, as thus differentiated from Christianity through Mrs. Eddy certainly puts Christianity in the background; but perhaps we fail to discern the metaphysical consistency between these two physically inconsistent propositions. The reconciliation of the irreconcilable would certainly be an "absolutely unique" work.

—The Religious Review of Reviews recently contained the following examples of liberal giving for missionary purposes. Such giving as this on the part of all the professed Disciples of Christ would soon take the world for Christ. Whether we can give as liberally as the cases cited or not the knowledge of them ought to shame the paltry offerings of some church members and stimulate all to greater liberality:

Dr. A. B. Simpson, president of the Missionary Alliance, has a night class of working girls who gave $1,500 in one year to missions. A gentleman, out of a $790 salary gave $400. A young man in Kansas said: "I will have to deny myself the privilege of going to Africa, as I will have to stay and support my friend who is going." A servant girl gave $500 of the $700 which she had saved in ten years. She did it, she said, because she loved Christ so much. Others gave what they had laid by for personal expenses in the scriptural hope that through his speedy coming they would not need a funeral. One man left off coffee for his lunch during the winter, thereby saving ten dollars for missions. A lady did without meat for a time, thus saving twenty-five dollars for this great work. One wealthy brother put 150 missionaries in the field.

PERSONAL MENTION.

T. R. Hodkinson has been called to Wintersett, Ia., as pastor.

The church at Lincoln, Ill., has invited Albert Nichols to remain another year.

J. M. Hoffmann, of Spencer, Ia., dedicated the new house at Stewart. Bro. H. is pastor-elect at Boone.

E. B. Cross removes to Des Moines to become evangelist for the central district of Iowa.

Prof. O. T. Morgan, of Drake University, is in Indianapolis, Ind., delivering a course of lectures at Butler College.

Pastor I. N. McCash, of Des Moines, Ia., will hold a meeting in March at Ann Arbor, Mich.

Clark Brown, of Drake University, has taken Highland Park, Des Moines, for his field of work.

Jno. P. Jesse is assisting W. A. Morrison, pastor of the church at Chariton, Iowa, in a protracted meeting at Chariton.

Jas. R. Parker is preaching for the church at Lovington, Ill. He began Feb. 5th. He was at Charleston last year.

E. J. Stanley has resigned his work at Windsor and the church is in need of another minister.

W. F. McCormick will hold a meeting in Atlantic, Ia., this month. His congregation at Robertson donates the meeting to the Iowa board.

Jas. S. Helm would be glad to communicate with those in need of the services of a singing evangelist for temporary or permanent work. Address him at Terral, I. T.

E. J. Wright, formerly of Hannibal, Mo., is now pastor of the church at Valley Junction, Iowa. Began there Jan. 1, '99 and reports the church in a prosperous state.

J. M. Rudy, pastor of the church at Cedar Rapids, Ia., began a protracted meeting there on last Sunday. Preparations have been made for an effective campaign.

J. A. Armstrong, of Wellsville, O., who recently assisted H. C. Parsons in a meeting at Hyndman, Pa., is highly recommended as an efficient evangelist.

The obituary of little Annie Mize in our columns recently, should have read second child of her widowed mother instead of the first. Annie died Nov. 12, '98, at Enid, Okla.

J. E. Deihl has been continued the preacher at Griggsville and Loami, Ill., another year; one-half time at each place. He also officiated at the marriage of his daughter, Grace, to Mr. Geo. E. Yates at his house Jan. 24, 1899.

H. V. Scholes, pastor of the church at Abilene, Kan., recently preached a temperance sermon in the Methodist church of that city that was pronounced "the most scholarly and powerful temperance address ever delivered in that city."

F. O. Fannon, of this city, closed his meeting at Hannibal, Feb. the 9th. Besides having 22 confessions of faith there was an awakening of the church in spiritual life. Levi Marshall, the pastor, says: "We are very grateful for Bro. Fannon's visit."

J. H. Van Dever, who has been holding meetings in Kansas and baptizing in creeks, says: "If the wealthy members of the brotherhood would evangelize awhile in new sections of country they would realize the need of churches with baptisteries and would give more liberally to the Church Extension Fund.

Cancer Cure Sent Free.

B. B. B.—BOTANIC BLOOD BALM, A POWERFUL BLOOD REMEDY, CURES CANCER OF EVERY KIND BY DRIVING THE BAD BLOOD OUT OF THE SYSTEM—NO KNIFE REQUIRED, AN EASY, PAINLESS AND INEXPENSIVE CURE—B. B. B. ALSO CURES TUMORS, PAINFUL SWELLINGS, RUNNING, EATING, BLEEDING SORES, SCROFULOUS ULCERS, PERSISTENT PIMPLES, WHICH LEAD TO CANCER.

SAMPLE BOTTLE OF B. B. B. MAILED FREE TO ANY SUFFERER WHO WRITES FOR IT.

B. B. B.—Botanic Blood Balm is an old, well-tried remedy and is not an experiment, but it has demonstrated during the last thirty years its power to heal cancer, persistent sores, ulcers, terrible blood and skin diseases, even after doctors and other remedies had utterly failed and the patient had given up in despair. Dear sufferer, if you have tried doctors and patent medicines and still have any form of cancer, you may be cured, to stay cured, if you will only persistently and faithfully use B. B. B.—Botanic Blood Balm, and to demonstrate its wonderful healing power we will send you a sample bottle free of charge. We have many grateful testimonials from people who have been cured of cancer by taking B. B. B.

Bad, poisoned, diseased blood in the system is the first cause of cancer, and this bad blood asserts itself in cancers, ulcers, old, running, bleeding sores, scrofulous, persistent eating ulcers that have a tendency to get worse, and they will surely end in a painful death unless the sores are healed. The only natural method of healing is to get the bad, diseased, poisoned blood out of the system, and that is what B. B. B. does and why it cures. No other remedy can do this.

Any form of cancer, as cancer of the nose, mouth, face, ear, neck, internal or external; old, bleeding sores, eating, scrofulous ulcers, persistent pimples on the face; carbuncles, distressing eruptions of the skin; painful swellings, bone pains and tumors are all cured by B. B. B. Cancer usually begins in a small pimple and gradually develops into a cancer—little sores develop until the surface becomes raw and ulcerates. But the deadly, destructive poison in the blood can be driven from the system and prevented from returning, and a cure thus made by the use of B. B. B. No knife can cut this diseased blood out, therefore a surgical operation is absolutely useless, besides being painful and dangerous. On the contrary, B. B. B. drives the bad blood out and thus cures in a painless, easy and inexpensive manner.

Begin taking B. B. B. on the appearance of the first symptoms, or as soon as you have the slightest suspicion of cancer, for the sooner you begin the sooner you will be cured. B. B. B. does not contain mineral or vegetable poison. Leaves no bad after-effects, but, on the contrary, acts as a fine tonic, building up the broken down constitution.

All druggists sell B. B. B. in large bottles at $1 per bottle; but sample bottles can only be obtained of Blood Balm Co. Describe your symptoms and Free medical advice will be given. All correspondence is sacredly confidential.

Address plainly Blood Balm Co., 137 Mitchell Street, Atlanta, Georgia, and sample bottle of B. B. B. will be sent you by return mail. Enclose 2 stamps to pay postage.

J. G. M. Luttenburger, pastor of the Christian Church at Dorchester, Ill., called at this office on last Saturday. Bro. Luttenberger was also present at our preachers' meeting in this office two weeks ago and greatly interested our preachers with some of his experiences with anti-folks. The church at Dorchester is now in a more prosperous state.

W. J. Hudspeth, 1122 State St., Little Rock, Ark., was elected chaplain of Arkansas state penitentiary on the 9th of January, 1899, and would be glad to receive all the good literature possible for distribution among the convicts. He also visits seven camps besides the state prison, preaching as often as possible. He says that the convicts are good listeners and love good literature, and promises to use all that is sent to him judiciously.

Bro. H. C. Morro, accompanied by his wife, paid a short visit to this office on Thursday, Feb. 9. They sail on the 22nd of this month for Australia, Bro. Morro having accepted a call to preach for the church at Melbourne. He is a Missouri boy, a graduate of Kentucky University, and was pastor of the church at Tolesboro, Ky., when the present call was received. J. J. Haley and J. W. McGarvey united in endorsing him for the Melbourne pastorate, and what they agree on must be a first-rate article!

THE CHURCH CHAOS.

In the great Church of England, with its vast revenues, its immense prestige, its powerful patronage by the state, its imposing historic antecedents and its undoubted popularity still increasing amongst the people, a malignant destiny seems to be at work which is bewildering the bishops, the government and the whole nation. This week it has been impossible to take up any of the daily newspapers without finding them bristling with exciting reports of troubles all over the country in churches. The excitement has been greatly stimulated by the behavior of Sir William Harcourt, of the bishops, and of certain of the extreme Ritualists among the clergy. All England was a few weeks ago astonished by the political thunder-clap of Sir William's resignation of the leadership of the Liberal party. Since then he has week by week been devoting himself to the series of onslaughts on the Ritualists which he commenced in the columns of the Times, to the consternation of the High Churchmen. For the most part these wonderfully pungent letters deal with the confessional, which is being advocated from the pulpit by about three thousand out of the 26,000 of the clergy, and is being resorted to by increasing numbers of the congregations in the Ritualist churches. Things are now opproaching a climax. The Protestant party is furious, and of course, this is the party which commands an immense majority. But hitherto the High Churchmen have been carrying all before them, through their astonishing audacity and the mingled supineness and sympathy, in their secret hearts, of nearly all of the bishops. Our English bishops are a very peculiar lot. When a clergyman is made a bishop in foreign parts, to work in the distant colonies or in heathen lands, he generally stays only a few years, and then comes home to be regarded by his brother churchmen as one more of the numerous "Returned Empties." But the bishops who gain position as dignitaries in their own country are for the most part just as empty of any distinguishing qualities of heroism or leadership, especially at a time of crisis like the present distress. At Liverpool one of the bishops, who is a real exception, the venerable and Puritan Dr. Ryle, has been joining with a parish clergyman to eject two curates, who have been constantly and emphatically preaching the duty of people to confess to the priests. Now the good Vicar of St. Agnes, feeling that these two helpers carried this sort of semi-popery much too far, expostulated with them, but in vain. Therefore the Bishop of Liverpool interposed, exercising his episcopal authority to dismiss them. There was a chorus of approval all over the land; but this shout of Protestant exultation was very premature, for in a few days it was announced that another Liverpool Vicar had the effrontry not only to write a letter of profound sympathy to the two "martyred curates," but actually to offer them each a position as clerical helpers in his own parish. Here, then, we have a nice sample of the spirit which has arisen in the Church of England. It is not by any means a solitary one. In London, at the notorious Church of St. Alban's, Holborn, the Rev. Father Stanton and his clerical staff have for years carried out the mass and all the accessories thereof in the most approved style of the modern priests of the popish Baal. It is impossible to realize, on attending a service at this church in the heart of London, that it is a sanctuary of the Established Protestant Church of England. The air is intoxicating with the fragrance of the incense. The brilliant millinery in which the priests are costumed is fearfully and wonderfully fashioned, and during the services the changes of these habiliments, tinted in all the hues of the rainbow and of the peacock's tail combined, change with kaleidoscopic vivacity of a variety entertainment at a small music hall. Now, under the pressure of popular indignation at these antics of the clergy, by which crowds of thoughtless people are bewitched, the Bishop of London has been issuing manifestoes to the clergy some of these Romish mimicries in his See. What has Father Stanton done? He has on his part issued an address to his congregation, in an obedient spirit, telling the people that the clergy must of course bow, however reluctantly, to the authority of the head of the diocese; and then he goes on at every service just as before, doing the very things which are objected to and forbidden! This is how Ritualism is advancing. It pretends to retreat like a rattlesnake seeing its hole, but presently the creature is gliding around again just as before. Parliament is being loudly called on to interfere, as this is a state church, and when next month it meets again at Westminster, there are likely to be some stirring episodes, as Sir William Harcourt is certain to attack the government and the bishops in accents which will resound through the land.

THE QUEEN'S RELIGION.

The Queen of England is one of the most interesting personalities in the world. She deserves the title only gained by one monarch of her sex in the history of the world. Indeed, Catherine the Great, Tsaritsa of Russia, did not nearly so well merit the epithet of "Great," as our Queen deserves to be styled "Victoria the Great." History will probably thus cancnize Her Majesty. She is in reality the head of a magnificant democracy. She is in such excellent health and vigor, both physical and mental, that there is no reason why she should not live to see the celebration of the 70th year of her reign, as one monarch in history did, and only one, Louis the 14th, of France. Queen Victoria is evidently watching the world with a keener interest than ever. She is no longer the recluse which she was for about twenty years after the death of Prince Albert. She is about to enjoy another of her annual visits to the South of France, on that enchanting Riviera between the feet of the Alps and the Mediterranean. It is said that the Queen is with the deepest interest following the course of religious events, and that the Ritualist controversy is causing her much concern. One thing always proves the concern which she feels in the spiritual life of the nation, and that is the active interposition which she exercises in the administration of crown and public patronage. No new bishop is ever appointed by mere wire-pullers without her special sanction, as the supreme right of choice rests with her. The Queen also contributes very liberally from her private purse to all or nearly all the charities which are maintained on behalf of the poorer clergy, their wives and families. But it is very curious to observe, what has never been explained, that she has never been known to give a farthing to any foreign missionary society.

VICTORIA'S TWO FAITHS.

The Queen of England is in a very peculiar position religiously. She is the only person on earth who has two religions, and is compelled to profess and to practice two religions which are strangely antagonistic to each other. Directly she passes the River Tweed and enters Scotland, she is a Presbyterian, while as long as she remains on the English side of the border, she is compelled to be an Episcopalian. It is well known that she is really a Presbyterian at heart, and that all her favorite preachers are in the Scotch Presbyterian Church. Such men as Dr. Tulloch and Dr. Norman McLeod stood much higher in her regard as preachers while they lived than any of the English Episcopal clergy. In her Highland home, amongst the lovely mountains round Balmoral, the Queen largely helped to build the Presbyterian Parish Church at Crathie, and this sanctuary she delights often to attend. Now, this gives constant offence to the High Churchmen, notwithstanding that they well know the Queen has no right in Scotland to go to any but a Presbyterian Church. The High Church papers, such as the Scotish Guardian, lament this as being "deadly schism," and "unconstitutional" on the part of Her Majesty, with many other like pretty epithets. The bigotry of the High Anglicans, however, has no effect on the Queen, who is a strong-minded woman. She never forgets that she has "constitutional" duties to the Church of Scotland, and at her daily services in her private chapel at Balmoral, the officiating minister is very often Dr. Cameron Lees, Dean of the Thistle, an eminent and popular Presbyterian. Even the experience of the Queen powerfully illustrates the bewildering confusion of religious conditions of our national life in Great Britain.

EVANGELIST ROMIG.

As the weeks go on, we shall have much to tell of the great success of our Bro. Romig, who after a splendid protracted meeting at Chester, and then at Saltney, is now in full swing at Liverpool, where I had the joy a few days ago of taking a little part in an evening's meeting with him, in company with Brothers Todd, Spring, Collins, Brearley, Rapkin, J. Coop and others, after a board meeting held for the interests of the work. Bro. Romig delighted us all. He is simple, lucid, powerful and alluring, and if we could only keep him here for a year, a great extension of our work would result. Many additoins are being gained. Romig does not preach for ten days in a town and then run away, but stays for five or six weeks if permitted to do so, and thus he is able to gather up the fruits of his labors and to consolidate the results. We want him to set a wave of revival rolling up in all our churches, and then to stir up new places. Romig is the man we wanted and we have got him. Hallelujah! W. DURBAN.

Danger In Soda.

Serious Results Sometimes Follow Its Exeessive Use.

Common soda is all right in its place and indispensable in the kitchen and for cooking and washing purposes, but it was never intended for a medicine, and people who use it as such will some day regret it.

We refer to the common use of soda to relieve heartburn or sour stomach, a habit which thousands of people practice almost daily, and one which is fraught with danger; moreover the soda only gives temporary relief and in the end the stomach trouble gets worse and worse.

The soda acts as a mechanical irritant to the walls of the stomach and bowels and cases are on record where it accumulated in the intestines, causing death by inflammation or peritonitis.

Dr. Harlandson recommends as the safest and surest cure for sour stomach (acid dyspepsia) an excellent preparation sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. These tablets are large 20 grain lozenges, very pleasant to taste and contain the natural acids, peptones and digestive elements essential to good digestion, and when taken after meals they digest the food perfectly and promptly before it has time to ferment, sour and poison the blood and nervous system.

Dr. Wuerth states that he invariably uses Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in all cases of stomach derangements, and finds them a certain cure, not only for sour stomach, but by promptly digesting the food, they create a healthy appetite, increase flesh and strengthen the action of the heart and liver. They are not a cathartic, but intended only for stomach diseases and weakness and will be found reliable in any stomach trouble, except cancer of the stomach. All druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents per package.

The American Church in Berlin.

To one who arrives in a foreign city with no acquaintances within reach and only a small knowledge of the language, the consciousness that there is a group of men and women who meet at least weekly for worship in the mother tongue is the source of no little satisfaction. There may be occasionally a person so constituted that he has no desire to meet those of kindred thought and speech, but he is an exception; and during the first few weeks of residence in any European city the comfort that comes from association with other Americans is no small assistance. This need is admirably supplied for Americans who visit Berlin for longer or shorter periods of residence by the American Church. The impressions of the first visit there will not soon be lost. Many days had been passed in travel and sight-seeing since landing in Europe, with scarcely an opportunity to hear a familiar word except from members of the little company of travelers. The process of getting settled in Berlin brought many trying experiences and perplexities in the struggle with foreign speech and customs. A bit of information received on Saturday regarding the American Church served only to indicate the general direction in which the service might be found and an approximate guess at the hour of its occurrence. After a somewhat protracted search on Sunday morning the place was discovered a few moments after the service was opened, and as we climbed the stairs leading to the second floor of the building where the congregation assembles, the strains of the familiar hymn—

> "Safely through another week
> God has brought us on our way," brought a flood of memories of the homeland and the numberless occasions on which the same hymn had been sung amid far other surroundings. The congregation was sufficient to fill the fairly large auditorium, and the services were adjusted to the feelings of many present who had just come to Germany and felt an oppressive sense of strangeness in a foreign land. The sermon, the hymns, the prayer and all the exercises of the hour went to the hearts of those who worshiped there for the first time; but especially the hearty welcome given by the pastor, Dr. Dickie and his wife, and by their earnest and faithful coworker, Mrs. Willard, a sister-in-law of the great W. C. T. U. president, completed the impression of satisfaction at the discovery of a home for worship and helpfulness.

This is indeed the mission of the American Church in Berlin. Like the American Church in Paris, though younger in years and less fully equipped, it is doing a splendid service for American residents in the city and especially for the large body of students who gather here to attend the university or to study music, language and art. The organization has a history of some forty years. It was started in the days when Governor Wright, of Indiana, was the American Ambassador, and under his leadership it began at once to render valuable service to his countrymen. For many years the church had no regular pastor, but depended upon the gratuitous services of American ministers resident for a time in the city. Among the men who have thus served this church for longer or shorter periods and for the most part without any remuneration, have been President Tappan, of the University of Michigan; Rev. Joseph B. Thompson, of the Broadway Congregational Tabernacle, of New York; Rev. Henry Van Dyke, the well-known New York preacher and writer; Phillips Brooks and Bishop Fitzgerald, the Methodist director of European missionary work for so many years. The first pastor of the church was Rev. J. W. H. Stuckenberg, who during a pastorate extending from 1880 to 1894 became well known to Americans through his extensive and scholarly contributions to religious and philosophical journals. Readers of the Homiletic Review will remember his interesting articles on religious thought and conditions in Germany during those years. He left Berlin at the close of his pastorate to accept a professorship in Harvard, which position he now holds. He was succeeded by Dr. J. F. Dickie, formerly superintendent of the Presbyterian Home Missionary work in the state of Michigan, with headquarters at Detroit, who has continued the work of the church along very practical lines and has devoted himself particularly to the enterprise of a church building, so much needed by the organization.

It will be seen from the personnel of the pastorate that the church is entirely interdenominational in character. Its constitution is of the simplest sort, acceptance of the Scriptures and the Apostles' Creed being the only conditions of membership. To its fellowship all Americans in Berlin are invited, and the signing of its constitution makes one a member for the period of his residence on the city, without in the least interfering with his home relationship. Americans of all denominations are happily united in the congregation, and through a history of forty years no doctrinal differences have ever arisen. It is not difficult to persuade the members of this church that Christian unity is possible and desirable. It ought to be added that the membership includes probably not a few who are not of our nation, but who for various reasons prefer to attend its services. The American colony in Berlin includes probably not less than five thousand persons, many of whom are permanent residents, brought here by busines or other interests. Of course, the largest single portion of the colony consists of students. Then, too, there is a constant stream of travel through this center of German art, literature and politics. There is scarcely a week that does not find some Americans present, notable or unknown, outward bound toward the ends of the earth, or returning therefrom. Missionaries to the Far East, travelers to Russia, art and music connoiseurs or amateurs making the round of the art shrines of Europe, seekers after pleasure and seekers after health, all find their way here sooner or later. Thus the mission of the American Church is notable and its opportunities great. No city of this size lacks temptations of the most various sort which appeal to young people. The difference between the American and German ideal of life is so great and the liability to adopt, without thoroughly understanding, types of thought and habits of conduct most disastrous in their consequences, confronts the young man or woman who comes here for study. It is the mission of the American Church to afford a religious as well as social environment which shall be a safeguard for all such, and nobly has it accomplished this purpose. It seeks to save our countrymen from the mistaken notion that the way to acquire the language and understand the characteristics of the Germans is to avoid all contact with Americans. As one of these young men said to me only two days ago, "I propose to cut all association with anybody who knows English. I shall live with the Germans, talk with them, drink beer with them and so learn to understand them." It is doubtful whether such a process will bring any closer acquaintance with the real life of the best element of this nation, while on the other hand it will certainly lead to other results of a strikingly different character. We all expect to live in German families and speak the German speech while here, but the help to be derived from occasional association with our own people, and especially in religious services, is incalculable, and many who have tried the other experiment have regretted deeply their mistake.

The character of the services of the American Church is similar to those at home, but is adjusted to the conditions in which the church finds itself. The morning serviee is held in the auditorium of the "Christlicher Verein Junger Maenner" (the German Y. M. C. A.), and the session of the Y. P. S. C. E. is held at 4:30 P. M. in a smaller room in the same building. The Sunday-school is held at a private residence on Kliest strasse, several miles distant and nearer the center of the resident membership, while the evening service, which consists of a short devotional session followed by an address by the pastor, is held at his home on Kurfuersten str. It will thus he seen that the services of the church are spread over a considerable territory, and not infrequently the personnel of the different gatherings is completely changed. In addition a weekly prayer-meeting is held on Wednesday at the Y. M. C. A. at 3:30 P. M. The communion service occurs quarterly and special seasons like Thanksgiving, Christmas and Easter are observed in a special way. During the Week of Prayer delightful meetings were held daily. The evening addresses of the pastor are generally devoted to the religious history of Europe, grouped about such personalities as Gustavus Adolphus, William the Silent, or Martin Luther, and usually at least twice during the year the pastor conducts a company through the Luther country, for an inspection of the places in which the great reformer lived and wrought.

As before hinted, the church is in the midst of the enterprise of securing for itself a permanent home. A lot has already been purchased in a most favorable location and the $35,000 necessary for its purchase has been raised and paid. The church building is to cost about $60,000 and about half of this sum is already in hand, while a considerable amount in addition is promised. Five leading American architects have furnished drawings from which a choice is to be made and ground for the building will be broken in the spring. This result is due to the untiring energy of Dr. Dickie, who has been twice to America already in quest for funds for the enterprise. The resources of the Americans in the city are not great, and most of the money must come from the states wherever interest can be aroused. Dr. Dickie proposes to organize a permanent fund for the support of the church, to be placed in the hands of a representative committee of New York clergymen. This will place the church here upon the same independent basis as that enjoyed by the American Church in Paris, whose expenses are almost entirely defrayed by the proceeds of the money raised under the auspices of the American Christian Union.

It remains only to be said that the relation of the American representatives, both of the Embassy and the Consulate, is cordial and helpful, Hon. Andrew D. White and the other members of the legation are often seen at the services. Dr. Dickie is the source of almost limitless information regarding everything of interest in the city, and is untiring in his efforts to assist all who seek his help, and thus proves his fitness for the important position which he holds in this center of thought and influence so much sought by Americans.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

Berlin, Jan. 14.

AUSTRIA (Croatia).

The Croats, being a branch of the Slavonic race, once wore a costume very similar to that now worn by the Russian peasant. Through mixing with the Magyars, Servians and Italians their dress has now become a combination of several national costumes.

The illustration on another page, from the Singer series, shows a typical man of Croatia, tall, fair and strongly built. He wears the uniform of an Austrian soldier, for the courage of the Croats is constantly exercised in repelling the invasions of the Turks.

The rich braiding and jaunty way of wearing the coat are characteristic of the Magyars; decorating the hat was very common among the Slavonic Croats, who liked best to wear wild flowers or the plumes of the heron.

The Croatian women devote much of their time to embroidery, and our illustration shows such a woman wearing a gown covered with a heavily embroidered design of lotus flowers. This is a sample of her work with a Singer sewing machine, which is not only the best in the world for family sewing of the usual kinds, but also excels in embroidery and art needlework.

New York Letter.

Dr. James Butchart, who for seven years labored as one of our medical missionaries in China, but is now at home on a furlough, occupied the pulpit of the 169th St. Church, Lord's day morning the 5th, giving us an interesting account of Chinese conditions. He is hopeful that the gospel will ultimately redeem China, whose position among the nations of the Orient is strategic. If China is turned to the Lord it will not be a difficult matter to win the contiguous nations to Christ.

Some of our people seem to think it is a great matter to raise $150,000 for our Foreign Missionary work this year, but when we remember this will average only fifteen cents per member it is miserably small. We ought to give a million dollars for this work, because we can and its our duty to do so. But it will be a long step in advnace if only every church will make an offering for missions this year. It is our duty to send the gospel to the whole creation; it's a great privilege also. Let us come before the Lord on the first Sunday in March with a liberal offering. Let every member of every church have fellowship in this glorious work.

Our new work to be opened up soon in Cuba and Africa ought to encourage us anew and cause increased liberality in giving to Foreign Missions. These forces ought to be multiplied many times over in both fields and enlarge it at every other point and along all lines. This much-needed forward movement depends upon upon the offerings made by the churches.

Dr. W. S. Crowe, a Unitarian minister of this city, said in a recent sermon that he is convinced that a large majority of the people are really in sympathy with the church, though a small percentage of the people of the United States attend services. He thinks the reason a large proportion of the absentees are away is because of the mistake of thinking they are not needed at the services. The "strictly intellectual class" is absent because it repudiates one-half of human nature—that which is learned through the heart. The pleasure-seeker is not at church because he is looking for amusement. The church cannot reach these classes because practically they are opposed to its work. And the very poor in the slums constitute one of the gravest problems that confronts the church. These people, however, are no more alienated from the church from education, morality and home life, and all that is excellent. Dr. Crowe thinks the church can do nothing better than to stand for the ideal in morality, education, home life and spirituality. It may be necessary for practical men to make compromises, but these are never good. He says: "Christ was an idealist in all his exhortations, and it is the duty of the church to continue his work."

A novel experiment, known as the "George Junior Republic," founded at Freeville, Tompkins Co., N. Y., for the special benefit of poor and friendless boys and girls, has developed into an institution worthy of study. The plan of the Junior Republic is modeled as nearly as possible upon the Constitution of the United States, while the conditions, social, civic and economic, are the same. The children govern themselves, and have to rely upon their own efforts for a livelihood. The Liliputian commonwealth has its legislature and periodical elections, its courts of justice, its police force, and it has a bank and hotels, all operated by the members of the republic. It has its own system of money. In fact, everything is conducted upon the identical plan which rules life at large. It is a miniature republic founded upon the plan of the United States Government. It is designed to teach the homeless waifs to obey law, to inculcate the principle of self-reliance and demonstrate the fact that nothing is obtained without labor. An effort is being made now to endow this Liliputian Republic and carry on its good work all the year instead of a few months only.

We expect to build a chapel on the Southern Boulevard this spring to accommodate our branch Sunday-school on the East Side of Bronx Borough. The attendance is so large that we cannot do the work properly; so we must have larger quarters. The 169th Street Church has leased a site for a term of five years and will put a plain, neat chapel on it. We hope to be in it by Easter. This we believe to be the best method of evangelizing New York and Eastern cities generally—through wise Sunday-school work.

Los Angeles Letter.

Another year has come and gone in our church work. Our churches have made their failures and achieved their successes, have learned their lessons and entered upon the making of another year's history. For the First Church, all things considered, 1898 has been our best year in my nine years of service for this grand church. Having had no special revival services during the year we have not had so many accessions as in some former years. We have raised more money than ever before for all lines of local and missionary work. We have had larger audiences in attendance upon our services than in any previous year. Our general conditions throughout the church were never so good. We thank God and push forward, and have heard Christ confessed two Lord's days in this year.

The time draws on apace for our March offering for Foreign Missions. The day set apart for this offering is verily at hand. There remains little time for preparation. Such as we have must be well utilized if we are to reach the $150,000 aimed at this Jubilee Year. The subject ought to occupy the preachers' attention two Sundays, at least, in February. Several missionary prayer-meetings ought to be held preceding the day for the offering. The pastors ought to write letters to each member of the congregation. This letter ought to contain a missionary envelope in which this offering ought to be made. A still better plan would be to make a personal canvass of the membership of the church for offerings for this great work. This would afford a splendid chance for personal work when needed. At no place does the general conscience of our brotherhood need arousing more than upon our duty to set apart a large proportion of our property to the preaching of the gospel in heathen lands. We too long have been asleep to the demands of God upon us at this point. There would be several advantages accruing to our churches from generous giving this year to Foreign Missions: (a) We should be doing our plain duty, and this in itself is a great blessing. The solemn work that Jesus Christ laid upon the church was to evangelize the world. Let us obey God here. (b) It would extend the spiritual horizon of many churches from a self-centered life to one that would comprehend the world-wide demands that God is making on our thought and money. (c) It would set in motion new tides of spiritual life that would result in the conversion of many at home as well as in foreign fields. (d) God would graciously smile upon our churches and lead them to a closer walk with himself. (e) Then a great blessing would accrue to our pastors who would be leaders in this great work.

Let us all see to it that this is truly the Jubilee Year in Foreign and Home Missions.

In thinking of our work for the jubilee I am reminded that little is being done among the young people that is worthy of a Jubilee Year. This is a fertile field in which there are few sowers and fewer harvesters. On account of the multitudinous demands of a large city pastorate, J. Z. Tyler has been compelled to give up his Endeavor superintendency and our societies in a national way are as a sheep without a shepherd. It seems to me self-evident that as never before we need a superintendent, and one, too, that could give all his time to this important work. Let it be a Year of Jubilee among the young people as well as among our missionary societies. This can be done by the employment and proper utilization of a Christian Endeavor superintendent. In casting about for such a man, one instinctively turns to J. Z. Tyler. His long experience in this line of work peculiarly qualifies him for such a position. That he is fitted for it and that the work would be congenial to him all must concede alike. That he could be financially supported in such a work I have no doubt. Let a public call be made for funds for their purpose under the direction of the American Christian Missionary Society.

Did this society but understand that there is such a demand and that it would add greatly to thier popularity to lead in such a movement, I have no doubt that they would most enthusiastically take the lead in it. Let the experiment be made. Nothing worse than failure could happen. A glorious success it seems to me would certainly be achieved. By doing this we should be giving our young people something of the recognition they so justly deserve. The hope of our churches rests upon the shoulders of the young. If they are properly trained it will require no herculean effort in the next generation to raise $100,000 for Home Missions in one year. Now is the time to give the model training. J. Z. Tyler has surely demonstrated his fitness to lead in such a work.

The Sana-Cera treatment for the cure of Catarrh, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Deafness and all diseases of the Head, Throat and Lungs.

MISS LILLIE FRUSH, Elwood, Ind., writes:—Three years ago I was a mere skeleton and thought to be a hopeless victim of Catarrhal Consumption. My entire system was saturated and diseased with the catarrhal poison. I belonged to a consumptive family and no one ever expected me to get well again; but I was placed in charge of Dr. M. Beaty who gave me his Sana-Cera treatment. Shortly, the coughing spells left me, my appetite returned, I grew stronger, increased in weight and after a 3 months' course was completely cured. I am now in perfect health and a stout hearty woman, as you will see by my photograph.

UNABLE TO SEE FROM ECZEMA

I suffered with Eczema of the worst kind, my face and neck down to my shoulders were one inflammation, was not able to see out of my eyes for quite a while, and was unable to sleep for weeks, on account of the severe pain, which nearly drove me insane. My face and neck were swollen and made me look hideous. Had three doctors at different times, and not one of them could relieve me of my pain, swelling, and blotches. I used three bottles of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, four boxes CUTICURA (ointment), three cakes of CUTICURA SOAP, and my friends and one of the doctors are surprised, and asked, "Who cured you?" and I tell them quickly, "CUTICURA REMEDIES." New and Pressing Demands.

The whole world has for a long time been open to the missionaries of the gospel, and we have been told over and again of the needs of the non-Christian peoples. But never as within the past year have events been so rapidly opening up new fields and revealing new responsibilities. There is no longer any unknown country. But the countries of the world are now known, not only to the geographer and the explorer; they have been opened up to civilization, and the Christian nations are being forced to deal with their populations. In the Philippines, in Africa and in China we are obliged to come into close and vital relations with peoples whose religion and ways of life do not fit in with the dominant forces of the new world into which they have been hurried. These are trying times for the weaker races. Not only do all of the old evils of heathenism continue to burden them; even the better elements of their old life are discredited and cast aside as they are brought in contact with Western civilization. Whether the churches desire it or not, civilization is being forced upon the heathen peoples, and the conservative elements of their old life and customs are being undermined.

With the civilization of Christendom her traders, sailors and soldiers will carry vices which will blight the lives of the weaker races. The fate of some of them may be that of the Tasmanians and, to some extent, the North American Indians. Their countries will be exploited, but they themselves will be exterminated, both because they adopt our vices and because they fail to catch the spirit of Western civilization, and so are crowded out to perish. Their only salvation will be found in Christianity. That alone can save them from our vices. That alone can give them a spirit of dignity and self-reliance that will enable them to join their forces with us in a higher life on this earth and inspire them with a hope for the life to come. Western civilization cannot save the heathen races. It will rather tend to degrade and even exterminate them, unless there is carried along with the more material elements that which is the real spirit which makes it worth something to us—the Spirit of Christ.

With the Chinese, when their great empire is opened up, the case may be different from that of the Africans and many of the island peoples. The Chinese are a sturdy race, prolific, capable of adapting itself to all climates and all conditions. Instead of being exterminated by our vices and fast civilzation, the Chinese, when we have waked them up and given them these, may exterminate us. Given our material civilization and an awakened national consciousness, inflamed by a spirit of aggression, and the Chinese could not only overrun Europe, but could flood our shores with a tide which no exclusion bill could stay. Instead of the wail which we have heard so long—"A million a month are dying in China without Christ"—there may come the shout of a triumphant host coming to reckon with us for our neglect. And if, on the other hand, China's national possibilities should be destroyed by Russia before she learns to use our civilization, the effect upon us would be little less disastrous. The only thing that can render China harmless, that can bring her into co-operation instead of conflict with us, that can forestall any possibilities of evil manipulation in the future, is the gospel of Christ. Not only the individual Chinaman, but the whole race, needs this above anything else.

The American Revised Bible.

I think our editor knew what he was talking about when he said, "This is the Bible many have been waiting for." I for one am included among the many, for this is indeed the Bible for which I have so long been anxiously waiting. It has always been a mystery to me how any one can prefer the Authorized Version to the Revised, but though it is beyond my comprehension it is nevertheless true. I have been told by a number their reason for not liking the Revised Version is because it is not so familiar. Perhaps not, but I have noticed as a rule that those who have so much to say about the familiarity of the Bible are the ones who know the least about the King James version and even still less of the Revised.

It is true the Revised Version is not as familiar as the Authorized; take, for instance, 1 Cor. 13:1: while the words "charity" and "tinkling cymbal" are more familiar, they are both wrong. For proof of this assertion it is only necessary to read the whole chapter, especially the third verse. Paul is not speaking of charity, but of love. As for the "tinkling cymbal," all I have to say is that those who have ever heard one knows that there is nothing tinkling about it.

It may be more familiar to read that Herod "sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem," instead of the "male" children only, but the latter is far more probable.

Luke 3:23 may also be very familiar to us all, but what are we to understand by it? How much the wiser are we after having read it?

Now, while I consider the Revised Version of 1881-1885 a great improvement on the Authorized, yet in my opinion it is not to be compared with the American Revised. Does any one ask why? My answer is, Read and study the appendix of the Revised. I am sure I cannot see why any one should object to modern spelling, or the use of such words as "know" and "knew" for "wot," "wist," etc.

These words may have been all right for 1611, but they certainly are not for 1898. But we all have our likes and dislikes and it is our privilege to have whatever version of the Bible we may prefer. As for myself I have a large type Self-Pronouncing International Teachers' Bible of both the Authorized and Revised Versions, the latter being in verse form which for some reasons I like much better, but they are not the American Revised and are therefore of no more use unless for comparison.

Now, dear brothers and sisters, let us remember the Bible is not only the "sword of the Spirit," but the New Testament is our creed, or perhaps I had better say an inspired commentary on our creed, so let us all see that we have the very best.

Finally, concerning my own spiritual welfare I will say, give me the Caristian Church, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and the American Revised Bible.

Willing to Testify. Mr. Joseph Holly of 173 W. 11th St., Chicago, Ill., relates the following remarkable cure of his wife: "Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer has cured my wife of a sickness of 16 years' standing. Four highly recommended physicians of this city had her under treatment, but each one of them said there was no hope for her recovery, as her heart and womb were too badly affected. I feared she would some day become an epileptic as her symptoms indicated this. Once or twice every month during these long 16 years, spells would seize her and she would fall to the floor, stiff and numb, as though dead, with her fists clinched. It was my good luck, however, to get hold of a paper called The Surprise. I read it carefully, and decided to order some of the Blood Vitalizer. After my wife had taken the remedy for about one month, those spells failed to come back, and now it is three years since she has had any attack and she is perfectly well. I think it is a most remarkable cure, one that can hardly be believed, yet hundreds of our friends and acquaintances can testify to the truth of my statement. We shall never be without this medicine in the house."

The foregoing is only additional evidence of what a boon Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is for suffering women. Its merits are undisputed in all diseases peculiar to the female sex. Thousands have gladly testified to its merits. Address all inquiries to Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 South Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The Relation of Christians to Politics.

We are told that religion and politics have nothing to do with each other and that preachers should say nothing about politics in the pulpit. We never read this in the Bible. What is politics? In its true sense, it is the science of government, that part of ethics which has to do with the government of a nation or state, the preservation of its safety, peace and prosperity, and the protection of its citizens in their rights, and with the preservation and improvement of their morals. In a bad sense it means dishonest management to secure the success of political measures. In this sense no honest man could have anything to do with it.

In this country voters are rulers as well as subjects. They rule by their ballots through political parties. Those elected to office are the servants or agents of the rulers to carry out their will.

There are two kinds of rulers in the world. One kind is ordained of God "for the punishment of evil-doers and for the praise of them that do well." They "are not a terror to good works, but to the evil." They "bear not the sword in vain, but are God's ministers to execute vengeance on them that do evil." These are God's rulers, and they are to rule in righteousness and should be sustained by all God's people. (See 2 Sam. 23:3, 4.) Then there are Satan's rulers, rulers who protect evil-doers, license them and become partners with them, rulers who "establish mischief by a law," who justify the wicked for a reward and and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him. Rulers who "make a covenant with death an agreement with hell," who take away their right from the poor of God's people; rulers who build their towns with blood and establish their cities with iniquity. These are the principalities (government, the powers, the rulers of the darkness of this world), against which Paul says we wrestle. God has instructed us as to our duty as rulers and subjects, and the idea that any Christian can fence off a part of his life and label it politics and thus escape responsibility to God is preposterous. The idea that within that sphere he can be in full accord with thieves and murderers and salconkeepers and all the lowest and vilest elements, that he can sustain our divorce and license laws and all manner of bribery and corruption and dishonesty and then say to the Almighty, "It's none of your business what I do here," and to the church, "You have no jurisdiction," and to the preacher, "You shall not reprove me for whot I do here because this is politics," is also preposterous. This idea is contrary to the Bible teaching, for it does not permit a man to do iniquity anywhere.

His course does not promote the presentation and improvement of morals, but is most demoralizing to the state and to the church. Such a man ought to be reproved and rebuked by the preacher and disciplined by the church. If he cannot be saved from his iniquity the church should withdraw its fellowship from him. God says to Christians, "All things whatsoever ye do in word or deed do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." A man's political action is included in that commandment.

Free Homes in Oregon.

No doubt many readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would like to know where there is some good vacant government land. I have traveled extensively over Oregon and have seen much good land opened to homesteaders. In the interior of the state is a beautiful plain surrounded by the grandest mountain scenery in the world, and in the plain are a dozen practically vacant townships of very fine farming land. The soil is a rich, sandy clay loam—not sand enough to cut up in the roads and not clay enough to be muddy when it rains. The roads are the best I have seen in traveling over eighteen states. The few farmers that are here raise from twenty to forty bushels of wheat per acre, also raise good crops of oats, barley, rye and corn Melons, potatoes and garden vegetables do fine.

There is not much rain, yet nothing has to be irrigated. The soil holds moisture wonderfully well. There is a growing settlement in the plain, and while preaching there last fall I ate fine peaches, plums, grapes, apples and melons that matured there nicely, and last year was the dryest year in the experience of the oldest settlers, some of whom have lived in the plain from twelve to fifteen years. Much of the land is perfectly level, other is rolling. There is a post office, daily mail, store, five schools in the settlement, and sawmill near by. The land is prairie and ready for the plow.

There are already twenty-five members of the Christian Church in the settlement and they would like to see the land settle up with Christians. The settlement is 100 miles from the nearest railroad town, but a railroad is now being built which will pass through the land described, and there will soon be a rush of homeseekers to these vacant lands.

Brethren desiring further information, write me, enclosing stamp, your address plainly.

The Ideal and the Real.

Judge Joel W. Tyler, of Cleveland, Ohio, was a prominent citizen of Northern Ohio and an able man. In his boyhood he was a schoolmate of Robert G. Ingersoll, the notorious 19th century agnostic. Several years ago Col. Ingersoll sent Judge Tyler a bottle of fine old whisky and with the gift a letter. Judge Tyler, not to be outdone sent Col. Ingersoll a bottle of whiskey accompanied also by a letter. These letters have been preserved in circular form and recently furnished by my friend, Charles T. Inman, of Akron, Ohio, for publication.

The following is Col. Ingersoll's letter, which represents the "Ideal:"

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I send you some of the most wonderful whisky that ever drove the skeleton from a feast or painted landscapes in the brain of man. It is the mingled souls of wheat and corn. In it you will find the sunshine and shadow that chased each other over the billowy fields, the breath of June, the carol of the lark, the dews of night, the wealth of summer and autumn's rich content, all golden with imprisoned light. Drink it and you will hear the voices of men and maidens singing the "Harvest Home," mingled with the laughter of children. Drink it and you will feel within your blood the starlit dawns, the dreamy, tawny dusks of many perfect days. For 40 years this liquid joy has been within the happy staves of oak, longing to touch the lips of men.

R. G. INGERSOLL.

Judge Tyler's reply is as follows, and represents the "Real:"

MY DEAR OLD PAL:—I send you some of the most wonderful whsky that ever drove harmony from a feast, or painted shades of rats and reptiles in the brain of man. It is the latent demon let loose from wheat and corn. In it you will find the moonshine and shadow in which you staggered home over the billowy road. The breath of the basilisk, the croaking of the raven, the duce of night, the rags of paupers and home's rich content, all withered and destroyed. Drink it and you will hear the wailing of wives and children mingled with the moaning of fathers and mothers, lamenting the doom of drunkards. Drink it and you will feel within your soul the dreamy, tawny dusks of many a wretched spree. Drink it and you will feel within your blood the seething venom of an incarnate fiend. For 40 days and nights this liquid woe has been within the staves of oak, longing to scorch the lips and craze the brain of man.

It is not difficult to see on which side lies the truth so far as the effects of "the mingled souls of wheat and corn" are concerned.

Notes and News.

Further correspondence for the pulpit at Everett, Wash., is not needed.

Our church never had a more joyous and helpful series of meetings than we had yesterday, led by Brother and Sister Gordon. They had great congregations and captured all hearts. The people lingered nearly an hour after the evening services to shake hands and to talk about the work.

Jacksonville, Ill. G. L. SNIVLEY.

Notwithstanding the many adverse circumstances through which the First Church, Lincoln, Neb., has passed, it is now showing a strong tendency toward renewed life. Thos. J. Thompson became its pastor Jan. 1st, 1899, and reports larger audiences, frequent additions and increasing activities. Lincoln is a strategic point. There is the Nebraska State University with its two thousand students from all parts of the world, and there also is our own Cotner and other educational institutions. There is also the Central Christian Church, with a membership of about 75. With the revival of business it is expected that our churches there will become strong, active churches and a power for good. Any person knowing of Disciples of Christ locating in Lincoln, Neb., are requested to send their names to Thos. J. Thompson, 2475, 25th, St.

The Central Christian Church, Uniontown, Pa., was organized in the public school building, Jan. 26, 1890, with 26 charter members. The same year they built the present church house at a cost of about $15,000. In 1892 the Mission Church at Hopwood was organized and a Mission Chapel erected costing $1,800. The New Salem work was begun in 1894 and a neat brick church was dedicated Jan. 1, 1897. The church bought a lot and built a parsonage last year at a cost of $2,000. During this time the church has had three pastors: J. C. B. Stivers served from Jan. 26, 1890, to Sept. 30, 1893; C. H. Plattenburg from Oct. 30, 1893, to Feb. 1896; W. J. Cocke, June 1896 to June 1898, when C. H. Plattenburg was again called. The following evangelists have held revival meetings there: C. H. Phillips, Earle Wilfley, Joseph Craig, Edward Bagby, W. H. Book. The largest of these meetings were the ones held by Earle Wilfley, resulting in 150 additions and W. H. Book, 68. They now have church property valued at $25,000, a membership of 400, and a Sunday-school, including the missions, of 300. Last year $4,300 was raised for all purposes.

Wisconsin Notes.

Viroqua observed Wisconsin Day, Jan. 29. W. H. Rust assisted Pastor Nuzum in this service. Other churches that are late should yet observe this day with an offering. Send all offerings for state missions to E. M. Pease, treasurer, Richland Center, Wis.

Five brethren who had been Disciples in Norway met in Chippewa Falls, some eight years ago, to break bread. They continued to meet from house to house. Their little meeting increased in numbers, became an organized congregation, added a Sunday school, got too large to meet in a private house, built a church which I dedicated for them Jan. 22d as an American church. They now conduct two Sunday-schools; one in English, in which language most of their services will be conducted hereafter.

I recently visited Pardeeville, Platteville, Fennimore, Werley and Lynxville. At Lynxville I organized a Sunday-school, the first they have ever had. Chas. Newton is superintendent; F. R. Pease is secretary. At Platteville I am undertaking to relieve them of a burdensome debt which has well-nigh crushed the life out of the church. They have been without regular preaching for years. I feel confident of success in getting them out of debt. I organized a Ladies' Aid Society there. They pledged $200 on the church debt.

Great Hiram Jubilee Movement.

This great movement is moving forward in a most encouraging way and is gathering momentum with every day. Three things are noticeble in the letters that are being received:

First, the tone of cordial sympathy and the expessions of hearty approval for the movement.

Second, the general and widespread character that the movement is taking on; letters are coming in from all sections, North, South, East and West.

Third, the cordial endorsement the movement is receiving from our college men. All feel that the success of this movement means much for all our colleges.

Hundreds of names are being gathered. Let all lend a helping hand. Send in your name now. Address E. V. ZOLLARS.

PIANOS

EASY PAYMENTS.

It is easy to obtain a piano our way. Where no dealer sells them, we will send a piano for a small cash payment, balance in monthly payments. Three years' time to complete purchase if desired. We would like to explain our method. Will send piano guaranteeing satisfaction, or piano may be returned to us at our expense for railway freights both ways.

Our CATALOGUE, FREE for the asking, tells all about them. Special prices and full information, if you write.
